Seventeen Faculty Members Added to College Staff

Colorado College has appointed 17 new professors, lecturers and instructors, bringing faculty strength this year up to 112.

With an enrollment of 1,200, the new faculty places the teacher-student ratio at a fraction over 1-12.

Fourteen of the new faculty members (at the independent college of arts and sciences) already have earned their ware, has been an operational analyst at the Air Defense Command here for the past four years.

The new professor previously was supervisory mathematician at the Air Proving Ground Center in Florida, and mathematician at the Ballistic Research Laboratories on the Aberdeen Proving Ground in Maryland.

He holds Ph.D. and master of arts degrees from Yale University, and a bachelor of arts degree from Grinnell College. He is the author of numerous technical and scientific papers.

The professor holds a doctor's degree from Middlebury College, where he wrote his dissertation on "The Concepts in the Works of Friedrich Durrenmat."

James H. Anderson joined the faculty as assistant professor of zoology. He comes to Colorado College from the University of Wyoming where he has been teaching for the past three years. For the past two years he has been working toward a Ph.D. Gomez wrote his master's thesis on the "Agrarian Reform Policies of the Chinese Communists during 1949 and 1957." His doctoral dissertation concerns: "Discriminatory Legislation and Reapportionment in Colorado."

Named assistant professor of psychology was Dr. Gilbert R. Johns of Ohio University. A specialist in the area of probability learning, Professor Johns has been an assistant professor of psychology at Ohio University for the past five years. He previously taught psychology at Indiana University. A native of Oak Park, Ill., he received his Ph.D. from Indiana University where he wrote a doctoral dissertation on "Secondary Reinforcement in a Two-Choice Prediction Situation."

Dr. Fritz L. Kramer is the new director of the Colorado College Museum and associate professor of geology.

Committee Invites Student's Support For '62 Symposium

One of the major events of the current academic year will be the week-long Symposium during the first week of the second semester, January 14-19, and plans are already being laid to make this week a first-rate intellectual experience as well as great fun for all participants.

Toward the end of the last academic year, an informal Steering Committee, composed of interested faculty and students, was formed to make initial preparations. During the summer, a great deal of correspondence with possible participants in the Symposium was conducted, and at this point, choices of participants are about to be made.

A meeting has been called by Dr. Sondermann, who will be in charge of the Symposium, for 4 p. m. Tuesday, September 18th, in the WES Lounge of Rastall Center, to discuss the Symposium, make choices of participants, etc. All interested students and faculty are cordially invited and urged to attend—whether or not they were on last year's temporary committee. It is important to have wide representation, and members of the Freshman class are particularly urged to participate.

The general topic of the Symposium will deal with the position of the arts in mid-20th century America. It is hoped that we will have outstanding representatives of the various art forms and media on our campus, to talk and to perform, and that members of our own student body will participate actively in the events of the week.

Duplicating Service Set Up In Rastall

A duplicating service has been established in the new Activities Center to help meet the growing demand from student leaders and organizations.

Master sheets may be picked up any week-day afternoon in the Activities Center. Typing must be done by the individual organization.

If returned by 3:00 p. m. any week-day afternoon, copies will be duplicated and left to be picked up by no later than 4:00 p. m. that same day.

Paper in color is available and soon both mimeo and ditto service will be available. At present only the ditto machine is available. Cost is 15 cents for each master sheet used and 35 cents for each hundred sheets duplicated.

See Mrs. Gaddis in the Activities Center for details.

Kinnikkinn Applications

Colorado College's literary magazine "Kinnikkinn" is receiving applications for the offices of Editor, Co-Editor and Business Manager. The chairman of Writer's Workshop are also open. Interested students turn in applications to Rastall desk. See related article on page three.

"BUT DR. BEIDLEMAN," moans freshman Kathie Bevin, "that makes 30 hours!"

Smartest Class Accepted; Admission Requirements Rise

Every fall the office of admissions of Colorado College announces enthusiastically that "The Class of 19— is potentially the best class the school has ever known." This fall is not radically different except for the fact that they can now support the statement statistically.

Since there is a growing number of applicants to Colorado College, the necessity for careful selection is becoming more and more apparent. The measurement of the potential worth of a student can be ascertained by two methods. One is through test scores. This new freshman class, on the average, has Board scores thirty points higher than that of the previous class. Another indication of the potential worth of the CC freshman is that there are a great number of scholarship winners among the new students. For example eighteen out of the forty-one highly coveted Boettcher Scholarships are held by CC freshmen. Also there is a General Electric Scholarship as well as numerous smaller grants and loans.

The class includes 194 men and 177 women which makes it one of the largest classes in the history of Colorado College. The students come from thirty-seven states and fifteen foreign countries. One of the primary purposes of this diversity is to stress the individuality of the student. The process of selection is less concerned with the "well-rounded" student than in the creation of the well-rounded class. Diversity makes possible broader contacts and a greater opportunity for new experiences and relationships.

Last year, about twenty-five students gave time to their own form of admissions services. They volunteered a touring service for potential students who were visiting the campus and even planned "College Night" programs. After the final acceptances had been made, these students contacted the new freshmen and greeted them on a personal level. Added recognition should be given to Hank Rae. He was a student hired by the admissions office and who did much of the planning of freshman orientation week.

The class of 1966 has much to look forward to. There are many new changes which have occurred on campus this fall. One event is the deferment of "rush" week until January. This was done for several reasons. One involves the idea that the freshmen will be better able to adjust to their new environment and to "look around." Another is that it leaves time for personal assessments and evaluations of both the academic and social scenes. Contrary to the fears of some, the pace of social activity on the campus has not slackened despite deferred rush. Credits in this area go to Don Oden, head resident of Stocum Hall and Skip Meis, chairman of the Rastall Board, both of whom have had a big hand in organizing campus activities. In all, it should be a good year for freshmen and upperclassmen alike.

As a prospectus, the freshman class is potentially one of the best the school has ever known. They are entering at a time when Colorado College is at its best, physically, academically, financially and socially. The positive credits of this potential estimation of worth remains to be seen and has just begun to be proven.

Professor Helps With Discovery

A new discovery of a titanium mineral in gem topaz has been made in Western Africa with the help of a book written by Colorado College geology Professor, Richard M. Pearl.

Descriptions given to "How to Know Minerals and Rocks", by Professor Pearl helped to identify rutile enclosed in rolled pebbles of clear white topaz in the tin fields of Nigeria.

The find, confirmed by the Mines Department of the Federation of Nigeria was made and recognized by Mrs. Paul London, formerly of Denver. Mr. and Mrs. London are employed by radio station ELWA operated by the Sudan Interior Mission in the town of Jos, in the Bauchi district.

"Rutilated topaz has never been known before," Professor Pearl said. "The specimens have a soft surface glow like moonstones."

The first specimens were sent to Professor Pearl by registered airmail from the Kano airport.

The pebbles of topaz are so common as to be a nuisance to the miners. Columbite, a valuable niobium mineral, is also abundant in the plateau country. Diamonds have recently been found, and a diamond rush has just started, Mrs. London reported.

Professor Pearl, who joined the faculty here in 1946, is the author of 15 books on geology, prospecting, and rock collecting.

Dr. Alison Olson

Ph.D. degrees, or will receive them this year.

Coming to the 88-year-old college as a lecturer in economics and director of the new graduate center study is Dr. Donald C. Lelong.

The economist, who earned his Ph.D. and M.S. degrees at Syracuse University and his bachelor's degree at Middlebury College, has been assistant director of the Ford Foundation program in Pakistan.

From 1958 to 1960, Dr. Lelong was assistant dean of the College of Business at Syracuse University. He previously was assistant professor of economics and statistics at the university.

The English department has three new instructors this year. They are Dr. Lawrence I. Berkove, Thomas K. Mauch, and Robert H. Adams.

Dr. Berkove came to Colorado College from DePaul University where he taught English for the past year. He previously taught at Skidmore College and the University of Pennsylvania. An authority in the field of American Literature, he holds a Ph.D. degree from the University of Pennsylvania. His doctoral dissertation deals with "Ambrose Bierce's Concern with Mind and Man."

Mauch, who is working toward a Ph.D. degree at the University of California at Los Angeles, is writing his dissertation on "The Role of Proverbial Material in Early Tudor Literature." Mauch, who holds master of arts and bachelor of arts degrees from U.C.L.A., taught English for four years at the university prior to joining the faculty at Colorado College.

Adams has been doing graduate work in English at the University of Southern California. He holds a bachelor of arts degree summa cum laude from the University of Redlands in California. A native of Orange, New Jersey, he previously attended the University of Colorado.

Dr. Austin R. Brown Jr., was appointed adjunct professor of mathematics to teach a course to be known as Introduction to Digital Computing. Dr. Brown, who taught mathematics at Drury College and the University of Dela-

LET'S STOP THIS NONSENSE!

This year, the CC board system has a new innovation—the meal ticket. Theoretically, the reason for this bothersome requirement of showing a ticket at meals is to reduce the possibility of persons eating meals not paid for.

However, it has become obvious that this will not be thwarted unless more careful checking is done. As an experienced several colleagues and I have flashed blank cards, empty holders, cards with a little green ink smeared on them, switched cards, shown the backs only and pushed by without showing anything at all. Not once have we been questioned (with the exception of being asked to show a card—but again, any card at all will suffice).

It seems then, that persons so inclined could slip by, merely by borrowing (names are never checked), manufacturing, or even going to Block Sporting Goods Company (119 North Tejon, for any student so inclined) and obtaining a plastic holder for a fishing license. In my experience this alone works quite well, if merely fished.

This whole system should be abandoned. First, at present it is only a farce, doing no good and causing inconvenience to all concerned; and second, if proper checking was done, lunch lines, etc., would be so slowed down that students would have no choice: starve or stand in line for half an hour or so.

Let's stop this nonsense.

A SHORT INTRODUCTION . . .

It is appropriate in this first edition of the Tiger for 1962-63 to clarify the ways CC's students may use this news medium.

Other than the obvious approach of merely reading the Tiger on Friday morning and then condemning it to the circular file, CC students may express their ideas in letters to the editor and suggestions to the same, and report their activities by turning in information to be printed.

The Tiger will accept letters for publication (at the editor's discretion) if they conform to the following rules:

They must be less than 300 words in length.

They must be signed. The Tiger will accept no anonymous contributions for publication.

They must be submitted by 4 p.m. on the Monday preceding publication.

Any CC student may approach members of the Tiger staff with suggestions, whether they be for editorial content, general make-up, leads on stories, or comments on other flaws. The staff will, in fact, appreciate these comments; for progressively better issues of The Tiger will occur only by correction of mistakes in past issues. Often the members of a paper staff are too close to the operation to view it with any perspective. Your suggestions can give the staff that perspective.

Finally, there will come a time when some item of news is missed. This will happen even though the Tiger reporting staff may cover the campus well. If any person or group wishes to turn in a news item rather than trust in its inevitable appearance, they may do so. The Tiger merely requests that the item be submitted by deadline time (4 p.m. Mondays), that the information is legible and that the person submitting it identifies himself (for purposes of confirming data).

All material may be submitted to the Tiger Box at the Rastall Center Desk. CEP.

Sermon Title: Little Things Sometimes Matter

Worship Leader: Max Power (President of ASCC)

Preacher: Kenneth W. F. Burton

The topic for the sermon this coming Sunday is taken from an incident in the Old Testament in the first book of Kings. It concerns a Prophet sent by God from Judah into the dangerous schismatic territory of Israel. He has been commanded to preach the judgment of God upon the false King and false worship. This he does magnificently and then proceeds to disobey his original orders in a very little matter and thereby brings his mission to a disastrous and tragic end. The preacher feels that this story has considerable relevance to our life upon this compass and that amid all the exciting and important things that happen to us all here that some of the humdrum, tedious and routine personal relationships also have their importance.

This service will be broadcast over the College radio KRCC.

Social Activities To Be Registered

All Social Events are to be registered in the office of the Director of Student Activities.

In accordance with action taken by the ASCC Social Coordinating Committee last spring, all social events are to be registered in the new Activities Center with the Director of Student Activities.

An up-to-the-minute social calendar can be found in the Activities Center and information and materials are available to assist students in the planning of programs of all kinds.

Registration of events should take place at least two weeks prior to the event and chairpersons indicated at the time of registration.

From the Chair

By MAX POWER — President ASCC

The Colorado College Tigers, undermanned, underweight, "underpaid" and underdogs, downed St. Mary's 14-7 last Saturday in what was termed by many upperclassmen the most exciting CC football tilt in several years. The game, hard fought and clean, showed a great deal of spirit on the part of the Tigers—a great deal of "guts ball."

The fact that about 800 fans, mostly CC students, braved miserable weather throughout the game and cheered themselves hoarse stands as one testament that there is still a place on our campus for inter-collegiate football. The fact that, compared to previous years, many more Tiger players, including some freshmen, were on the field because they like to play ball, with no financial aid given them, again attests to the hardness of football at Colorado College.

Very few optimists are predicting a winning season for the Tigers, but then very few predicted a win last Saturday. The important thing is this: The Tigers proved Saturday that football is not dead or dying at Colorado College. They showed that, even beset by a great many problems in perhaps the most difficult period of transition the team will face in the next several years, they can play exciting, winning football.

The money provided by ASCC and the administration to make possible Saturday's home game, originally not on the Tigers' schedule, was indeed well spent. The boost in morale which the win over St. Mary's gave both the team and the student body alone justify the cost.

The team deserves our continued support, not only because of the spirit and drive they displayed Saturday, but also because they demonstrated that they can play very fast, enjoyable football from the spectators point of view.

ASCC Establishes Committee For Development Campaign

The ASCC Executive Council Monday established a special committee which will involve students in the Colorado College development campaign. ASCC President Max Power appointed Commissioner Ben Lewis to head the committee after Lewis had moved that such a committee be established.

Lewis explained that the committee will work to inform students of the recent Ford Foundation Challenge Grant made to the college, and to make use of student help in raising money to match the Ford funds and to assist in the completion of the college's Sports complex.

"They still need $350,000 for the pool and ice rink," Lewis told the council.

Lewis was given discretion to select the committee's members.

In other ASCC action, Election Committee Chairman Chuck White reported that a Freshman Class meeting will be held Sept. 25 for the purpose of nominating candidates for class commissioners. White said that a primary election will be necessary if more than 10 candidates are named at the meeting.

Professor Paul Bechtel was unanimously accepted as the ASCC faculty advisor for the coming year.

Committee chairmen appointed by Power Monday include: Jo Heller, sophomore commissioner, Student Policy; Polly Thompson, sophomore commissioner, Constitution; Dave Holdorf, junior commissioner, Academic; and Al Loosli, junior commissioner, Athletics.

They join White, Ed DeGeorge, junior commissioner and Traffic Committee chairman; Pat Chapman, senior commissioner and Enthusiasm chairman; Feigi Benham, senior commissioner and Social Committee chairman; Lewis; Steve Pink, treasurer and Finance chairman; Triny Kidner, secretary and Communications chairman; and Steve Sabom, vice-president and chairman of the Public Co-ordinating Committee.

Colonel Mayer to Speak On Communist Control At International Center

Lt. Col. William E. Mayer will give an address entitled "Communist Control of the Individual: The Moral Imperatives" at 8:00 p.m. on September 16, 1962, at the International Center of the Broadmoor Hotel.

Dr. Mayer's discussion will center around those techniques mainly psychological ones, which have been developed over the years by communist states for the purpose of controlling human beings. Success, not merely in taking over a huge number of people, but most importantly in keeping those people under control despite differing social, economic, political, racial and ethnic backgrounds, requires careful examination of the methods evolved.

Colonel Mayer's address will be preceded by music of the A Defense Command Chorus. This address is open to the public, and there will be no admission charge.

Broadened Artistic Scope Aim of Literary Magazine

It is becoming evident that creativity and originality on the Colorado College campus are not being accorded adequate stimulus and opportunity for expression. This is especially true of the campus publications. At the present time the Tiger is attempting to help fill part of this void, but there is a large area of untapped literary talent which has no medium of expression other than the Kinnikinnik, the campus literary magazine. This publication has been accused in the past of confining itself to a limited scope of creative writing, and has admittedly failed to draw all, or even a significant portion, of the people interested in writing to contribute to its pages.

With the above in mind, the Publications Board would like to see a new dimension in the direction of broadening the scope of literary publications and widening campus interest in them. This can be done in two ways, one of which is a revision of the Kinnikinnik. This change would take the form of acceptance, on the part of the staff, of any type of writing showing artistic sensibility. This would mean that not only poems and short stories may be submitted, but that essays; literary, historical, sociological, etc., might also be part of the magazine. These would be judged on their probable interest to the reader and on the skill of the author. Art and photographs may of course be contributed, as in the past.

The second step in this direction, in connection with the changes in the Kinnikinnik, would take the form of an active Writers' Workshop. This workshop would plan, it is hoped, a week devoted to writing of all types later this fall. This would include seminars and discussions on newspaper writing, poetry, and prose and would be open to all interested students and faculty. Following this workshop, seminar groups would be set up on a regular basis to work on prose and poetry. Members of the faculty would conduct these workshops, and thus a continuing interest in, and place of expression for writing would be fostered. The new chairman would of course be encouraged to freely exercise his own ideas on the subject.

The Publications Board is extremely interested in these ideas, and feels that a great many students would be provided with an opportunity to work with their literary talents through the Writers' Workshop and the Kinnikinnik. Applications for the positions of Kinnikinnik Co-Editors, or of Editor and Business Manager, will be due Wednesday, September 19th. These applications may be picked up at, and returned to, the Rastall Desk. Previous experience is not necessary to apply, but interest and enthusiasm are. The position of Chairman, or Co-Chairmen, of the Writers' Workshop will also be due on this date, and applications can be picked up at Rastall Desk. Publications Board will then interview the applicants, who will be notified after the Board has made its decision. The editors of the Kinnikinnik do receive a stipend, and sit as members of the Publications Board.

Any questions should be referred to Publications Board in care of the ASCC box at Rastall Desk.

LECTURE

The Colorado College lecture series "American Revolutions" began on September 20. Dr. Louis Geiger, chairman of the history department will initiate the series with "Educational Revolution and American Democracy".

The lecture will be presented at 8:15 in Perkins Hall. There is no admission charge.

ALL-SCHOOL PICNIC

Applications are now being accepted for the chairmanship of the All-School Picnic. Application blanks may be obtained at the Rastall Center desk.

Alpha Lambda Delta

There is on this campus an honorary society entitled Alpha Lambda Delta. It is a fraternity for freshmen women but one with which the student body as a whole should be acquainted.

First organized in 1924 at the University of Illinois "to awaken in freshmen women a realization that each individual is solely responsible for her own achievements, which with earnest high endeavor she may build each year upon her freshman foundations," Alpha Lambda has become a national organization of 107 chapters and over 40,000 initiates.

The requirements for membership are stiff but not impossibly so. To be eligible for initiation a freshman girl must obtain at least a 3.5 grade point average by the end of her first semester or the end of her first year. Transfer students whose transferred credit does not exceed 15 semester or 30 quarterly hours are also eligible if these credit hours combined with the average of their first semester at Colorado College also averages at least a 3.5.

But averages in themselves are meaningless and are used only as a convenient standard. It is hoped that the eligible girl has furthered her knowledge and stimulated her intellect and not merely obtained a set of gold-plated grades. It is for this reason that the purpose of Alpha Lambda Delta as started in its constitution include the phrase "to promote intelligent living."

But this intelligent living should extend beyond the members of Alpha Lambda Delta to the entire student body. To this end, Alpha Lambda Delta sponsors various service projects, including a tutoring service, a monthly list posted on the bulletin board in Rastall and a weekly listing in the TIGER of cultural events both on and off campus in the Colorado Springs area.

It is hoped by the members of Alpha Lambda Delta that every CC student will take notice of these offerings and take advantage of those which are of interest in order to enrich the liberal education he has come here to obtain.

TRAFFIC REGULATION

Cars not registered for on-campus parking may be registered at the Rastall Center desk 'till Monday, September 17. After that time, a fine will be charged for late registration. Questions may be referred to Ed DeGeorge, chairman of ASCC Traffic Committee.

The annual closing date for the submission of the manuscripts by College Students is November 6th.

Teachers and Librarians are invited to submit poetry manuscripts for consideration for possible inclusion in the Annual Anthology of Teachers Poetry.

The closing date for the submission of manuscripts by the College Teachers and Librarians is January 1st.

In Praise of Polygamy

(Informal Remarks at Amherst College Chapel)
by Francis T. P. Plimpton, '22

Yesterday afternoon, driving up from New York, I was subjected to a most distressing experience—my wife read me the leading article in this month's Harper's. It is by a member of the class of 1927 by the name of Charles Woolsey Cole, the President of this College. It is entitled "American Youth Goes Monogamous."

The article portrays, gentlemen, the state of your mores, and, if I may say so, a most lamentable state it is. It appears that each of you fastens upon one unfortunate female, and, forsaking all others, brings her and her alone to each game, each cocktail party, each dance. Furthermore, the hapless creature has to dance with you, and you alone, during the long hours of slow and mournful peripatetics which you appear to believe constitute dancing. This drag process is I understand, known as "going steady"—a clear violation, not only of English grammar, but also of the most elementary principles of biology.

It is punctuated, according to your President, by a gruesome ceremony known as "pinning," in which the female bosom is decorated with mince-grocery jewelry to the accompaniment of solemn tribal chants. This of course leads, with the inevitability of Greek tragedy, to matrimony.

Now I hasten to say that I have nothing against matrimony. After all, in every man's life a certain number of mixed good wrong which in good conscience one really can't blame on the government; also, it is wonderful to have a wife to stand by you in all the troubles you wouldn't have got into if you hadn't married her.

But that isn't the point; the point is, what is to become of the spirit of scientific inquiry? What is to become of the controlled experiment, the controlled experiment which forms the very basis of the advancement of knowledge? Indeed, what is to become of the uncontrolled experiment? Where is natural selection, where is the survival of the fittest, where is the evolution of the race if you young males meekly submit to the inexorably monogamous possessiveness of the first female who deigns to notice you?

If I am not mistaken, Thomas Edison tried out some 178 different substances before he finally selected one as the best filament for the electric light bulb. Am I to understand, gentlemen, that his shining example means nothing to you, that you regard good procreation as less important than good illumination?

I am reminded of the episode of Reed Smoot, the first Senator to be elected from Utah. He was a Mormon, and several Senators protested to Boies Penrose, then the leader of the Senate, that he should not be allowed to take his seat. Penrose asked whether Smoot had more than one wife and, on being told that he had only one, looked out over the Senate and said, "Well, I don't see why we can't get along just as well with a polygamist who doesn't poly as we do with a lot of monogamists who don't mono!"

Now, gentlemen, since I am a lawyer you will not want me to neglect the legal aspects of your situation, and I am bound to say that they are serious. Suppose that one of you imports a young lady to these precincts, and let us further suppose that she is, in the fine old legal phrase, "clothed with the public interest." What happens? The public interest, whether due to clothes or lack of clothes, is intense, but what do you do? You decide that public interest you suppress all competition and tend to create a monopoly. Needless to say, gentlemen, this is an unlawful restraint of trade and a flagrant and willful violation of the Sherman Act (and perhaps of the Mann Act), subjecting you to servitude that is penal as well as matrimonial and to triple damage suits at the hands of your aggrieved competitors.

Gentlemen, such a sad state of monotonous monogamy has not always prevailed in this fairest of colleges. In "the golden age of (my) college days" (deathless phrase), a man who brought the same girl to every dance was rightfully regarded as a man without resources, without imagination, without 'elan vital. It was a matter of pride with us to provide ourselves and our friends and admirers with the spice of variety—and the more variety and, may I say, the more spice, the more the admirers. For one dance, a charmer from Smith; for the next, a lithe damsel from Mt. Holyoke; for the next, a lissome lass from Poughkeepsie; and, glorious climax, a debutante of glow and glamour from the ornolu ballroom of the now defunct Ritz Carlton.

And, gentlemen, we did not shrink from fair competition, the life of trade. The American spirit of free enterprise had free play, and play it did. The lordly stag, now alas almost extinct, was then the monarch of all he surveyed, as he enjoyed what should be the intalienable rights of every young American male, the rights of life, liberty, and the happiness of pursuit.

Yes, those were great days, and I commend to you, gentlemen, the lessons of that glorious past. Let not these honored traditions fade! Undergraduates of the World, arise—you have nothing to lose but your silk and nylon chains!

First All-School Dance Held In Rastall Center

Last Saturday night Rastall Center sponsored the first all-school dance in our dining room. Particularly intended to acquaint freshmen with each other and the rest of the school, the dance was quite successful.

Under the direction of Bob Edmiston of the Special Events Committee, the Blue Moon dance was our first of the year. Let's see everybody at the next one!

Foreign Student From Laos Is Class Project for '65

The class of 1965 would like to introduce to the members of the Colorado College community Valounna Chounramany. Va (pronounced "wah") is a 22-year-old freshman from Vientiane, the capital of Laos, and is here at CC under the auspices of the current sophomore class, the administration, the Institute of International Education, and the United States government. Actually, he is the project of the Class of 1965.

Last spring, the Projects Committee presented to the Class of '65 several uses for their funds. By vote of those present, it was decided to earn money to bring a foreign student to CC. After many letters to embassies and organizations such as The Institute of International Education, which places foreign students in U.S. schools, and after a gallant battle against all varieties of complications, the class finally succeeded in its endeavor. Thus it is that we are proud to introduce Mr. Chounramany. His tuition and travelling expenses are being paid by a government grant, but his room and board comes from the dues of the Class of '65, cookie and pizza sales, the slave auction, and donations from Slocum Hall and Tigerettes.

Va is one of two Laotian students currently studying in the United States on government grants. His education, which enabled him to pass the proper exams, includes two years of self-taught English and six years of French. (He also speaks Laos, Vietnamese, and Thai.) Unfortunately, the jungle warfare now being waged in his country has delayed his education three years. He comes to us from a high school in Syracuse, New York, where he studied last year.

Va has come to Colorado College as a political science major and plans to go into the diplomatic service of his country, a constitutional monarchy, as ambassador to any English speaking country. Among his hopes for Laos are wide-spread education and peaceful settlement of the current government split.

When asked how the U.S. could best aid Laos, Va answered that "The Ugly American is very true" and that money itself is of little use. Instead, we should send Peace Corps volunteers, especially teachers, bring more Laotian students to study in the U.S. and build schools and hospitals, which are sorely needed. Va praised highly the work of such men as the late Dr. Tom Dooley, "the best man in Laos."

Valounna described Laos as a very mountainous country about twice the size of New York State with nearly 2½ million inhabitants. Most of the Laotians are hill people; the capital, Vientiane, has a population of only 100,000, many of whom are refugees fleeing the hill fighting. Their religion is Buddhism. In the main, they are apathetic about Communism and wish only to be left alone.

Before coming to America, Va was afraid that he would be discriminated against, for much is made in Laos and other countries of the world about our segregation problem. Once here he found everyone very friendly and eager to help, but when he returned to Laos last summer, he was unable to make his people believe this.

Nevertheless, the Laotian people are becoming more and more Westernized, both in dress and custom. For instance, they watch movies such as Spartacus and Where the Boys Are, drink Coke and Pepsi, and buy the records of Pat Boone, Johnny Mathis, and the Kingston Trio. "The Twist is everywhere!" he exclaimed and continues this Western custom in spite of severe sciatica acquired in an all-night session in Vientiane.

Va comes from a family of six, including one brother, a doctor educated in Paris, and four sisters. His father is the king's advisor and one of the top ten men in Laos.

The IRC will hold its first meeting on Thursday, September 20th, at 4:00 p. m., in Room 209, Hall Center. The purpose of the meeting is to get the organization set up for programs during the year. A President, Secretary, Treasurer, and Program Chairman are elected, and a Program Committee will set to work to plan worthwhile speakers and events for the coming year.

The IRC is purely a program organization. Membership in it is open to any student interested in reading talks, discussions, movies, etc., on current events in the field of foreign policy. All interested students are urged to attend the initial organizational meeting and give the Club your views on desired programs for the year.

LETTERS to the EDITOR

Dear CC:

The incredible number of bobbing beanie sports by the defiant class of 1966 brought forth the startling reality that another college year at CC had begun. After a week of freshman orientation and the puzzling question as to who was hazing who, CC's atmosphere, her spirit and her traditions, were reaffirmed as the freshmen became an integral part of our college community. Colorado College takes pride in the principle that every opportunity is presented for the full personal development and growth of each individual. Every student activity is designed not to hinder but to promote a learning process. It is specifically felt that the Colorado College Honor System plays a vital role in the individual's intellectual development in a progressive academic environment. The Honor System places responsibility upon the individual and his co-operation with his fellow students in promoting and continuing a time-honored tradition. It is each student's obligation to come to a full understanding of the system under which he lives. However, any system that does not allow for questions and suggestions will serve to curtail this progressive environment. The students elected by you to serve on the Honor Council are at all times available to answer questions and to entertain constructive suggestions. With the enthusiasm and spirit shown this past week, let us as students continue to work together in all facets of our college life. We are looking forward to a fulfilled, profitable year.

SKI CLUB
Attention Skiers! Now is your opportunity to help organize a college ski club. For all interested there will be a meeting on Monday, September 17, at 4:30 p. m. in the Berg Hell room of Rastall Center.

Dear CC Student,

The City of Colorado Springs has asked the Colorado College student body to please use the cross-walks on Cascade Avenue. The reason for this is to insure the safety of our students and also to help with the city traffic problem. Both the city and the college would appreciate YOUR help.

Thank You,

CC Tennis Team Has Bright Future

Last Friday, in their first match of a new fall tennis program, the CC racketmen lost to the Air Academy team 8 matches to 1. Team "depth" is better than ever before; our only loss from last year's league-dominating squad is Rusty Bastedo who played in number two position. Furthermore, the Freshman team is excellent. Bill Yost of Littleton, Colorado should more than fill Bastedo's shoes, while Bob Bohac of Chicago, and Duncan MacNoughton of Honolulu will probably play ahead of returning fourth man Alan Anisgard. Last year's number three man, Jim Helberger, injured his back this summer, but should be in playing shape by spring.

In addition to the new strength gained this year, the acquisition of a net will allow practice in the gym during the winter months, and the new courts (to be located on top of the ice rink) will greatly improve the power of the CC team.

The results of the Air Academy match:

1. Russ Sperry def. John Doe 6-0, 6-0
2. Bill Yost def. Bill Smith 6-7, 6-2, 10-8
3. Bob Bohac def. John Smith 6-4, 6-3
4. Alan Anisgard lost to Bill Doe 3-6, 5-7
5. Bob Baker lost to Cerver Sears 6-6, 3-6
6. Bob Pittaway def. Mike Harris 6-4, 6-4

Double

1. Sperry-Yost def. Doe-Doe 10-8, 6-1
2. Bohac-Anisgard def. Smith-Smith 3-6, 8-6, 6-3
3. Pittaway-Baker lost to Sears-Harris 4-6, 6-6

Practical Politics Center Will Be Opened in Coburn

A Center for Practical Politics, which will provide space and support for Young Republican, Young Democratic and bi-partisan political activity on the Colorado College Campus, will be opened in Coburn Hall Sept. 23.

The announcement of the center was made this week by Bill Hunter, chairman of the temporary board of directors for the Center for Practical Politics.

The board of directors, in a memo to the college administration, set forth the following objectives:

"... to provide a forum to collect, analyze, discuss, and disseminate information concerning political affairs. By the establishment of this center we hope to encourage participation in practical politics by Colorado College students.

"We would hope to give ourselves prestige through campus and academic activities and if successful this center could become established" on a continuing basis.

Specific activities proposed for the center include a registration drive for all CC students who are eligible to vote in November's general election; assistance to students seeking to vote by absentee ballot; work with local party organizations and party headquarters during the coming campaign; work with candidates for public office; sponsorship of speeches, discussions and debates by officeholders, candidates and students; and the provision of information and funds to those seeking to learn more about practical politics.

The Center for Practical Politics succeeds the Citizenship Club on the Colorado College campus. The Center will receive funds from the Rocky Mountain Center for Education in Politics. It will also administer the RMCEP programs, including summer internship with political parties and the annual Legislative Seminar, on the Colorado College campus.

Members of the acting board of directors for the Center for Practical Politics include Hunter, Jean Torcom and Max Power, all members of the young Republicans, and Harris Sherman, John Lewis and Nan Burroughs, representing the Young Democrats. Faculty advisor for the group is Dr. Glenn E. Brooks, assistant professor of political science.

Opening of the Center's Coburn facilities is tentatively scheduled for Sept. 23, Hunter said. A program of major political interest is expected to take place at the opening.

Freshman-Sophomore Fight is Tomorrow

Horses I Have Known, Or Saddle Soap is for Shoes

By Dave Clapp

My aversion to horses began when, at the tender age of three, I was up-staged by a Shetland pony. Its owner, a vagabond photographer, convinced my mother a photo of me astride the shaggy beast would be "just darling." But friend horse and I just didn't hit it off, and the end result more nearly approached the macabre. The photo (a modest $3.95—enough hay for three weeks) drew such comments as, "What's Davey doing with a bridle in his mouth?" and "Who is he holding on his back?" To be completely fair I must admit that more discerning friends were able (by counting legs) to make a distinction between the Shetland and me. "My, that's a cute smile on the pony!"

This was the first of a series of incidents which have brought about a genuine antipathy towards The Noble Steed: at seven I slipped from the lacquered saddle of a mahogany mustang and spent 37 carousel revolutions dodging the monster's bobbing hoofs; on a visit to an uncle's farm at twelve I narrowly escaped being maimed when Old Jack—a gentle-enough-looking hack—chose to sample the buttons on my shirt front. Then last year at the company picnic I wandered aimlessly into the horse-shoe pitching area and hit one of the missiles head-on. (It could have been disastrous—my interrupting the match—but I fell in a heap around the pole and chalked up five points for the steno pool.)

It was with this background, then, that I found myself approaching the stables of the Lazy K Ranch last Saturday. (The Lazy K belongs to old friends of the family. "Be sure you get out to see the Nelsons"—the last words I heard leaving home two weeks ago. Now here I was, wondering to what extremes social graces must be carried.)

"Ride much?" Gene Nelson asked in his old-fashioned-man-of-the-West way.

"Oh, so-so. You know," I replied, as nonchalant as possible.

"Well, you'll want to get on old Fireball for a real ride."

"Yeah," I quaked. Old Fireball? Fireball proved to be a stallion the size of an elephant. "Nice horsey," I stuttered, patting him on the neck.

"Whimeeese, bp-bp-bp!" he answered, and I detected more than a trace of scorn in his tone. I reached into my pocket for the apple I had brought to appease him. "Chonk! Snort!" Gone in one gulp was the shiny fruit—along with two keys, my lighter, and 42 cents, not to mention my class ring.

"Fleisty devil, ain't he?" Nelson observed. "Ready to mount up?" "Uh-yeah; okay." (Which side? which side?) I guessed wrong.

On the second attempt I found myself seated, none too steady, in the saddle—at least ten or twelve feet from Mother Earth. I closed my eyes. I think Nelson gave Fireball a swat across the rump, for I found myself hanging on for dear life as we shot across the prairie. "Whoa, boy, whoa!" I shouted over and over again in vain. It soon became apparent old Fireball wasn't ready to stop.

Through some quirk of Fate I finally managed to get settled in an upright position. By this time the saddle and I were meeting violently—every two or three seconds. Between landings I tried to rationalize: he's only a horse—bump!—and you're a man—bump!—he can't think, but you can—bump!—everybody rides—bump!—some people even like it—bump!—anything Caroline Kennedy can do—bump!—you can do—bump!—besides, it's as easy as falling off a—BANG!!

I guess Fireball didn't see the low limb; I sure didn't. Anyway, nothing is broken, just bruised. I was happy to dis-mount, ungraceful as it was. And Fireball got a real charge out of it, too: ever heard a real horse laugh?

I was reading Richard III last evening—standing, of course. Wonder if he would have swapped me the throne of England for Fireball? —Dave Clapp

Minute Editorial

"It is a gloomy moment in history. Not for many years—not in the lifetime of most men who read this paper—has there been so much grave and deep apprehension; never has the future seemed so incalculable as at this time—in France the political caldron seethes and bubbles with uncertainty; Russia hangs as usual, like a cloud, dark and silent upon the horizons of Europe; while all the energies, resources and influences of the British Empire are sorely tried.

"It is a solemn moment and no man can feel an indifference—which happily, no man pretends to feel—in the issue of events of our own troubles no man sees the end."

When was it written? October 10, 1857 in Harper's Weekly!

CC Eleven Victorious In Pre-Conference Game Hopes High For Football

The Colorado College Football team successfully opened its 1962 regional collegiate campaign with a decisive 14 to 0 pre-conference victory over St. Mary's of the Plains from Dodge City, Kansas. The Tiger eleven combined hard tackling and a fine passing attack with much desire to upset the favored Cavaliers.

Sophomore quarterback David "Cubby" Welch completed back Jim Holmes went over center to tally and added the extra point on a run to make it an even 7-7 ball game.

The fighting Black and Gold stormed back with 6:50 left in the second period for the final and winning touchdown. A 32 yard TD pass play from Cubby Welch to Bob Broyles climaxed a sixty-seven yard Tiger march. Steve Sabol again kicked the extra point to put CC on top 14 to 7.

The only second half scoring bid came in the fourth quarter after the Tigers recovered a Cavalier fumble on the St. Mary's eighteen yard line. Three plays later the drive was stopped when a Welch pass was intercepted.

Colorado College coach Jerry Carle displayed to the Tiger fans in the fourth period a new type spread offense. CC fans can expect to see much of this "Bully Offense," with its many options of running or passing, in the future.

The Bengals had 69 yards rushing and 93 yards passing while St. Mary's rolled 132 yards on the ground and added only 11 through the air. Tiger Vince Greco was top man rushing with 36 yards and Mike Minelli totaled 35 yards in pass receiving. Outstanding defensive men were sophomore Bud Mixon and junior end Mike Minelli. Much credit must also be given to the spirited Tiger line.

The CC eleven travel to Washburn University in Topeka, Kansas for another non-conference game Saturday, September 15. The next home game will be October 13 against Colorado State College.

of 16 pass attempts to net 87 yards and help offset the running game of St. Mary's.

The Tigers applied the pressure and never let up as they recovered four Cavalier fumbles and intercepted two passes in the hard fought contest. The CC defense did a great job of keeping St. Mary's off balance the entire game. Neither team was able to score in the first quarter but the game was tied 0-0 at the end of the first quarter.

Colorado College's first touchdown was set up late in the opening period when Bud Mixon intercepted a pass on the St. Mary's thirty yard line and advanced it the fifteen. With only twenty yards gone in the second quarter, Steve Sabol smashed through a guard from one yard out to the Tigers in front. After Sabol kicked the extra point, CC was on top 7-0.

St. Mary's wasted little time in scoring their TD when they recovered the kick-off and marched yards to pay dirt. The big play was a forty-five yard drive by the Cavalier's All-American halfback, Bobby Lisa. Lisa plays later. Lisa was in on the CC one yard line a vicious Tiger tackle. St. Mary's then scored when quarter-

In view of last Saturday's victory against St. Mary's, CC's gridiron future seems promising. The introduction of a new offense designed to divide and scatter the defensive team has added color and zest to offensive attack. This "Bully Offense" was named after the originator, Bully Vandegriff, a former coach here at Colorado College.

The success of the team's endeavors despite stomach flu, a new offense, and the customary first game difficulties, surprised and elated coaches and players alike. The passing offense, spearheaded by Cubby Welch, looked very good with the front line giving more than adequate protection for him to connect with some fine receiving. The greatest satisfaction, from the coaching staff's point of view, came from the performance of the defensive unit, which had six players who had had little, if any defensive experience in college ball.

Coach Carle makes no rash predictions on the future conference standings. A big and strong Adam's State appears to be the team to beat with Colorado School of Mines and Western State fielding promising squads in a conference that has not looked so strong in years. We shall stick with our C-men and wish them the best of luck in the coming season.

Frosh Confront Swinging FAC

Last Friday the Freshman class was introduced to one of CC's newest and swingiest traditions—the Friday Afternoon Club, better known as the FAC.

This new "tradition" was originated last year and has caught on as a great way to twist away one's troubles in noise and confusion. Under the direction of Special Events Chairman Jean Torcum, of the Rastall Center Board, the new FAC chairmen, Cindy Pate and Bob Bauer, have set us off to a good start.

If you liked the last FAC you'll like the next one even better, and if you missed the last one, well, don't let it happen again.

Seventeen New Faculty Members Added to CC Staff

Author of numerous articles in magazines and scholarly journals, Professor Kramer came to the college from the University of Oregon where he taught geography for the past two years. Professor Kramer holds a Ph.D. degree and a master of arts degree from the University of California at Berkeley. In addition to having taught at the University of Oregon, he has returned to his alma mater as professor at the University of California, an assistant professor at the University of Nevada, and was an instructor at San Jose College and at Allegheny College.

William Liddle, who received his master of arts degree in education from Colorado College in 1953, has returned to his alma mater as an assistant professor of education. The author of numerous articles on education, Liddle comes to Colorado College from the University of Delaware where he has been an instructor and assistant director of the Reading Clinic. He previously was an instructor at Colorado College, and has been supervisor of secondary education and a teacher in School District 11 here. Professor Liddle earned his bachelor's degree in political science at the University of California. He currently is a candidate for the Ph.D. degree at the University of Delaware.

Mrs. Alison G. Olson, who holds a doctor of philosophy degree from Oxford University in England, has been named lecturer in history. She previously taught history at Harvard University, Smith College, and Douglas College at Rutgers University. Mrs. Olson is the author of numerous articles in scholarly journals and one book, "The Radical Duke," published last year by the Oxford University Press. She received her bachelor of arts and master of arts degrees at the University of California at Berkeley, and attended Oxford University from 1953 to 1956, writing her doctoral dissertation on the "Career and Correspondence of the Third Duke of Richmond."

Michael Phillips, who joined the faculty as an instructor in art history, brings to the college an unusual background in mathematics, engineering and art. He received a bachelor's degree in mathematics from Ohio Wesleyan University, and subsequently was employed as an assistant engineer for Sperry Rand. The new instructor earned his master of arts degree at the Institute of Fine Arts of New York University.

The Rev. Nicholas Piedscalz is the new assistant professor of religion.

Professor Piedscalz was for four years campus minister in the First Congregational Church at the University of California at Berkeley. He previously was field work supervisor at Yale University. He holds a bachelor of arts degree from Grinnell College where he was graduated with honors in philosophy, and a bachelor of divinity degree in pastoral theology from Yale University. Professor Piedscalz subsequently studied Christian ethics for a year as a Danforth Foundation Fellow. He is now a candidate for the Ph.D. degree in systematic theology at Boston University.

Named to head the college's department of engineering is Prof. Harold K. Polk, a utility consultant for the Electro-Motive Division of General Motors. Polk, the author of numerous articles in technical and engineering publications, holds a bachelor of science degree in electrical engineering from the University of Illinois and a bachelor of science degree in electrical engineering from Purdue University. He has been an associate professor of electrical engineering at the University of Illinois and has taught at the University of Colorado. For the 11 years, he has been a systems planning engineer for the Service Company of Colorado.

Miss Audre M. Seabridge, appointed instructor in work physical education. Miss Seabridge, who holds a master of degree from Western State College and a bachelor of science degree from the University of Iowa, previously taught at Western State College and Western College.

Named associate professor of mathematics was Dr. George Simmons, who comes to the college here from Williams College where he taught mathematics, an assistant professor and an instructor at the University of Rhode Island, Yale University, University of Maine, and the University of Chicago. Dr. Simmons is the author of one book, "Introduction to Topology and Mathematical Analysis," published this year by McGraw-Hill. He earned his doctor of science degree at the University of Chicago. He holds a Ph.D. from Yale University.

FALL FACULTY LECTURES

Second in a series of fall faculty lectures at CC will begin at 8:15 p.m. in Perkins Hall on September 27. At that time, Carl Roberts, chairman of CC's psychology department, will lecture on "The Coming of the Age of Behavior."

Committee Method Used For Producing Olin Hall

Tuesday morning, September 18, Olin Foundation President Roger P. Horn came to Colorado College to help dedicate the most unique building ever to be constructed on the CC campus. Mr. Horn, representing the foundation which supplied the funds for the new structure, was assisted by College President Louis T. Benezet as well as by local civic leaders.

Design of the controversial science building, Olin Hall, resulted from the joint effort of a faculty committee and a group representing the architectural firm of Caudill, Rowlett, and Scott. Perhaps the most unusual aspect of the initial planning of the new building was the efficient use made of the committee method by a diverse group of faculty, administrative, and professional persons, who by working together smoothly produced one of the most original college science buildings of the decade. There was no master planner with his staff; far from it, a vigorous committee of those who will use the building, achieved the final creative result through a long series of meetings and late-night gatherings.

The planners were working to design a building which not only fitted into the environment of the college, but which also symbolized Colorado College's desire to unite, through mutual interest, the sciences with the humanities. In the original committee reports, such authors as J. Robert Oppenheimer and C. P. Snow were quoted to point up the necessity for a fresh understanding between the sciences and the humanities. The committee sought, not an emancipation of both and hence a common level of ignorance in both, but a new, mutually sympathetic extension of the spirit of these two seemingly separate areas, so that greater common understanding might be achieved.

In line with this earnest desire, the planners envisioned a structure which by the controversial nature of its design would attract humanists, and which by its open vistas, exemplified by the front entrance and rear annex, would permit people with variegated interests to be attracted toward a science which is willing to contribute to and learn from the general intellectual and social community. Far from being a kind of "scientific ivory tower," the new building was planned as a center of campus-wide activity, in which non-scientific classes as well as those in the physical and biological sciences, could be held in the spacious lecture halls, gracious seminar rooms, and colorful classrooms.

The openness of the building, as symbolized by the external architecture, is reinforced by the internal spacious design, allowing the casual observer to observe lectures or to watch experiments being conducted by both students and faculty.

Along with this openness, there is a theme of cooperation and interrelation especially on the first floor, where common laboratories designed for use by the biology, physics, and chemistry staffs and students, are located. Here the students and faculty work together, using the general labs as well as the laboratories designed for the study of radiation, nuclear resonance, and photography. Another encouraging innovation in the new building is the allocation of faculty laboratories to allow members of the teaching staff to enter the mainstream of active research on their own, while instructing students in the most recent advances in science. This innovation will allow professors to enter into modern research activity, and new facilities, for theorists as well as experimentalists, are bound to make Colorado College appear attractive to top-ranking scientists seeking time and space to do creative independent work while still performing teaching duties.

Unique in that it lacks the usual severity of a science building, Olin Hall is a monument to efficient and thoughtful use of funds by its planners. One striking feature, which adds to the versatility of the new structure, is the construction of a three-foot space between the Hall's inner and outer walls. The purpose of this "chase," besides that of insulation, is to provide all laboratories with an easily reached source of required utilities. Contained in the walls are readily accessible conduits for water and electricity, as well as gas lines and coaxial cables which are easily reached from all labs. The chase also contains heating and ventilating equipment.

Olin Hall's unusual lighting arrangement, designed by Professor Kraehenbuehl, subtly makes the deliberate absence of a finished ceiling in the Hall of Science, and gives the student excellent lighting in all areas, with the exception of the darkrooms.

A list of gadgets and technical innovations in Olin Hall would be endless. It is enough to say that students using the new building will find, to their delight, that all details have been thoughtfully considered with the object of reaching a versatility of usage never previously achieved.

The new science building represents an inspiration to versatility, interdependence, and cooperation between the scientific community, and openness with respect to the community in general. Both in design and in performance these are ideals very nearly, if not completely, attained.

ACLU Director Horn Gives Address To Speak Here For Olin Dedication

The new national executive director of the American Civil Liberties Union, John de J. Pemberton, Jr., will speak at the fall meeting of the Colorado Springs chapter of the ACLU at 1 p.m. Thursday, September 27, at a luncheon meeting at the Antlers Hotel. Mr. Pemberton will speak in "Civil Liberties in the Sixties." The meeting is open to the public. Luncheon reservations, at $1.50, should be made immediately by calling either ME 3-6345 or ME 6475.

Mr. Pemberton, who is completing his first six months as national executive director of the American Civil Liberties Union, is making his first tour of all affiliates in the western part of the country. During his visit to Colorado he will also speak in Denver and on the CU campus in Boulder.

Mr. Pemberton became the third executive head of the Union when he assumed his post April 1, 1962. A native of Rochester, Minn., where he was born in 1910, Mr. Pemberton had been engaged in the general practice of law in that city since 1950. Prior to that time he served on the faculty of the Duke University Law School from 1947 through 1950, first as acting assistant professor of law and then as associate professor of law. During the 1940-50 period he was associate editor of two publications edited by the school's faculty, Contemporary Problems and Journal of Legal Education.

Mr. Pemberton served as chairman of the Minnesota Branch CLU from 1955 through 1958 and as a member of the Branch's executive board until 1962. He was so a member of Minnesota Fair Employment Practices Commission and the Minnesota Advisory Committee to the US Civil Rights Commission. In the latter capacity he helped to prepare the Committee's report on the status of civil rights in Minnesota. He was also member of the Rochester City Charter Commission and active in the affairs of the local Chamber Commerce.

He received his elementary and secondary school education in Rochester, and was graduated on Swarthmore College in 1940 with a Bachelor of Arts degree. During the 1941-45 war period, he served with the American Field Service ambulance units in the Middle East and India. He was admitted from Harvard Law School in 1947 and was a member of the Harvard Law Review Board. Editors in the 1946-47 academic year.

Mr. Pemberton is married and has five children, four girls and a boy. He is a member of the Society of Friends (Quakers) and Republican in politics.

Olin Hall of Science, the magnificent new structure designed to facilitate the science program of Colorado College, was dedicated under a warm September sun before an estimated 800 students and faculty members Tuesday morning. The dedicatory address was given by Dr. Charles L. Horn, president of the Olin Foundation. President Benezet gave the response.

The dedication commenced with the traditional, colorful faculty procession followed by the dedicatory anthem. The anthem, called "Laude Dominum (Psalms 16)", was composed especially for the dedication of Olin Hall by Professor Carlton E. W. Gamer. This unique work was performed by the 100-voice Colorado College Choir under the direction of Donald Jenkins.

In an ingenious, scintillating address, Dr. Horn expressed his utmost satisfaction with Olin Hall. He explained that the Olin Foundation had made its decision to finance the building in one day and that the original estimate of cost came within close accuracy of the actual price. Special acknowledgement was paid to architect William W. Caudill of Houston. Commenting on the fund raising for the building, Dr. Horn quipped, "I call Benezet the wasp—every time I stuck my head out, I got stung."

The second portion of Dr. Horn's address was focused around the role of the independent college and its relationship to the high school student who has not graduated near the top of his class. "An independent college makes a mistake by taking only top students. When you put the standard so high, then you are sacrificing good men," He cited Moses, Hamurabi, and Columbus as "men of the soil" who never had a college education. He commented that the state universities have realized this and now it was time the independent colleges also became aware of it. Dr. Horn did not elucidate on how a small liberal arts college would attain the highest of academic excellence if his program were carried forth. But he did point to the very acute problem of how mass education on the college level was to be achieved.

Honorary degrees were conferred upon four outstanding individuals: Dr. Horn, Dr. Walter Orr Roberts, and Dr. William Gould Young (class of 1924) received degrees in Doctor of Science, honoris causa. Dr. Roberts was cited for his outstanding work in the field of solar astro-physics; Dr. Young in the area of organic chemistry; and Dr. Horn in industry, conservation, and urban housing. James Oscar Wynn (Vice-President of the Olin Foundation) received a Doctor of Laws degree, honoris causa, for his notable contributions in both education and law.

The dedication concluded with the sealing of the cornerstone. Among the various items included within the cornerstone was a photograph of the first x-rays made west of the Mississippi River (made in 1896 on the Colorado College campus), a copy of the Colorado College alumni bulletin, a history of the Olin Foundation, and the first and final progress photographs of construction of Olin Hall.

Bring Appetite To Slocum Lot For Melon Bust

Tomorrow the Sigma Chis will sponsor their 39th annual Watermelon Bust in the Slocum Hall parking lot. Brought in especially for the event will be some three thousand pounds of free watermelons, the Fabulous Delays of "Now Is the Hour" fame, and a number of candidates from the freshman women, one of whom will have the honor of being crowned queen. The noted judges Captain Pistone, Don Oden and Robin Rudolf will be on hand to judge the queen contest.

The Bust will begin at 3:30 with several contests and lots of "good deal" prizes. Dates are not necessary, but a healthy appetite for watermelon is a must. Come as you are, everyone is welcome.

ASCC Notes

The Associated Students of Colorado College executive council meeting on Monday, September 17 was an organizational one. There was little discussion and little action. The main concern of the meeting was the announcement of committee members.

Election: Chuck White, chairman; Pat Chapman and Al Loosi, members.

Enthusiasm: Pat Chapman, chairman, reported that Kangaroo Court was generally deemed a success. No injuries occurred during the trials themselves—only before and after.

Finance: Steve Frink, chairman; Peigi Benham, Dave Holdorf, and Mr. John Howard members.

Publications: Peigi Benham, chairman; Traer Sunley, secretary; Chuck White, member.

Social co-ordinating: Steve Sabornie, chairman; Nan Burroughs, Sue Caudill, Tony Cherrin, Skip Meis, and Mr. Don Oden, members.

Traffic: Ed DeGeorge, chairman, Lucia Bates, secretary. It was announced that traffic tickets were being given out as of September 17.

Student Policy: Jo Heller, chairman.

Assemblies: Petsy Gaskill, chairman. October 2 has been tentatively set as the date for a debate between Messrs. Carroll and Dominick, Democrat and Republican candidates for the position of U.S. Senator from Colorado. The debate will be either in Shove or Perkins.

Constitution: Polly Thompson, chairman. (The Constitution itself has been located.)

Academic: Dave Holdorf, chairman.

College Development: Ben Lewis, chairman.

Ben Lewis, senior class president, reported that senior class committee chairmen will meet Saturday, September 22, at 11 a.m. in the ASCC room of Rastall Center.

Dave Holdorf reported that junior class dues will be collected soon.

Sophomore class president Chuck White announced that the class of 65 broke even for their various events of the past weekend.

Under old business, the All School Picnic is being tentatively scheduled for the Saturday of Homecoming weekend (October 18).

FRIDAY AFTERNOON CLUB
An FAC will be held in the Rastall Center this afternoon at 4:45.

EDITORIAL:

ASCC'S LINK WITH THE CAMPUS

Probably the most often attacked problem of the ASCC is a general lack of communication with the college campus. Although most of CC's students are aware that some such body as ASCC exists, most are hazy as to its functions or scope of jurisdiction.

Attempts to correct this flaw have been made in the past, but have too often fallen short of the goal. This year, however, an organized attempt will be made under the jurisdiction of the relatively new (May 62) Communications Committee. This ASCC committee consists of the Secretary of the Executive Council, the Editor of the Tiger, and a member-at-large (not yet chosen).

The fruits of this have been important, though not numerous. Minutes of the ASCC meeting are being posted on the Rastall Center Bulletin board to provide a synopsis of events before the Executive Council. Weekly articles under the head "ASCC NOTES" will run in the Tiger. Both of these manners of reaching the CC campus were neglected last year.

Other approaches are forthcoming. A listing of ASCC committees, functions and members will soon be available. This alone should clear up most of the annual questions about areas of jurisdiction. KROC, the Colorado College FM station, will carry spot announcements of ASCC events. The "From the Chair" column in the Tiger will become weekly or bi-weekly in nature, and from time to time articles explaining ASCC functions will appear in this paper.

Finally, let it be stated here that ASCC meetings are open to all CC students. If merely reading about student government or receiving second-hand accounts doesn't fill the bill, a visit to the Monday afternoon meetings of the Executive Council can.

TODAY'S YEAR, ANOTHER DOLLAR

With another's entry I begin my ninth year of writing columns in your school newspaper for the makers of Marlboro Cigarettes.

Nine years, I believe you will agree, is a long time. In fact, it took only a little longer than nine years to dig the Suez Canal, and you know what a gigantic undertaking that was! To be sure, the work would have gone more rapidly had the shovel been invented at that time, but, as we all know, the shovel was not invented until 1946 by Walter R. Shovel of Cleveland, Ohio. Before Mr. Shovel's discovery in 1946, all digging was done with sugar tongs—a method unquestionably dainty but hardly what one would call rapid. There were, naturally, many efforts made to speed up digging before Mr. Shovel's breakthrough—notably an attempt in 1912 by the immortal Thomas Alva Edison to dig with the phonograph, but the only thing that happened was that he got his horn full of sand. This so depressed Mr. Edison that he fell into a fit of melancholy from which he did not emerge until two years later when his friend William Wordsworth, the eminent nature poet, cheered him up by imitating a duck for four and a half hours.

But I digress. For nine years, I say, I have been writing this column for the makers of Marlboro Cigarettes, and for nine years they have been paying me money. You are shocked. You think that anyone who has tasted Marlboro's unparalleled flavor, who has enjoyed Marlboro's filter, who has revelled in Marlboro's jolly red and white pack or box should be more than willing to write about Marlboro without a penny's compensation. You are wrong.

Compensation is the very foundation stone of the American Way of Life. Whether you love your work or hate it, our system absolutely requires that you be paid for it. For example, I have a friend named Rex Glebe, a veterinarian by profession, who simply adores to worm dogs. I mean you can call him up and say, "Hey, Rex, let's go bowl a few lines," or "Hey, Rex, let's go flatten some pennies on the railroad tracks," and he will always reply, "No, thanks. I better stay here in case somebody wants a dog wormed." I mean there is not one thing in the whole world you can name that Rex likes better than worming a dog. But even so, Rex always sends a bill for worming your dog because in his wisdom he knows that to do otherwise would be to rend, possibly irreparably, the fabric of democracy.

It's the same with me and Marlboro Cigarettes. I think Marlboro's flavor represents the pinnacle of the tobaccoist's art. I think Marlboro's filter represents the pinnacle of the filter-maker's art. I think Marlboro's pack and box represent the pinnacle of the packager's art. I think Marlboro is a pleasure and a treasure, and I fairly burst with pride that I have been chosen to speak for Marlboro on your campus. All the same, I want my money every week. And the makers of Marlboro understand this full well. They don't like it, but they understand it.

In the columns which follow this opening installment, I will turn the hot white light of truth on the pressing problems of campus life—the many and varied dilemmas which beset the undergraduate—burning questions like "Should Chaucer classrooms be converted to parking garages?" and "Should proctors be given a saliva test?" and "Should foreign exchange students be held for ransom?"

And in these columns, while grappling with the crises that vex campus America, I will make occasional brief mention of Marlboro Cigarettes. If I do not, the makers will not give me any money.

© 1962 Max Shubman

The makers of Marlboro will bring you this uncensored, free-style column 26 times throughout the school year. During this period it is not unlikely that Old Max will step on some toes—principally ours—but we think it's all in fun and we hope you will too.

Beta Theta Pi has pledged Bud Wilson, a transfer student from Denver. Last Sunday the Betas hosted a breakfast for the Delta Gammas. The breakfast was held in the Black Forest, with entertainment by the Infernos.

The Phi Gammas have four new pledges: Bill Thompson, Don Brown, Gerard Zennenoer, and Jean Millsagle.

The Sigma Chis have returned strong this year, and have pledged Steve Gustafson, an upperclassman from St. Paul, Minnesota, and Dennis Sauve, from Colorado Springs. The Sigs will hold their annual Watermelon Bust on Monday.

Phi Delta Theta has pledged upperclassmen Steve Weld from Minneapolis, and Steve Trowbridge from Shawnee Mission, Kansas.

Last Monday night the Phi Deltas hosted the Kappas at a dessert and open house.

The Kappa Sigs have pledged Mike Magruder and Stan Lathrop and have welcomed their new housemother, Mom Moss. They also wish to announce that "theannon is in action!"

The Delta Gammas began their activities for the year with a breakfast hosted by the Betas. The event was held Sunday in the Black Forest. The D.G.'s costume theme, with a theme of "Pick a Fair from History," will be held Saturday at the Paint Pony. The following Sunday morning they plan a breakfast-skating party with the Phi Deltas.

During this week, the D.G.s held Inspiration Week, climaxing on Thursday with the initiation of Ellen Boughn and Debbie West. The initiation ceremonies were followed by a banquet in the Anchor Room of the Village Inn.

Kappa Alpha Theta held a Rush school and retreat at their Lodge last Sunday. Last May the Thetas initiated Bev Carrington, Sue Gehle, and Robin Mellin.

Kappa Kappa Gamma opened the school year September 9 with their annual scholarship banquet, held at the Swiss Chalet. This event marked the beginning of Inspiration Week for the four pledges—Chris Archangel, Gloria Borowski, Lynn O'Malley, and Norma Parker—who were initiated Saturday, September 15. Last Monday, the Kappas, both old and new, joined the Phi Deltas for dessert at the Phi Delta house.

The Gamma Phi Betas climaxed a week of pre-initiation activities with a formal initiation ceremony at Shove Chapel on Saturday at 4:00. There was a banquet following at the Candlelight Inn honoring the initiates: Mary Collier, Claudia Elkins, Susie Gillespie, Sue Hardy, Liz Hickman, Jane Hilton, Shirley McCullough, Phyllis Nolting, and Sue Phelps. The Gamma Phis were hostesses last Monday for the Betas for the serenade of Lani Markisen and Ben Eastman.

From the Chair

By MAX POWER — President ASCC

Two innovations in campus life have startled returning students and perplexed incoming freshmen this fall. One is the use of a meal card system. The other is the library inspection system.

Both situations, unpopular with students, have apparently come about because of past students' actions. Unfortunately, neither the library staff nor the food service staff, particularly the latter, has made any effort to explain to students the reasons for the new measures.

We have been told in past years about the library's book loss problem, but no solution was forthcoming from students. Perhaps the introduction of the distasteful inspection system will cause enough concern that students will bring forward more positive proposals for stemming the loss of books from the library. It is to be hoped that the library staff will again provide the student body with information concerning the problem, and that it will be receptive to student proposals.

The food service management has been unfortunately silent as to the reasons for or merits of the meal card system. Here again, students armed with some information might be able to present alternative ideas of real merit. But poor public relations on the part of those administering the meal card program have cut the flow of information and caused unnecessary inconveniences, unpleasantness and disrespect.

Most students certainly do not want the responsibility for administering these areas of campus life. But most do feel that they deserve an explanation for rules and regulations such as these. Many students, moreover, would like to work out better solutions to the problems which caused library inspection and meal cards.

Even if no better solutions are forthcoming, both systems will work much more smoothly if only they are explained.

Freshmen will gather Tuesday to nominate members of their class to serve as class commissioners. The reservoir of leadership ability in the class of 1966 is obviously large, and it is the hope of ASCC that those nominated for commissioner will have real leadership qualifications.

The three freshmen who finally emerge as the class officers and commissioners will face a great deal of responsibility. They will be called on to sit on ASCC and its important committees. Raising class spirit and class money will fall to them. The class of 1966 has shown great unity already, and strong officers can make it truly an outstanding class.

We cordially invite all those who are interested in running for freshman commissioner to join us at ASCC meetings on Monday afternoons and to talk with any members on the Executive Council about ASCC and class activities.

Shove Chapel

Shove Chapel: Sunday Morning
Worship, September 23

Preacher: Professor Nicholas Piedscalz

Worship Leader: Professor Kenneth W. F. Burton

Date and Time: Sunday, September 23, 1962, 11:00 a.m.

Title and Resume of the Sermon:
"The Church on Campus: Victorian Police Force or a Community of Creative Love?"

In his sermon Prof. Piedscalz will seek to dispel some fake notions most contemporary people hold about the nature and task of the Church on campus, VIZ., that the church is a Victorian police force whose major mission is to safeguard and perpetuate outmoded mores. He also will seek to establish that the primary task of the church on campus and in the world is to be a community of creative love in which men and women use their God-given and each other in justice, mercy and humility. According to this understanding of the church the boundaries of the church cannot be limited to the institutional church as we know it but to the community at large.

Intramural Tournament Will Serve As Tryout

For Varsity Golf Team

The Annual Colorado College Intramural Golf Tournament will be held at the Patty Jewett Golf Course (seven blocks north and seven blocks east of the northeast corner of the campus) on the weekend of September 28-29 and October 5-6.

The first round of the medal play tournament will be held on Friday and Saturday, September 28 and 29, and it will determine the team championship. The 10 men turning in the lowest scores will play an additional 18 holes the following weekend, October 5-6, to determine the individual championship.

All men, except varsity golf lettermen, are eligible to enter the intramural tournament. A contestant may vie for the individual prize or may play as part of a four-man team to compete for the team prize.

Entry forms may be secured at Slocum Hall desk or in the Athletic Department office in Cossitt Hall.

The tournament serves as a tryout for students who plan to be candidates for the varsity golf team next spring. An additional tryout round will be held next March to determine the makeup of the varsity golf squad.

Tutt Provides Atmosphere and Facilities for College Students

Library orientation tours for the Freshmen will begin very soon, but since we are all new to the Tutt Library, a word about what it has to offer you is called for. We have books all over the building, and a directory of where to find call numbers appears on every bulletin board. Do you need Reserve Books? Call at the main desk. Recent issue of magazines? Look in the Periodicals area on the main floor. Bound periodicals are on the second floor and newspapers on the third. If you need to read microfilms, they are kept in the Periodicals Area with the microfilm reader. Microcards are kept in a special reading room in the basement together with their readers. Are you interested in newly published books? You will find them in the bookcase opposite the main desk, and around back on the bulletin board is a copy of our Monthly List of new books added to the Library.

What kind of an atmosphere do you want to study in? If you want real quiet, the carrels on the north wall of the third floor are for you. Want light and space and togetherness? Try the atrium area on the second floor, which so far seems to be the most popular study area in the Library. The tables near the east window wall in the basement provide a pleasant area all day long. If you want to study in groups and talk about what you are doing, you can use the Group Study rooms on the third floor, and when the Seminar Rooms are not being used for classes they are intended for group study also. While these rooms may be used for quiet study also, group study involving conversation takes precedence over quiet study in all these rooms.

If you want to smoke while studying, there are Smoking Studies on the basement, second, and third floors. These are intended as quiet rooms. If you want to smoke to break tension, let down your hair, and make noise, the Smoking Lounges on the basement and second floors are comfortably furnished and intended for this. Anyone who tries to study quietly in the Smoking Lounges or to smoke noisily in the Smoking Studies is out of step, and should be told so by students using the rooms for their proper purpose.

For practical matter, you will find ink for your pens at the ink stand behind the Inspection Desk near the entrance, pencil sharpeners on each bulletin board, coat hooks near the Periodicals Area and the Reference Area on the main floor, and on the back side of each bulletin board throughout the building. You may return books any time of the day or night through the bookdrop just outside of the entrance. There are typing rooms in the basement, and in the north core on the second floor. Telephones for student use are at the foot of the stairs in the basement.

In short, Tutt Library provides about any facility that you could possibly want. Moreover, into this fine new building we have moving what is the best collection of books in any college of our kind, some 350,000 volumes. In the past it has suffered serious ravages by its users. When we inventoried our shelves four years ago, we found about 4,800 books missing (and this is about $35,000 worth of books), and each year we discovered about 800 to 1,000 additional books had been stolen from our collection. To bring this situation under control and assure you that the books you need will be available when you need them, we have installed an inspection system at the entrance to the Library. It is essential for the proper operation of the Library, and while we are sure that it may not endear itself to the heart of everyone, we ask your cooperation in the system. It is our library, and the way you use it will determine to a very large degree its effectiveness as an educational force in the college. Ellsworth Mason, Librarian Charles Leaning Tutt Library

'Campus Forum' to Make Radio Debut Over KOA

Individual liberty, the arms race, and moral questions in a world of rapidly changing values are some of the issues to be discussed this fall on "Campus Forum," a challenging new radio show making its debut over Denver's KOA Sept. 27.

Produced at Colorado College in cooperation with the NBC station, Campus Forum will be broadcast on alternate Thursdays from 9:30 to 10 p.m.

The new show features faculty and students in half-hour-long discussions of some of the basic issues faced by man down through history.

The Colorado College program will alternate on Thursday nights with a National Broadcasting Company program called Youth Forum.

Appearing on Campus Forum will be one professor and four upperclass students from sections of the college's special senior-level seminar, Freedom and Authority.

Each of the professors teaching sections of the seminar and some of their students will rotate in the discussion programs. Students and professors will bring to the program crucial questions they have discussed in seminar.

In the Freedom and Authority seminars faculty and students attempt to resolve what authority should be central and controlling for the individual in his every day life, in his relationship to the state and to the conventions and moral codes of his society, and in his relationship to his God.

Leading the students in these discussions on Campus Forum will be President Louis T. Benetz; Lloyd E. Wornen, dean of the college and professor of history; Professor Glenn Gray, chairman of the philosophy department; William Hochman, associate professor of history; Thomas Ross, associate professor of English; and Douglas Freed, associate professor of psychology.

Law Applicants Must Secure Admission Test

The Law School Admission Test, required of applicants for admission to most American law schools, will be given at more than 100 centers throughout the United States on November 10, 1962, February 9, April 20, and August 3, 1963. During 1961-62 over 26,000 candidates took this test, and their scores were sent to over 100 law schools.

A candidate must make separate application for admission to each law school of his choice and should inquire of each whether it wishes him to take the Law School Admission Test and when. Since many law schools select their freshman classes in the spring preceding entrance, candidates for admission to next year's classes are advised to take either the November or the February test if possible.

The Law School Admission Test, prepared and administered by Educational Testing Service, cannot be "crammed" for. The morning test contains questions measuring verbal aptitudes and reasoning ability rather than acquired information. The afternoon session includes two tests, one of which provides a measure of writing ability and the other of general background. Sample questions, and information regarding registration for and administration of the test, are given in a Bulletin of Information.

The Bulletin (which includes an application for the test) should be obtained six weeks in advance of the desired testing date from Law School Admission Test, Educational Testing Service, Princeton, New Jersey. Applications must reach ETS at least two weeks before the desired test administration date to allow time for completion of necessary testing arrangements for each candidate. Application forms may be secured by contacting Professor Ray Werner, chairman of the Pre-Legal Committee, in Room 213, Palmer Hall.

Young Democrats Appoint Officers

The Young Democrats held their first meeting on Tuesday, September 11, at 4 p.m.; 14 members were present. Former president Tom Diary, opened the meeting by introducing Dr. Paul Bechtol, faculty advisor to the club.

Dr. Bechtol spoke on the many prospects open to the Young Democrats during the school year. He made particular note of the fact that this is an election year, an especially good time, for the politically minded, to get involved with state and local politics. Professor Bechtol emphasized the success of just such a campaign during the 1960 elections, when Democrats were responsible for registering many eligible voters. He hoped of attracting many prominent political figures and discussions.

Harris Sherman then spoke. The Colorado College Center for Practical Politics. He said that the center will help in disseminating all forms of political information, such as registration procedures for those Colorado College students over 21, and election material of both a partisan and non-partisan nature. Sherman reported that the idea of the center has been favorably received by members of the college administration. At the close of the meeting, Polly Miller, Sally Twaddle, and Harris Sherman, were appointed temporary officers until members of the club become well enough acquainted to hold an election.

Volunteer Program For Mental Health Begins on Campus

The volunteer program for mental health and other aspects of the institutional organization on campus is starting on the Wednesday, September 26, at 10 p.m. in the WES lounge. At that time the speakers scheduled by Dr. Haydon Cort and Mr. William Ross of the Pueblo Colorado State Hospital.

On September 29, interested students can meet at 1 p.m. in Rastall Center prior to a visit to the Pueblo Hospital.

This year's agenda will probably be a three-fold program: work in mental hospitals; American Friends Service Committee work and work camps (including a project based at CC); town/volunteer work for those who want to volunteer but cannot leave town.

Further information can be obtained by contacting Dr. Paul Bechtol at extension 351 (Palmer House).

UGH! GRUNT! Pushball again on the Slocum greens.

2nd West Cops Pushball Crown

First round results of the pushball tournament, which this year introduced the Slocum Hall Intramural Program, were as follows:

Second West defeated First North 12-2, Second South defeated Fourth North 14-1, First West was defeated by Second North 3-1, Third West went down to Arthur House 7-3, First South beat Fourth West 12-1, and Third South defeated Third North 11-0.

In quarter-final play, Second West caked out a win over Second South 3-1, while Second North was defeated heavily by Arthur House 12-0. Third South completed quarter-final play by defeating First South 7-3.

Semi-final play was generous to Second West as it drew a bye into the finals. In the roughest and hardest fought game of the season, Third South edged Arthur House 3-1.

The championship game Wednesday afternoon found Second West winning out over Third South in a contest made to look deceptively easy by the 9-0 score.

Trio to Lead Tiger Gridders In 1962 Season

Colorado College Tigers are in the unique position of fielding three team captains this year.

In a squad election the day before the opening game against St. Mary's of the Plains, the 40-man football team elected a lineman, an end, and a back to serve as tri-captains of the 1962 Tigers.

Winning the same number of votes for the coveted position were John Trujillo, guard; Mike Minelli, end; and Vince Greco, halfback. All three are seniors and veterans of the 1961 Tiger roster.

Trujillo, a 205-pound guard from Trinidad, Colo., is a key man in Coach Jerry Carle's forward wall. He was starting guard last year and is a first string lineman again this season. He graduated from Trinidad High School where he lettered four years in football and two in wrestling. Trujillo was named to the all-state football squad and was a state finalist in wrestling. Before transferring to CC he was the starting guard for two years at Pueblo Junior College.

Minelli, a 190-pound end, comes from Hibbing, Minn. He played outstanding half for the Tigers in the 1961 season and currently is one of the leading pass receivers for the 1962 squad. He played both hockey and football in high school and received all-conference honors in both.

Vince Greco, leads the CC Tigers in the rushing category. Against St. Mary's he carried 11 times for a total gain of 34 yards. At Washburn University, he sustained the Tigers with his running and receiving and scored the first of CC's two TD's. The 175-pound senior halfback hails from Denver, Colo. At Regis High School he won three football letters and was named to the all-city parochial team and on the second all-state team.

Washburn Beats Colorado College Eleven In Non-Conference Game

The Colorado College football eleven lost their first game of the season last Saturday at Topeka, Kansas, as Washburn University caked out a 20 to 14 non-conference victory over the Tigers.

Washburn took charge in the opening half as they rolled to thirteen first downs and two touchdowns. CC managed only one first down as their opponents completely dominated play.

Washburn tallied in the first quarter on a 43 yard drive with quarterback Curt Miller going one yard over center on a keeper for the score. Jack Clanton kicked the extra point to make it 7-0. Washburn added another touchdown in the second quarter on a 45-yard march climaxed by Jack Clanton's two yard scamper to paydirt. He again converted the extra point and Washburn University was on top 14-0.

The Colorado College Tigers came storming back in the second half to register fourteen first downs and two TD's. CC's first counter came in the third quarter highlighted by the running and pass catching of senior halfback Vince Greco. The Black and Gold moved 65 yards downfield and scored when Greco swept one yard around left end. Steve Sobol added the extra point to put CC back in the ball game 14-7.

Washburn accounted for its final touchdown when they recovered a Tiger fumble in the closing minutes of the third quarter and scored on a 58 yard pass play from Miller to Scherzer on the first play of the fourth period to give Washburn a 20 to 7 advantage.

Colorado College's last scoring bid came in the final 32 seconds of play when freshman quarterback Milton Franke plowed five yards around left end to cross the goal line, and after Sobol's second extra point conversion the Black and Gold were on the short end of a 20 to 14 score.

Pete Davis Injured In Washburn Game

Pete Davis, defensive halfback for the CC Tigers, suffered a dislocated shoulder during the CC-Washburn game at Topeka, Kan., Saturday.

Davis was injured when he landed on one shoulder after a hard downfield block by a Washburn player, Colorado College football Coach Jerry Carle said.

The Tigers dropped the Washburn tilt 20-14, giving them a 1-1 record for the season to date. CC has an open game tomorrow, Sept. 22. Their next opponent is Fort Hays State College, scheduled at Hays, Kansas, Sept. 29 at 7:30 p. m.

Mountain Club Plans Climbing And Hiking

A new year at Colorado College brings with it a new season for mountain climbing. New students who have had a desire to learn and enjoy, and the oldtimers who have big plans for many trips, will find the Rockies a playground this year.

Already, the Colorado College Mountain Club has started its rock climbing school and has sponsored a trip to Halletts Peak. Nearly twenty climbers, both novice and expert, found Halletts a delightful trip and were awed by the beautiful scenery of Rocky Mountain National Park.

In order to monopolize the fine fall weather, the CCMC has planned a full weekend of climbing activities. Saturday afternoon will find many rock climbing enthusiasts dotting both North Cheyenne Canon and the Garden of the Gods. Among those going out to climb will be those who are just learning. They will be participating in the CCMC "rock school."

On Sunday, members will leave Rastall Center to climb Grays and Torreys Peaks. These peaks are both over 14,000 feet and are only three-quarters of a mile apart. The peaks, located about 40 miles west of Denver, are easily climbed and should offer magnificent views of the turning aspen leaves.

ROTC Cadet Corps Indoctrinate Frosh

Colorado College's senior cadet corps has been busy this week and last whipping recalcitrant freshmen and somewhat more submissive sophomores into order, and begin to attempt to prepare the junior MS III cadets for the ordeal through which the seniors have just passed.

The 32 senior cadets primarily responsible for carrying out the weekly leadership laboratory have just returned from a grueling six weeks at the Ft. Riley, Kansas, summer camp, where they underwent a period of intensive training in nearly every phase of modern military activity.

The summer training period serves two purposes: for the Army, it is a means to toughen up previously only classroom-trained cadets by exposing them to rugged bivouac conditions for a protracted period of time; for the ROTC Professors of Military Science it is a means of selecting leaders for the following year's program, as well as a means for comparing the relative effectiveness of ROTC programs all over the United States.

When last year's MS III cadets arrived in Ft. Riley, they found a rigorous period of endurance and adaptation to entirely new conditions. CC's cadets were first designated as members of a Class B ROTC program, that is, one which had less than 34 cadets attending the Ft. Riley summer camp. Then they were further fragmented among eight companies of men from other class B schools, to remain in their designated units throughout the six-week period.

At Ft. Riley the emphasis is on activities not easily carried out on campus, such as grenade-throwing, map-reading on a large scale, M-1 and carbine range practice, and intensive physical training. Cadets are rated in several ways throughout the period and are again rated in an overall examination at the end of six weeks. They must undergo a Physical Training test, which is scored in several phases of activity, among them a one-mile run, an obstacle course speed test, a run across a horizontally-runged "monkey" ladder, and a grenade throw graded on the basis of distance. For CC's MS cadets the fastest mile was turned in by Peter Webster, clocked at 5:24. It's not exactly Olympic track team caliber, but when the combat boots are considered, the time becomes considerably more creditable.

In addition to the PT test, all cadets participating in the camp must rate and be rated by every other cadet in their respective platoons (about 35-40 men). These ratings are required twice during the six-week period, after three weeks and again just prior to the end of the camp session. They serve a two-fold purpose: they offer the cadets' Regular Army superiors the opportunity to gain some insight into each cadet's leadership abilities and suitability for officer training, and they provide the cadets themselves with valuable experience for their careers as officers, when they will be frequently asked to evaluate both their subordinates and super-

Fullbright Scholarships

US Government scholarships for graduate study or research abroad are available for the 1963-64 academic year, under the Fulbright-Hays Act. The grants, administered by the Institute of International Education, provide round-trip transportation for an academic year in any one of 46 countries throughout the world.

In addition, Travel-Only grants, which supplement a scholarship awarded by a foreign university, government or private donor, are available to any one of seven participating countries.

General eligibility requirements are: US citizenship, a bachelor's degree or its equivalent in professional training, language ability commensurate with the demands of the proposed study project, and good health. Preference is given to applicants under 35 years of age.

Application forms and detailed information for students enrolled in the college may be obtained from the campus Fulbright advisor, Dr. Paul Bernard. Individual department heads also have lists of countries offering opportunities in particular fields. The deadline for filing applications through the Fulbright Program advisor is October 27.

PUBLICATION BOARD

Publication Board will meet at 6:30 p.m. today to review applications for Kinkinnik and Writer's Workshop positions. The meeting will be in the ASC room in Rascal Center.

HAROLD P. WOHLER, President Louis T. Beneset, and Roy A. Davis discuss the Louis Bouche painting "Country Fair", given to the college by Mr. Davis and Mr. Wohler.

Bouche Painting Donated In Memory of CC Alumnus

An oil painting by Louis Bouche, recognized as one of America's leading artists, has been presented to Colorado College in memory of the late Mrs. Betty Elaine Davis Wohler.

The donors are Roy A. Davis of Colorado Springs, father of the former Colorado College student, and her husband Harold P. Wohler. The painting was one of two presented to the college by Mr. Davis and Mr. Wohler.

Mrs. Wohler, who died in January of 1959, received her bachelor's degree in sociology from Colorado College in 1939. During her student days at the college, she became a member of Delta Gamma sorority.

The paintings are Bouche's "Country Fair," and "Autumn Still Life" by Clayton Henri Staples, an American representational painter who makes his home in Colorado Springs.

"Country Fair" was purchased from Kraushaar Galleries in New York. Colorado College officials said they hoped the work would become the nucleus of a college art collection.

A native of New York, Bouche has been commissioned to paint murals for the auditorium of the new Department of Interior building in Washington, D. C., the large lounge for Radio City Music Hall at Rockefeller Center in New York, and the Eisenhower Memorial in Abilene, Kansas.

His works are represented in the Metropolitan Museum of Art, Whitney Museum of American Art, Philips Memorial Gallery, Des Moines Art Center, Blandford Memorial Gallery in Fort Dodge, Iowa, Pennsylvania Academy of Fine Arts, the Encyclopedia Britannica Collection, Walker Art Center, the U. S. State Department Collection, University of Nebraska, Worcester Art Museum, Wichita Museum of Art, the Cranbrook Museum in Bloomfield Hills, Michigan, Museum of the New Britain Institute, and the Cincinnati Art Museum.

During the past few years Bouche has taught at the Art Student's League in New York. He has taught at the National Academy of Design since 1951.

Among his numerous awards are the John Sanford Altus Prize and Medal in 1915, the John Simon Guggenheim Fellowship in painting in 1933, the Carol Beck Gold Medal, presented by the Pennsylvania Academy of Fine Arts in 1944, the New York Metropolitan Museum of Art's prize for Artists for Clara Obry Prize, presented by the National Academy of Design in 1951; the Benjamin Altman Prize, presented in 1955 by the National Academy of Design.

Bouche studied in Paris with Jules Bernard, Duman and Willard Maudin, at La Grande Chauxmiere and L'Ecole des Beaux Arts from 1910 to 1915, and at the Students' League in New York during 1915 and 1916.

A native of Wisconsin, Staples recently built a studio-home of his own design at 2401 Constellation in Colorado Springs where he spends his time painting and teaching.

Staples' oil paintings and watercolors are represented in more than 300 collections. His work has been used in numerous publications and on Hallmark cards. He is a graduate of the Art Institute of Chicago, where he also taught. He was for four years a director at Illinois State Normal University, and for 20 years an instructor at the University of Wisconsin in Kansas.

BOY THIS GREEK WEEK is a real drag!

Greek Week Will Include Study, Dances and Games

On Thursday, September 27, the Greeks of Colorado College open the 1962 edition of Greek Week, which has become an annual event. Under the chairmanship of Carol Wright and Bill Bentley, the various planned activities of four busy days will find the members of the fraternities and sororities engaged both in serious study of the Greek system and its in-jargon at CC and in explaining, partly by active demonstration, the meaning of that system to those students outside the organizations. The events themselves will combine the serious with the pleasant, showing the varied facets of Greek life. By the end of activities on Sunday, a new addition will have been made to the growing tradition of the Greeks at CC.

The schedule of events allows time both for self-study by the Greeks and for involvement of the whole student body. The panel on Thursday will provide time for explanations to Greeks and non-Greeks alike, while the banquet on Saturday permits the Greeks to hear an outside speaker on an aspect of Greek life. The entire college community will, on the other hand, be invited to participate in the special Shove Chapel service Sunday morning and the all-college dance Saturday night.

The events of this four-day weekend are:

Thursday, September 27, 4:00 p.m. in Shove Chapel—Panel: "The Greek Intent," Don Odell, Moderator.

Friday, September 28, 5:30 p.m. at Monument Valley Park—Dance and picnic supper, Greeks only.

Saturday, September 29, 1 p.m. in Washburn Field—Greek games.

9 p.m. at the Broadmoor Ballroom—All-school dance. Buses will be provided on Cutler Circle.

Sunday, September 30, 11 a.m. in Shove Chapel—worship service.

1 p.m. in Rastall—Banquet. Greeks only.

The schedule for the Greek Games is as follows:

1:00—Intramural chairmen report to the center of the football field to review rules and for final instruction.

1:15—Bicycle race, sororities and fraternities alternating.

1:30—Donkey race, sororities only.

1:45—Chariot race, fraternities.

2:00—Tug of war, ten members from each Greek group.

2:15—Pig chase, unlimited sorority members.

2:30—Soccer, fraternities.

For the Greek games the sororities and fraternities are paired for mixed competition as follows:

Betas — Gamma Phis

Kappa Sigis — Theta

Pijls — Kappas

Pi Delta — Alpha Phis

Sigma Chis — Delta Gammas

Come to the Greek Games at 1:00 p.m. Saturday and watch the fun!

Meal Cards Not Required For Cafeteria

The Colorado College Food Service announced this week that students eating breakfast and lunch on campus will no longer need to present their meal tickets. The tickets will still be required for those eating family-style dinners in Rastall, Bemis and Taylor.

Robert M. Torrens, Food Service manager, said that the use of the cards at cafeteria-style meals during the first two weeks of school enabled the cashiers to familiarize themselves with students passing through the cafeteria lines. The cards also made it possible for the register of students eating in Rastall Center to be completed much earlier than in past years, Torrens said.

"The meal cards will be required at family-style meals because no cashiers or checklists can be used at those meals," Torrens said. In the past, a small minority of students have taken advantage of the uncontrolled access to evening meals.

Tiger Club Taps Ten New Members

Members of the Tiger Club, upper class women's pep organization, voted and tapped ten new members this past Thursday night.

The new Tigers, who may be identified by their bright yellow "pledge ribbons," are: Carla Nelson, Cathy Grant, Flint Smith, Polly Miller, Bev Carrington, Ann Holmes, Nancy Pettit, Ann Herlihy, Lynn Tondoro, and Jamie Adler. They will join with Tiger Club and Tigerettes to present half-time festivities for our Homecoming Football game. Tiger Club will also be selling the traditional CC mums during the time prior to the All-School Homecoming dance.

To — Freshmen Men!

As you will recall, the Inter-Fraternity Council outlined through publications and during New Student Week the established rules and the responsibility you have to the CC deferred rush system.

It has been brought to the attention of IFC with a recent violation that a few freshmen men have seriously disregarded what was said, and subsequently have jeopardized themselves and the fraternities by their actions. As stressed by the IFC, success of this system placed responsibility not only on the fraternities but on you as individuals.

A first infraction will result in a $50 fine to the fraternity involved and loss of pledging privileges (for a complete semester) by the freshman involved with that fraternity.

Please do not take this subject lightly. Review the rules and ask questions if there is still uncertainty.

Kinnikinnik Editors Urge College Creative Interest

By Onica Friend and Terry Fonville

On this campus the best outlet for free creativity is the Kinnikinnik. As its co-editors, we feel that it must fulfill both the active and passive creative needs of the school. We believe that this can be achieved by selecting the best representatives from each of the many forms of art. Work will be judged on its quality of expression and substance. Also, material from unusual areas will be considered—not just poetry, short stories, plays, photography, and art, but also musical compositions and essays on any subject of interest written in a literary, as opposed to a scientific, style. All students are encouraged to contribute original creative work of any type suitable for presentation in a printed magazine.

Criticism of the magazine as a whole by both faculty and student body is important and necessary. Those of you who are interested are encouraged to give us your ideas as to how we can improve the existing content and structure of the magazine. Freshmen, in particular, are urged to contact us about what they believe should appear on the pages of their campus literary magazine. We hope to encourage interested faculty members to write critiques of the Kinnikinnik for publication in the TIGER.

Structurally, the magazine centers around the ten-member Board of Review. The Board meets to review all material and each member writes a criticism of all work submitted. We encourage revision and re-application.

This, we feel, is an essential part of the Kinnikinnik function on campus. The success of the magazine hinges on the artistic sensitivity and enthusiasm of each board member. The positions on the board are open to all conscientious students who feel they are qualified and can put in the necessary time. Other positions open are as follows: Business Manager, Art Editor, and Copy Editor. Applications for all positions may be picked up and returned to Rastall Desk. Deadline for filing applications is Monday, October 8.

To give the college community a creative magazine representative of its diversified talents it is obviously necessary for the members of the community to give of their work to the magazine.

Kinnikinnik Editors Chosen

Publications Board announces the selection of Onica Friend and Terry Fonville as Co-Editors of the Kinnikinnik, campus literary magazine, for the following year. The editors, both sophomores, plan to put new impetus into the magazine by making a direct appeal to all creative talent on campus. They stated in their application that they would consider all creative material—literary, artistic, and even musical—and that all work would be judged on its own merit rather than as an example of a particular form. It is hoped that this will provide encouragement for those creative factions on the campus who so far have been reluctant to submit their work.

The Board extends its congratulations to the new editors and hopes for a successful year.

Scholarships to Great Britain Will Be Awarded Soon

Nearly 20,000 American students will be going abroad next year on a wide range of scholarships or grants. Among the students of both sexes who will have the highest prestige for their awards, the ones with the brightest prospects, will be the 24 Marshall Scholars.

They will be picked next month. Applications must be to the San Francisco regional headquarters, British Consulate-General, 343 Sansome St., San Francisco, by Oct. 22. That is less than six weeks ahead, and the usual range of supporting documents must accompany applications. The date has had to be advanced because of the ever-increasing realization that a Marshall can be the key to a brilliant future.

You don't necessarily have to be a "big brain" to win a Marshall. Selectors insist on all around development, contributions to University life and potential ability to be useful to Anglo-American understanding.

An off-beat "major" subject is a great inducement to selectors: — (most candidates pick economics, history or "greats"). Women students are particularly invited to enter—for some reason particular shy of trying for a Marshall. The Western US is guaranteed at least four of the scholarships.

The winners will be granted passage to, living expenses and tuition at any of Britain's 24 universities for a period of at least two years from next fall.

16th Variety Show Preparations Start

First call for people interested in the 16th Variety Show!

Now is the time for all students to be thinking of this opportunity to perform. There is no particular theme but the talent will be organized and blended into the fine traditional occasion this has grown to be. Tryouts will come later, but it is time for individuals and groups to express their desire to participate.

Interested students should call Chief Tyree, extension 343 or drop a note to him in care of the Variety Show, KRCC mailbox, Rastall Center.

The show last year was a grand success and it is hoped that freshmen and foreign students in particular will indicate their desire to participate.

In a primary election held yesterday, the members of the freshman class chose five people, three of whom will be elected Monday to serve as the officers of the class and to represent the class on the ASCC Executive Council. We encourage the freshmen to choose their leaders carefully.

The three victors of Monday's election will, first of all, have the responsibility of unifying and organizing their class for the number of projects which the class must undertake. Moreover, they will sit on the executive council where they will help make decisions involving all students and thousands of dollars.

The freshmen who are elected will serve on important student committees—Publications, Constitution, Undergraduate Life, etc.

All in all, a great deal of leadership, ability and judgment will be required of the new freshman commissioners.

Freshmen, choose well!

CC's Impact on the Region

Editor's note: The following editorial appeared on the editorial page of the Colorado Springs Free Press on the morning of Tuesday, September 25.

"Some of you business men ought to realize Colorado College is one of the best factories in your region," said Dr. Charles H. Horn to a luncheon group following the dedication of Olin Hall of Science at Colorado College, made possible largely because of the speaker.

His point on the economic value of the school to the city and to the region was well taken. With an annual budget of something over a million dollars, largely spent and re-spent in the community, and with students and visiting parents, relatives and friends spending an estimated $31 million in addition, Colorado College has the kind of payroll and commercial impact on the region which, if it were dangled before the members of Bill Carraway's Chamber of Commerce Industrial Committee as a factory might well make their collective mouths water.

This kind of spending in the community, added to an annual expenditure for new buildings now averaging about $2 million, is indicative of the value of such an institution. Important as such spending is to the local economy, it may be the least of CC's contributions to the community. As is true in many fields, the highest values are those of the human variety.

Consider the rejuvenating effect of approximately 1,200 young people living in the city nine months of the year and another group that is here during the summer months. All of us need the youthful point of view. Even casual association with college youth, their fresh ideas, their sports, their high jinks, make all of us younger in spirit.

The cultural influences of the college are not to be ignored. From this body of intellectuals living in the community comes serious lectures, music, dance and drama the year around to enrich our lives. The college's close cooperation with the Fine Arts Center, participation in the Symphony Association, the Civic Players, and the Broadway Theater League have an impact on these important local groups, and on those who participate in them in any way. The Tutt Library, while not generally open to the public, is a reservoir of reference and learning in a community which is currently short of library facilities.

The spirit of investigation and research fostered by a good liberal arts college influences any community. Study of a new cooperative graduate center at the college is significant. And industry of the kind attractive to the Pikes Peak Region is strongly guided in its selection of sites for new locations by the type of intellectual environment created by such an institution. But, regardless of attraction to industry, the entire community is elevated by the scientific approach to problems.

Leadership of college folk in the churches and in the Council of Churches is another contribution which could be spelled out.

All of these factors are important. However, the highest contribution may be in yet another area. In a community beset with more than its share of extreme, and even lunatic-fringe right-wing influences, the faculty and administration of Colorado College has a significant leavening influence. These educational leaders are active in community and civic affairs. They provide leadership in public education and in politics. For example, two faculty men have served on local boards of education. Several have been active political party officers. The college president, Dr. Louis Benezet, was a leader in securing the activation of the United Fund of the Pikes Peak Region.

Of utmost importance is the fact that the leadership of these men of education is on the side of humanity, of good government, of good sense.

Yes, Mr. Horn, Colorado College is a good "factory," with a heavy dollar-measured impact on Colorado Springs. But its cultural, spiritual, civic and humanitarian impact may be the greatest of all.

Diller Named For Testing

Edward Diller, assistant professor of German at Colorado College, has been named a member of Education Testing Service's National German Advanced Placement Examination Committee.

The new Colorado College professor holds a doctor's degree from Middlebury College, where he wrote his dissertation on "The Basic Concepts in the Works of Friedrich Durrenmat."

He earned his master of arts degree from Los Angeles State College and his bachelor of arts degree at the University of California at Los Angeles.

Dr. Diller also has studied at Zurich University, Mexico City College, University of Innsbruck, Basel University and the Alliance Francaise.

Chess Club Meeting Set

The Chess Club will hold its first meeting of the year this afternoon at 2:05 in Rastall Center, room 208. The primary purpose of this meeting will be the election of officers but chess sets will be available if anyone wishes to play. We invite all CC students to attend. We aren't looking for masters, we're just looking for people who enjoy the game (but if you're a master, we won't exclude you).

CHEER UP — You don't have to eat the rind! 3,000 pounds of watermelon were consumed by CC students Saturday, Sept. 22, at the annual Sigma Chi Watermelon Bust. During the festivities Anne Threlkeld was crowned queen.

Young Republicans Attend Meetings And Plan Strategy

The CC Young Republicans have had a very busy week. Last Sunday, a small group went to Greeley for the luncheon meeting of the Colorado League of College Young Republicans. Monday afternoon, another group of YR's went to the meeting of the League of Republican Women of El Paso County to hear a speech by Mr. John A. Love, Republican candidate for governor. He will run against incumbent Steven L. R. McNichols.

Tuesday afternoon, the CCYR's held its bi-weekly meeting. Attendance was excellent. The major purpose of this meeting was to plan strategy for the campaign. The YR's will aid both the Republican Central Committee of El Paso County and the El Paso County Young Republicans by working on registration drives, and doing block work in heavily contested precincts. They also plan registration drives on campus, including aid to students from out of state.

In the near future, the YR's are anticipating two very exciting events. On October 3, the group will travel to Denver to meet with ex-President Dwight D. Eisenhower. On Friday, October 12, the CCYR's will host Representative Peter H. Dominick. Mr. Dominick is the Republican candidate for United States Senator, running against incumbent John Carroll.

The Young Republicans look forward to a very exciting and prosperous year.

Menacing Monster Saturates Student

By Dave Clapp

In Egypt the mighty Nile overflows its banks each year to nourish the sun-dried soil. In the tropics, lush, green foliage receives a daily deluge of life-giving water from the heavens. In Spain the rain sates mainly on the plain.

Here at CC, however, nothing is left to chance. Who needs capricious Nature when a man-made marvel of pipes and pressure gauges can drench everything in sight?

Most of us are pretty tolerant of CC's minor shortcomings. So what if the Shove chimes strike the hour at quarter past? Who minds dodging an occasional piece of plaster in Palmer or Perkins? And what if one does pick up a splinter or two in the stadium? All these annoyances are petty. Indeed, compared to the sadistic sprinklers, a glance at the watering system and one would suspect the legion department of attempting to re-create The Flood.

Don't get me wrong: I like green grass—it's really quite attractive, and somehow brown just doesn't do the trick. But by the same token I am accustomed to taking my showers in the shower; and the laundry does a much better job on my shirts than do these spasms of the sprinklers.

Machines can't think? — hal These percolating pipes are not content merely to think: their real talent lies in outsmarting innocent victims like me. Take yesterday. I got up early and started walking to breakfast when, unannounced, all H2O broke loose. It wasn't enough that one side of me got soaked. No, I had to be standing between two opposing sprays, defenseless as Custer at Little Big Horn. I remember shouting, "Head 'em off at the pass," before I succumbed. I learned later it took fifteen minutes of artificial respiration to bring me around.

It was an incident yesterday afternoon, though, that added the crowning touch. I was openly attacked by the most menacing of all watering devices, the creeping drencher. (That's my terminology; the company calls it the "Handy Dandy Strolling Sprinkler.") Not content to lie in waiting, this monster moves snake-like along its hose to search out victims. When I stretched out under a tree early in the afternoon I took little note of the innocuous-looking sprinkler a good hundred feet away. After a few moments my contemplative mood gave way to one of slumber (it almost always does). In the midst of pleasant dreams I awakened in the spillway of a veritable Niagara. Gathering my wits (everything else had floated away) I backstroked to the nearest sidewalk. And it was at that moment, shivering in the afternoon breezes, I decided to surrender to The System. You'll recognize me on campus by the raincoat.

Tiger SPORTS

Hockey Practice Starts Oct. 15

It may seem at little early to think of winter sports, but Coach Tony Frasca is mapping his campaign for the 1962-63 Colorado College Hockey Season.

Approximately 45 potential stickmen attended the years' first hockey meeting called by Frasca at Cossitt Hall on the CC campus. 15 of those attending were members of last year's first string Tiger ice squad. The remaining pucksters attending were members of last year's freshman team, new freshmen, and transfer students.

Frasca and company face a 24 game schedule opening against McMasters University at the Broadmoor World Arena here November 28. Included are 16 league games, most of them on home ice.

According to current plans, Coach Frasca will start hockey practice sessions on October 15 at the Broadmoor for both varsity and freshmen. The squad will be split into two groups at first, Frasca said. One group will spend an hour and a half on the Broadmoor ice while the second group works out with calisthenics on the Colorado College track at Washburn Field.

Except for the University of Denver and Michigan Tech, the Tigers will meet all conference opposition at the Broadmoor World Arena before meeting them on their own home ice.

CC Triumphs at Canon City

Last Saturday, the CC Tigers traveled to Canon City for a game with the State Penitentiary. The game was played mostly on the ground, and displayed some good running on the part of CC.

Vince Greco led the Tigers with two TDs. Steve Sabol tallied with one more. Mike Magruder came up with his first TD of the season but injured his knee during the game and is expected to be out for about two weeks. Ron Taylor was injured slightly, but is expected to be able to play against Fort Hayes tomorrow. The contest ended with CC on top, 27-19.

Bowlers Will Meet To Form Leagues

A meeting for all men in the college community interested in league bowling will be held next Tuesday, October 2, at 7:30 p. m. in the ASCC room of Rastall Center.

Final decisions will be made as to what evenings will be set aside for league play, rules for substitution, awards and trophies. A league secretary will also be chosen.

Interested men are urged to form teams and be in attendance at this meeting.

Wayne Deutscher

Wayne Deutscher, a 20 year old senior from St. Louis Park, Minn., is this year's mainstay in the full-back slot. Deutscher, who weighs in at 190 and stands 6 feet one, saw as much action on last year's team as anyone. He lettered in basketball, football and baseball during his high school years. He is majoring in mathematics and engineering.

Vince Greco

Vincent "Vince" Greco, a speedy broken field runner, occupies the halfback position for the Tigers this season. Greco, 21, weighs in at 175 pounds and is five feet eleven inches tall. A winner of many gridiron honors while playing for Regis High School in Denver, his home town, Greco will spend most of his time carrying the ball for CC in the upcoming games. He hopes to become a history teacher and coach after graduating from CC.

Gridders Anticipate Fort Hay

The CC Tigers are journeying to Fort Hays Kansas State College tomorrow for their third and final game with a Kansas school. Of the previous twelve contests between the two teams, CC has won ten.

Fort Hays Coach Wayne McConnell has labeled his team's prospects for the season as "the brightest in years" and he has reason to assert this claim. The roster sports twenty lettermen, eight transfers, and four squad members from last fall.

The CC gridders, however, are looking forward to the game with great anticipation. Vince Greco, looking for a repeat performance as one of the leading gainers against FHS and the team will again be meeting Dave Park

Faculty and Administration Comment

By Louis T. Benezet

I am happy to inaugurate what I understand may become a weekly Tiger column for faculty and administrative officers, taking their turns at intra-campus communication. It is a perennial college question how this can best be done. Student government officers are campaigned for and won each spring on the promise that, the office achieved, communication among college groups will at last begin to happen.

It is a temptation therefore to fill my column with what the press calls hard news about what is going on at Colorado College. Instead, I hope that a year of reports by various colleagues may help accomplish this.

What may be more helpful at the outset is to point out that as a community already we are not entirely dumb (in the precise, not the colloquial meaning, that is). Communication channels exist throughout the Colorado College campus; the problem is to use them adequately, at the right time. Thus:

If you are concerned about organized student life, ask one of your Class Commissioners to present your views at ASCC meeting.

If you are concerned about the academic program, speak to the chairman of the Academic Committee of ASCC, or one of its members.

If you are concerned about student conduct, academic honor, fraternity or sorority relations, or college enthusiasm, each of these areas is served by student groups chosen for that purpose.

I know the reaction to such advice sometimes is, yes, but what happens? How do we get the word to the faculty or the administration?

At Colorado College there has been for many years a Committee on Undergraduate Life. Recently its student representation has been increased, so that at a typical Sunday evening meeting (coffee and cake in some faculty home) equal numbers of students, faculty, and administrative officers sit together. Their assignment is to take up any problem or project reported by some member as having importance to Colorado College student life. Two years ago, for instance, the all-College Symposium was conceived in the meetings of CUL. Last year the jurisdiction of the Student Conduct Committee was broadened after several CUL sessions on the subject.

These things have been published in various places, but I have found constant repetition is seldom too much to get the word around.

Often a student may wish to take his interests direct to an administrative office. One of the distinguishing marks we try to keep on a smaller college campus is the open door to the top officer concerned. You will find few "Assistants to the _____" here. The deans, directors, business and development officers lead busy lives; each of them expects, however, that seeing students will be part of what makes that life busy. This policy includes my office. About one-third of the time my duties take me away from the immediate to correspondence, speech writing, meetings, phoning and reading connected with College work. The remaining third is for seeing people who find it helpful to their own affairs to see me.

Thus we can communicate to each other as we need and wish to; and thus by communicating we help each other better to do whatever it is that each has come here to do.

Greek News

Alpha Phi: After an exciting Inspiration week and a surprise initiation, the Alpha Phi welcomed seven new actives: Pamela Bays, Mary Ann Bishop, Jan Okamura, Suzy Patterson, Nancy Stauffer, Susan Schenert, and Lynn Sipple. Saturday's initiation was followed by a banquet at Moors, with Rev. Burton as guest speaker.

Delta Gamma: The DGs combined forces with the Thetas for their costume dance Saturday night. Sunday morning they were up early for a skating party and breakfast with the Phi Deltas. That afternoon the girls took on the faculty in a game of touch football at their annual DG-Faculty Picnic at Monument Park.

Gamma Phi Beta: Wednesday, September 19, the Gamma Phi Betas were honored by their alumni chapter at a tea for winning the scholarship trophy for which all sororities on campus compete. The girls were especially honored that the national president of Gamma Phi Beta, Mrs. Whittenberg, was in attendance.

On Sunday the Gamma Phi held their scholarship dinner at the Swiss Chalet. Dr. Seay was the guest speaker and gave a talk on the definition of scholarship. Miss Moon was honored as the member of the administration and faculty who has helped the group most in all areas during the past year.

Kappa Alpha Theta: In addition to the DG-Theta costume dance Saturday, the Thetas were hostesses at a dessert and informal dance for the Betas last Monday night. Saturday morning the Thetas and Phi Gams will have breakfast at the Theta Lodge before attending the All-Greek Service at Shove. The Thetas and Figis also plan a picnic in October and a Thanksgiving dinner for Colorado Springs officers.

Kappa Kappa Gamma: Last Thursday night, officers of Kappa Kappa Gamma were treated to pot luck supper at the Kappa house by their alumni advisors. It was a fun, and a very profitable evening. The Kappas are also looking forward to a dinner, to be hosted by the Betas, to be held next Thursday.

Last Tuesday, the Sigma Chi's, led by Alex Yankovich at the quarterback slot, came from a 14-0 deficit at half time to defeat the Zeta's 21-14. The Sigs unleashed an aerial attack that the Zeta's defenses just couldn't cope with.

The Thursday game between the Kappa Sigs and the Phi Deltas was postponed due to heavy rains, even though the Phi Deltas appeared, ready to mud it.

Mason Elected Chairman Of Council for Libraries

Elsworth Mason, librarian at Colorado College, has been elected chairman of the newly organized Colorado Council for Library Development.

Mason was elected to head the 12-man council at its organization meeting September 21 at the Colorado State Office Building in Denver.

The council, composed of representatives of library organizations and interested citizens, will advise the State Library Department and State Education Department about programs for extending Colorado's library resources.

Mason said one of the first projects the council will take under consideration is a detailed pilot study of the needs of a particular community in Colorado for library service. He said the pilot study would serve as the basis for a state-wide study.

A native of Waterbury, Conn., Mason has been librarian at the independent college of arts and sciences here since 1958. He was a key figure in planning the college's new $1,250,000 Charles Learning Tuff Library, to be dedicated at Homecoming Oct. 12.

The Colorado College librarian is an authority on James Joyce. He is the author of numerous articles on Joyce and co-author of one book, The Critical Writings of James Joyce, published in 1959 by Viking Press.

Mason, who holds a Ph.D. degree in English literature from Yale University, is also the author of articles on western history, librarianship, and English and comparative literature.

He came to Colorado College in 1954 as reference librarian. He previously served in the reference department at the Yale University library, as serials librarian at the University of Wyoming, and helped to recatalog the library at Montana State College.

Also a lecturer in English literature at Colorado College, Mason taught English at Williams College and at Marlboro College.

He is a council member of the American Library Association, Vice president of the Bibliographical Center for Research in Denver, and a member of the Association of College and Reference Libraries, Yale Library Associates, Modern Language Association, Wyoming State Historical Association, and the Historical Society of the Pikes Peak Region.

Travelogues Will Begin September 30

Colorado College campus (both faculty and undergraduates) should note an unusual entertainment enterprise just about to commence its third season. In the "Horizons Unlimited Adventure Travelogues" this town is fortunate to have appearing in series the same top quality experts as are enjoyed by the thousands who attend National Geographic programs in Washington, D.C., and the other major auspices from New York to San Francisco.

Theodore Fisher Management begins its '62-'63 season on Sunday, the thirteenth, with Russ Potter's personal narration of his India—Land of the Spectacular at the Fine Arts Center Theatre. This and all following programs are given at 2:30 p.m. and 4:30 p.m. Sunday with repeat on the Monday nights at 7:30. All programs present two full reels of full color motion pictures synchronized with the fast running narration. All occasions provide much more than a superficial, pictorial view of lands treated, in fact "in depth," for India, for instance, its very old civilizations in marked contrast with the industrial and cultural revolution that today is remaking the land.

At intervals throughout winter and spring the offerings will be on Provincial France, Germany, Great Britain, Legendary Mediterranean, Lands Down Under (Australia, New Zealand and New Guinea.) As an extra after the series, Phil Walker will bring his fascinating Hang Kong and his Indonesia.

Interested persons may contact Mr. Fisher for information and reservations, ME 2-6849, P. O. Box 146. Seat sale for series and individual programs, Chinook Book Shop, 208½ N. Tejon.

Dedication of Tutt Library Heads Homecoming Activities

Colorado College's annual homecoming will get underway on October 12 with a special dedication ceremony of the new Charles Learning Tutt Library. This building, which cost $1,250,000, is designed to house 3,000,000 books and seat 500 readers. It is a four-storied structure which will replace the old Coburn Library. Earlier this year when the building was completed, the entire faculty and student body turned out to move in books from Coburn. The money came from a grant from the University for the construction of this library. The El Pomar Foundation.

This year, homecoming activities will again include a number of special events. Among these events are a second annual Alumni Forum, the fourth annual reunion of the Freedom and Authority seminar, and a music lecture by Professor Albert Seay.

The Alumni Forum will be held on October 12 at 8 p.m. The topic of discussion will be the Colorado College Centennial which will take place twelve years from now. Participating in the forum will be professors Robert E. Brown, Louis Geiger, Neale R. Reinitz, and R. A. Edgar Benton, '50. Serving as moderator will be the Dean of the College, Lloyd E. Wormer.

On Saturday morning, October 6, following the alumni officers' breakfast there will be an assembly of the Freedom and Authority seminar in the seminar room of the Charles Learning Tutt Library.

The focal point of the discussion will be William Golding's Lord of the Flies, a novel suggesting that man is so tainted by evil that he is certain to corrupt any society. It is only open to alumni of the college's senior level seminar.

While the Freedom and Authority seminar meet, Professor Seay of the college's music department will deliver a lecture on "Music Experiences and the Electronic World." A discussion period will follow. The amphitheater of the new Olin Hall, which was dedicated September 18, will serve as the lecture hall.

At 11:00 a.m. of this same morning, President Louis T. Benezet will deliver his annual report to the alumni in the W.E.S. room of Rastall Center, rather than at the upcoming luncheon.

Other Saturday activities will include an alumni-faculty coffee hour in Olin Hall, the annual alumni luncheon and rally at Rastall Center, the CC-CSC football game at Washburn Field, open house at alumni headquarters at Rastall, C-men party, class reunion dinners and the annual homecoming dance at the Broadmoor hotel.

Homecoming activities will conclude with church services in Rastall Chapel at 11 a.m. Sunday morning.

Freshman Class Election Results

Hugh Bell has been elected as freshman class president. Phil McCoy is vice-president and Beth Mcneberg is secretary-treasurer. Congratulations and best of luck.

Aspiring Politicians Given Opportunity

Colorado College has established a Center for Practical Politics which is designed to encourage student interest in the current political campaigns. Plans are being worked out for an official opening prior to Homecoming on October 12. The center hopes to engage a principal figure in Colorado College to head the dedication ceremonies.

The new center has already set up three rooms in Palmer Hall. This was done with the approval of the independent college of arts and sciences. It will be student run and a permanent campus institution for collecting, analyzing, discussing and disseminating information concerning political affairs.

The center will provide campus organizations for both the Republican and Democratic parties. The students will be encouraged to work for the party of their own choice. Professor of political science Glenn E. Brooks said, "The center will give them a chance to take part in real politics." This chance will be evidenced in a scheduled campaign for campus wide voter registration. Max Power, a senior from Denver, who is the center's chairman of the board of directors, said that the center would secure a list of the faculty and students of legal voting age. They will each be contacted personally to determine whether or not they have registered. Also provided will be information and assistance in absentee registration. Efforts will be made to enable students to work at the various campaign headquarters, as well as in precinct work and in the various campaign organizations.

The center will also attempt to bring state political candidates to the campus to deliver speeches or lectures to interested groups. Partisan and non-partisan information will be available on request. Eventually research assistance may be made available to students doing research in some area of politics. This aid will include funds, information, and contacts.

All this, Professor Brooks said, will help the students get into grassroots politics and to work with the various political candidates.

Registration of Social Events

The ASCC Social Coordinating Committee calls for all social events to be registered with the Director of Student Activities in the new Activities Center, downstairs Rastall Center.

Social events are defined as any non-academic organized event sponsored by a Colorado College campus organization and/or a function involving more than thirty students.

At least ten days before the date of an event, the Social Chairman or other responsible officer of the sponsoring organization has the responsibility of formally registering the event with the Director of Student Activities.

REGISTRATION simply involves an indication of the date of the planned event, the hours, location, sponsoring organization and chaperones and their mailing addresses.

CANCELLATION or CHANGES IN THE SOCIAL CALENDAR—Should the need for cancellation of a registered event occur, the Social Chairman or other responsible officer must inform the office of the Director of Student Activities who will in turn make whatever notifications are necessary.

Planning for outdoor events should always include an alternative in case of inclement weather.

ALL CHANGES of dates for registered social events must be made through the ASCC Social Coordinating Committee. The Social Chairman of the sponsoring organization or other responsible officer should present the request for change to the chairman of the Social Coordinating Committee (Steve Sabom) who will in turn consult the master college calendar in conference with the Director of Rastall Center and the Director of Student Activities.

LATE REGISTRATION of social events, that is, those which request registration after the deadline of ten days prior to the event, can take place only upon the approval granted by the Chairman of the Social Coordinating Committee, again, in conference with the Director of Rastall Center and the Director of Student Activities with reference to the master college calendar.

CHAPERONES—All all-school events and any other events scheduled by any organization in the spring calendar meeting of the ASCC Social Coordinating Committee, including all named traditional social events shall be considered major social events and shall require the traditional two faculty/staff chaperones.

Chaperones and their addresses may be indicated at the time of registration or up to seven days prior to the event. In accordance with the decision of the Social Coordinating Committee last spring, picnics will be registered at least 24 hours prior to the event with the social chairman of Intrafraternity Council (Tony Cherin). All other picnics shall be registered in the office of the Director of Student Activities. Picnics need not be chaperoned.

All off-campus social events except picnics shall require two faculty/staff chaperones.

Events other than those described above, and those held on campus, may meet the chaperone requirements of the ASCC Social Coordinating Committee by having present, and with their expressed consent, the official adviser of the sponsoring organization or the appointed head resident.

CARDS will be sent to chaperones a few days prior to the event. They will call for comments from the chaperones as to their opinion on the general success of the event, courtesies extended, student attendance, entertainment, etc. Social chairmen will have the right to review these cards at any time following their return to the proper office.

Cards pertaining to sorority events will be returned directly to the office of the Dean of Women; to the Dean of Men in the case of fraternities, and all others to the office of the Director of Student Activities.

Any irregularity emerging from the reports of either the chaperones or the Social Chairman or other officers of the sponsoring organization will be handled by the Deans of Men and Women.

Any failure to comply with the full registration procedure as outlined herein by the ASCC Social Coordinating Committee, including the meeting of stated deadlines, will result in the dropping of the event.

The ASCC Coordinating Committee stands ready to interpret the above outline of procedures and is meeting weekly to consider all phases of the college social program.

The office of the Director of Student Activities (Activities Center—Rastall) is open from 1-5 p.m. every weekday afternoon to assist students interested in the planning and scheduling of social events.

As I write this, there are troops marching in Mississippi. Marching to quell riots on a Mississippi college campus. The realities of the world have intruded there, but looking out across this sunny campus I wonder if they will ever intrude here.

In Mississippi the world came to the campus. Fortunately or hopefully, we will never have reality forced on us at this campus by the end of a bayonet. But we must face reality. I am not asking for a children's crusade against the ills of the world. I don't think that we can answer the big questions here, but we can prepare for them.

Let us realize that Colorado College is most of our life for four years and begin to give our actions a greater significance and substance. Let us realize that a campus, however many buildings are built, is dead until the students begin to take the responsibility for making the college more than a supermarket for prettily packaged ideas.

How can this be done? It would be simple to answer this question and to mobilize the creative force necessary to change the lethargic attitude here, if there was a glamorous cause, as there is in Mississippi. But there is not this glamorous cause, and the change is necessary. Unfortunately most of life is not standing in the breach for human rights, but working on mundane things. However until we prove that we can handle mundane problems, how can we expect responsibility in significant things. While there is a man sitting at the door of the library to see that we can't steal books, how can we expect to be treated as mature people by the administration.

Let us face the mundane facts of college life and conquer them and then we will be able to face without distraction the real responsibilities of our life here. Let us not allow Colorado College to become hermetically sealed from the world. JAFFE

Dear Sirs:

May we request you to invite representatives of the Communist Party to speak at forums of the student body of your school in the 1962-1963 college year, either in the form of lectures, by participation in symposia, or in debates?

During the past year, Communist spokesmen addressed more than 30 college and universities which were attended by approximately 75,000 students and townspeople. The colleges and universities included among others: Harvard Law School, University of Chicago, Brown University, Columbia University, University of Oregon, Western University of Wisconsin, Swarthmore, New York University, University of Pennsylvania, Washington University, Stanford, University of Minnesota, Rees College, Colgate College, Brandeis University, City College of New York, Hamilton College, Hunter College, Temple University, Upsala, Bowdoin, and many others.

It is clear from this that the student wish to hear the Communist viewpoint from bona fide spokesmen. Students in their search for knowledge apparently are not satisfied to learn about Communism from anti-Communists. They desire a fair exchange of opinion on the supreme problems facing our country, with all viewpoints represented and they reject the widespread practice of denouncing Communism without affording the Communists an opportunity to be heard.

Yet in a number of cases Communists have been denied this opportunity. One pretext used to bar Communists is that the Communist Party has not registered under the McCarran Act. This is true but this matter is now before the courts. The courts, including the Supreme Court, are yet to rule on the position of the Communist Party that registration would deprive the Communists of their rights under the First, Fifth, Eighth, and Fourteenth Amendments of the Constitution and that the enforcement of this law would establish a precedent to destroy every vestige of American democracy. Also that registration compels perjury, self-incrimination, and a false confession of guilt. Communists are not foreign agents, do not commit acts of sabotage, espionage, or deception, do not seek to hide their views.

Moreover, the Attorney General has stated that the McCarran Act is not intended to prevent the public activities of the Communist Party. To ban the Communist speakers on this ground is therefore grossly improper and unjust.

Another pretext used to discriminate against Communists is that some spokesmen have served prison sentences under the Smith Act. But if political imprisonment is a bar to speaking, then a Henry David Thoreau, who served imprisonment for refusal to pay taxes as a protest against the Mexican War, would be excluded, as would the Reverend Martin Luther King, thrice imprisoned for his courageous stand against Negro oppression. By MAX POWER — President ASCC

The Tuff Library inspection system continues to raise questions and controversy among students, faculty and the administration of Colorado College. To simply deplore the inspection system, however, is not enough.

The problems of book loss and mutilation which brought the system here have to be met. The fact that a few students, and a few persons from outside the college community, will take advantage of a more open system remains, no matter how honorable the vast majority of students intend to be.

However, we remain unconvinced that the rigid inspection system is the only alternative to continuing book loss. In accordance with this belief, the Student Policy Committee of ASCC has been asked to explore as fully as possible other alternative solutions to the problem.

Some possible programs already suggested include the signing of an honor pledge by students leaving the library, some sort of spot check system or the use of a student identification card in place of inspection.

These are but a few examples of the approaches which students can and have developed to meet a problem. If the Student Policy Committee and ASCC are to find a workable, positive alternative to the inspection system, as well as one which represents you as students, we will need your ideas and suggestions.

It is our belief that students are concerned both about the inspection system and the problem which makes it necessary. If they are, and if they are willing to come forward to express their concern and their ideas, then student initiative can bring about a positive solution to a serious problem.

It is hoped that all of you will consider the problem at hand, and then come to your elected representatives with your conclusions. We are open to—indeed we need—your help in this situation.

Budget Request Slips

Proposed budget request slips for ASCC may be picked up from Steve Frink, 116 E. San Rafael, Ext. 302. Budgets must be itemized, and the budget requests will be subject to review by the Finance Committee and the Executive Council of ASCC.

ber of heads of government in today's world would be barred, including President Sukarno of Indonesia and Prime Minister Nehru of India, both of whom have served long prison sentences.

President Arthur S. Fleming of the University of Oregon, former Secretary of Health, Education and Welfare in the Eisenhower Cabinet, rejected the demand to bar Gus Hall from appearing before the student body, stating: "If our university devalues from the policy (freedom of expression) it has followed, it will be placed in the position of being a second-class institution in the eyes of men and women who truly understand the role of a university. It would be giving up its birthright." He was honored for his stand with Alexander Meiklejohn by the American Association of University Professors.

Arrangements for Communist speakers can be made by addressing the Lecture and Information Bureau. Where colleges or student groups are in a position to do so, we would appreciate the usual fee and expenses paid other speakers. Where schools or groups are financially not in a position to cover the expenses involved, we shall try to do so to the best of our ability. May we hear from you?

Sermon Title: "The Individual and the Community."

We live amidst the tragic even of our contemporary world such world wide disease and starvation, riots and deep seated prejudice upon the campus of a State University where one would expect to find responsibility, open-mindedness, and the love for all humanity. The individual wonders who on earth is his significance and how he can play a significant part and a responsible role in society. It is hoped in this sermon to show the Christian Church as a place where the individual finds his worth and at the same time his part of a responsible community within society which has a prophetic role of speaking the word of God to the individual and to the society which contains him in love and judgment.

Bridge Party

Sunday afternoon, October 7, there will be a bridge party sponsored by the Rastall Center Board. It will begin right after dinner and continue to 3:30 p.m. If it is successful, it will become a regular event. It will also lead to a bridge workshop for those interested in learning. All bridge players are encouraged to come as a fun-filled afternoon is in store. Other information may be obtained by contacting Jean Torcom, Special Events Chairman, Rastall Center Board.

Dear Editor:

There is one apparent weakness to the deferred rush system as it now exists at CC. This is the consistent recurrence of dirty rushing. This flagrant violation is defined as talking about a fraternity off campus with a Greek. At least this is the most important aspect of the newly founded system. Hank Rose, president of the I.F.C., offered his solution in the form of a penalty for the violators. Would it not be easier to merely extend the use of the Honor System into this field? If students were pledged, while off campus, not to talk to a fraternity man about fraternities, yet permitted to be with whomever they please, Greek or independent, perhaps the problem would be eliminated.

Application Period Will Open For European Study and Tours

The application period for spring semester study programs conducted at the universities of Vienna and Freiburg by the Institute of European Studies will open officially on Monday, October 8.

Each program includes formal classes, lectures, seminars and field-study in Europe, and is designed to fulfill usual course requirements at its academic level.

The program at the University of Vienna will admit those with sophomore or junior standing as of February 2, 1963. It will combine English-taught liberal arts and general studies course, intensive German language instruction, regular university courses taught in German for those competent in that language, and supplementary lectures and seminars. Previous knowledge of German is not required.

The "Das Deutsche Semester" program at the University of Freiburg is intended only for juniors. It will stress political science, German language study, German philosophy and literature, and European history. All classes will be taught in German.

Each program requires a C-plus college average. The Institute said admission will depend on the student's academic achievement and the recommendations of his dean and department chairman and of a professor familiar with his recent college work.

The application period will close next December 10. Students will sail for Europe from New York February 2.

A descriptive brochure on the two programs is available from the Institute of European Studies, 35 E. Wacker Dr., Chicago. The Institute, a non-profit educational institution, also conducts full year programs in Vienna and Freiburg and in Paris. There is no spring program in Paris.

Officials said students will be led by academic guides on field-study trips in Western Europe. Students in the Vienna program will visit England, France, Belgium, Switzerland, Austria, Germany, Italy and Spain, while those in the Freiburg program will travel in Germany, Switzerland and Italy.

It was pointed out, however, that the study trips are not mere tours. They are strictly subordinated to classwork and are planned as integral parts of the overall educational program. The Institute said that more than 200 U.S. college and universities have accepted credits earned by their Institute programs.

The Open Door

The 1963 Symposium on "The Contemporary Art and the Citizen"
By Associate Dean Fred A. Sondernmann

I appreciate the opportunity of writing a statement on the forthcoming Symposium for the TIGER, and through the TIGER for the entire student body at Colorado College.

As most members of the campus community know by now, we plan to begin the second semester not with regular classes, but with a special week devoted to a detailed and thorough examination of an area of broad interest to the well-educated person. This year, that area of inquiry will be in the field of the contemporary arts, including Music, Literature, Painting, and Art and Literary Criticism. In future years, we will shift to other areas. Suggestions that we devote a week to a study of the impact of automation or to an examination of the future of socialism have already been made, and I feel it is a sign of real interest when students and faculty are already concerned about the 1964 version of the Symposium.

Meanwhile, we are working very hard to get the 1963 program in shape. In my nine years at Colorado College, I do not remember any academic program that has been as thoroughly discussed by large numbers of students, and in which student opinion has played such a significant role. I have been delighted not only with the interest that has been displayed, but also with the many constructive suggestions that have come forth and with the real sense of responsibility that has been demonstrated.

We held a couple of preliminary planning sessions in the spring, to which all students and faculty were invited. At these sessions, we confirmed the choice of the general subject area and discussed what persons, in what fields, might be able to contribute most to our discussion. (The fact of the matter is that we are, in effect, bringing in a visiting faculty for a week—and this is not an easy task.) During the summer, I corresponded with a large number of potential participants, asking them whether they might be interested in coming for the Symposium. The replies were so encouraging and enthusiastic that during recent weeks we found ourselves confronted with the dilemma of having at least three times as many potential participants—people who had expressed an interest in coming—as we could possibly hope to invite. Thus, the last couple of weeks were devoted to a series of meetings, again open to all students and involving a large number of them, to try to decide on the persons whom we really wanted to have with us.

The letters of invitation are now being written, and until we have definite acceptances, it would probably not be stutable for me to list our hoped-for guest lecturers and performers. Naturally, as their definite acceptances come in, we will keep the campus community informed of the way in which the program shapes up. For the moment, it will suffice to say that 1) the persons whom we hope to have with us are of absolutely top-level caliber; any college or university would be proud to have them on campus; 2) I share the conviction of the very great majority of those students and faculty who have cooperated in this that the Symposium can be an intellectual experience without precedent on this—or any—campus, if all of us, as individuals and as members of a community of learning, wish to make it so. The purpose of the enterprise is to enable us to inform ourselves about contemporary developments in the various art forms, and on such related questions as the relationship between the artist and the public. I am convinced that, with hard work to make all necessary arrangements, and with any luck at all, the week of January 13th, 1963, will be one that many of us will remember for a long time to come as a highlight of our years at Colorado College. This is not to say that everything has always gone perfectly

CC Professor Reassembles 14th Century Satirical Poem

Dr. Thomas Ross, CC English professor, spent a summer of literary sleuthing in the British Isles into the origins of a six-century old "poem of protest." This quest has produced the first eclectic text of the work called "A Satire on Edward II." This poem was probably set down sometime between 1318 and 1327, before the end of Edward II's reign.

An associate professor of English at the independent college of arts and sciences, Dr. Ross has been busy since his return reassembling the poem from three different manuscripts. These manuscripts exist in the National Library at Oxford. The oldest manuscript which is at the Library in Scotland, is Professor Ross' basis for the revision, additional material being taken from the other two scripts.

In commenting on the poem, Professor Ross said it abounds in satirical portraits of the clergy, the legal professions, doctors and tax collectors. He says, "In some ways the anonymous author is as good as Chaucer, especially in his satirical attacks on social evils."

The 14th century author appears to have been critical of the clergy because many did not keep to their vows, particularly that of chastity. He was also critical of the medical profession and frequently charged them with ignorance. "He was often funny, oftentimes bitter," Professor Ross said, "always expressing sympathy for the poor." He seems to have been a member of the ecclesiastical world. This is indicated by his ability to write and his rather obvious pious attitude.

The poem employed iambic pentameter and alliteration. The language is the English of a period when French was still the official language of England. However, it was not so much an imitation of French verse as the most literary output of that period.

Professor Ross returned to full-time teaching last fall. He had been Director of Admissions at CC for three years following his return from Salzburg, Germany in 1958. He had been Associate Director of the Salzburg Seminar in American Studies for two years.

An alumni of CC, Professor Ross received his Bachelor's degree magna cum laude in 1946. Upon graduation, he held a teaching fellowship at the college while he completed work for his master's degree the following year. He received his doctorate in 1951 at the University of Michigan and consequently held a scholarship there while doing advanced studies.

Professor Ross returned to CC in 1951, was made assistant professor and assistant dean in 1953.

Casting Completed for 'The Crucible'

Director Harold C. MacMillan has completed the casting for the coming all-school production of "The Crucible," a two act play by Arthur Miller. The play will be presented on October 25, 26 and at 8:20 p.m. in Perkins Hall. The cast in order of appearance: McClay as Betty Paris, J. Gimes as Reverend Paris, P. Frank as Tituba, A. Zech as Abigail Williams, B. James as Susanna Bassett, G. Fichter as Ann Putnam, D. Greenberg as Thomas Putnam, L. Biggs as Mercy Lewis, Komer as Mary Warren, C. Komer as John Proctor, P. Hylton as Rebecca Nurse, J. Fox as Les Corey, N. Cloak as Reverend Parris, S. Fertig as Elizabeth Proctor, V. Mendenhall as Francis Nurse, L. Fast as Ezekiel Cheever, D. Wilkenson as John Wilbur, J. Dyson as Judge Hathorne, Hylton as Deputy-Governor Danforth and E. Geary as Sara Peabody.

"The Crucible" is the actual story of a 1962 witch trial during which one John Proctor refused to admit to being a witch, under penalty of death. Author Miller uses the story as a springboard for his disguised personal attack on McCarthyism, which had reached its peak during 1952, when Miller wrote the play.

smoothly, or that anyone can guarantee that every single aspect of the week will be an unqualified success. It is in the nature of planning a program that not all preferences can be taken into account. The final program will exclude some names to which some of us (myself included) were much of us invited. One simply cannot do everything in a week and with a limited budget. One has to make choices—and in light of the high quality of so many potential participants, these choices were often not easy to make. On one point I can reassure those students who may have felt that we were omitting the social and fun element of the week: there will be plenty of that, and it will be of high entertainment quality, too. I am delighted that the ASCC and the Rastall Center Board are so constructively and imaginatively working on the social program for the week, and I pledge them my full cooperation. I think that when the final plans are out, the great majority of CC students will find that the program contains much of interest and appeal to them, and that the week promises to provide an experience which few, if any, students at other schools ever have. No student at CC will want to pass it up.

In the meantime, more than 50 of us, students and faculty alike, are working on a host of committees to make all arrangements for the Symposium; to see to it that the campus will really be alive with new, different, challenging activities during the week. We can use more help. If you are interested, please let me know. You'll be put to work without delay on planning and executing portions of the program. All suggestions are also warmly welcomed. Most of all, we welcome the interest which has already been shown and which, I feel confident, will increase as we approach the beginning of the second semester and the Symposium on "The Contemporary Arts and the Citizen."

Rastall Center Board To Attend Conference

Thursday, October 4, members of the Rastall Center Board left to attend the Region 10 Conference of College Union Boards. It is being held this weekend at Colorado State University in Fort Collins. The conference will continue through Saturday morning. Members will have the opportunity to exchange information and ideas with students from other colleges and universities. There will be workshops and discussion groups covering every phase of college union operation, and much valuable information will be obtained. Those attending the conference are:

Skip Meis, chairman; Sue Hille, executive secretary; Phyllis Nolting, business manager; Joe Moore, cultural affairs; Karen Melville, hospitality; Jean Torem, special events; and John Lewis, recreation. Mr. Blackburn, director of Rastall Center and Mr. Oden, director of student activities, will accompany the group.

Great Singers' Appearance Highlights Symphony Orchestra Concert Season

Eileen Farrell will be the special attraction in a star-studded season of concerts to be presented during the fall and winter by the Denver Symphony Orchestra, conducted by Saul Caston.

Miss Farrell, acclaimed one of the world's greatest singers, will appear with the orchestra on February 26.

Another high point of the series of 16 evenings of live music will be the special holiday presentation of the beloved Tchaikovsky ballet, "The Nutcracker." The ballet will be presented in its entirety by the Denver Civic Ballet, with the Denver Symphony Orchestra providing orchestral support. It will be on Dec. 18. The production will be directed by Enrique Martinez, assistant director of the American Ballet Theater.

Other features of the varied season will be the appearance on November 6, of Presti and Lagoya, gifted guitar duo, and the November 20 concert featuring the Beaux Arts Trio, famous instrumental ensemble acclaimed on both sides of the Atlantic. It includes Menahem Pressler, pianist; Daniel Gilet, violinist; and Bernard Greenhouse, cellist.

Guest conductor, Howard Hanson, will appear with orchestra in a concert on March 12. Famous as a composer as well as a conductor, he long has been director of the Eastman School of Music.

In addition to Miss Farrell, another vocalists will be heard during the season. She is Maria Stader, soprano, one of Europe's celebrated singers and known as the "Swiss Nightingale." Concerts with many major American orchestras last season brought her new recognition on this side of the Atlantic.

The popularity of piano soloists is provided for in ample fashion with seven pianists scheduled to appear during the season. Among these are Glenn Gould, Eugene Istomin and John Browning.

Gould, the eccentric genius of the keyboard, will play with the orchestra on March 5. Limiting himself to 20 concerts this season, he requested that he be heard with the Denver Symphony.

Istomin, an American, is rated among our great pianists and is in great demand as a soloist. He will play here on January 15. Browning, Denver's own pianist who has scaled the heights in recent years, will be heard on March 19, the final concert of the season. He recently was chosen to play with the Boston Symphony in a program marking the opening of the Lincoln Center for the Performing Arts in New York City.

Still another top-ranking pianist on the list is Grant Johannesen. In addition to the many people who have heard him play with major orchestras, additional millions know him through his appearances on the Bell Telephone Hour telecasts.

The first soloist of the season will be Julius Katchen, rated a "master pianist" in 42 countries, who will play with the orchestra on Oct. 30. Joseph Bunovetz, a young pianist who won acclaim during last spring's Tchaikovsky Competition in Moscow, will play on November 7. Michel Block, young winner of the coveted Levett Award, will appear on February 12.

Rounding out the list of 17 celebrated artists to be heard during the season are cellist Zora Neleva, who will be the guest soloist on February 19, and Eric Friedman, gifted young violinist who will play on January 22.

The gala opening concert, traditionally an all-orchestral event, will be on October 23. All concerts will be in the Auditorium Theater, including the Eileen Farrell concert. For this event, single ticket prices will be increased.

Before the opening of the box office in the Denver May-D&F on October 1, inquiries and reservations will be received by the office of the Denver Symphony Society, 1031 16th St., Denver.

Tiger SPORTS

Intramurals

The Betas' four-man golf team, averaging 80½ strokes at the Patty Jewett Golf Course last weekend, captured the Annual Colorado College Intramural Golf Tournament in a breeze. Bill Casey and Pete Goodbody led the Betas to their easy victory with a 77 and 78 respectively. The Sigma Chi team finished second, followed by the Kappa Sig and the Zetas.

Bob Heiny, a junior college transfer from Mesa College in Grand Junction, fired a fine 74 to take a three stroke lead in the race for medalist honors over the low ten men who qualified to play an additional round next Saturday at Patty Jewett to determine the individual championship.

Basketball

Basketball practice will begin on Monday, October 15. All students, freshmen and upperclassmen, who are interested in trying out, are asked to report to the gymnasium in Cossitt Hall at 4:00 p.m. on this date.

David Bull topped the twenty entries from Slocum Hall, winning the golf trophy for his wing—Second North, when he shot an 81.

The low ten qualifiers who will play the second round next Saturday to determine the individual championship are: Bob Heiny (74), Bill Casey (77), Pete Goodbody (78), Bud Wilson (80), Tom Walsman (81), Dave Bull (81), Mike Isfeld (84), Lloyd Yost (84), Lee Hunt (84), Steve Wollman (85).

Tigers Lose To Tigers

Fort Hays State proved to be a poor host as the Colorado College Tigers lost a 33 to 0 gridiron contest last Saturday night at Hays, Kansas. A former CC student, Dave Parker, paced the Fort Hays offense as he ran for two touchdowns and passed for two others.

The Fort Hays Tigers scored once in the first quarter on a two yard run by Parker, and tallied again in the second period on a fifty-seven yard pass from Parker to end Cliff Leiker.

The Hays Tigers iced the game in the third quarter by tallying three times. The first came on an eleven yard scamper by Steve Worley, the second was a sixty-one yard punt return by quarterback Dave Parker, and the final six-pointer was made on a twenty-four yard pass from Parker to halfback Royce Hamala.

This was the second loss for Colorado College after winning their opener from St. Mary's 14-7. The CC Tigers have a week off before they open their 1962 Rocky Mountain Conference schedule against the Colorado State College Bears on Saturday, October 13 at Washburn Field. This game will highlight the Homecoming festivities.

In RMC action last Saturday Western State was downed by Flagstaff State 20-7. Drake routed Colorado State College 21-0, and New Mexico Highlands edged Colorado Mines 25-20. The only conference winner was Adams State as they topped Eastern New Mexico 24 to 13.

Slocum Intramurals

The football schedule after two weeks already is beginning to show favorites. Second West, pushball champions, seems the strongest and most likely to capture its second championship. Fourth West and Second South comprise the next two teams in contention.

Monday's schedule saw Third West defeat Fourth North 8-0. Fourth West defeated Third North 14-0, while First North battled Second South to a 0-0 tie. First South fell to Second North, with no score turned in.

Tuesday, the Soractic 7 defaulted to Third West. First West romped Arthur House 12-0, while Fourth West was humbling Fourth North 18-0. Second West showed its superiority in ravaging Third North 28-6.

Wednesday's action found Arthur House coming back to defeat Third West 12-8, as nearby Third North had to forfeit to Second North. Second West showed its defensive strength in gaining two safeties against Fourth North to continue its winning streak. Second North defeated Third South, with no score turned in.

All teams were idle Thursday, while more games were rescheduled. Friday, Soractic 7 got back into the win column in defeating Fourth West, with no score turned in. Third South, a dark horse in the race, defeated Arthur House, with no score turned in.

This week should decide definite league leaders and possibly even the championship. Get out and see some of these games. You'll be surprised at some of the talent there is to be found in the Slocum Intramural League.

Flat Intramurals

The Betas and the Phi Gams literally knocked heads together last Tuesday in the Fraternity Intramural touch football league with the Phi Gams finally coming out on top (24-20). It was a see-saw battle all the way with stellar performances by John Simus, Rich Love, and Gregg Smith paving the road to the Phi Gams victory.

Soccer Team Improves, Upsets Denver U., 2-0

Thus far the soccer team has done an excellent job in getting off the ground. They have to date played three games all of which were not only instructive but all enlightening. The first, against the Air Force Academy, helped the slightly confused CC 11 to put themselves together as a team as to begin to show what they were worth. The game was lost 2-1 but necessary experience was gained. The following Saturday the team travelled to the University of Colorado and bowed to a more experienced team 5-3. However, the team put on an excellent showing and was congratulated by the Boulder and CC coaches alike. Finally, last Saturday the now well organized team played Denver University and showed they were no longer a bunch of individuals by carrying home a 2-0 upset.

It should be noted that although the team has had relative success there have never been more than 18 men at the practices games. Obviously there is room for more. The team now has no equipment for all and would welcome anyone interested to come out on Monday, Wednesdays, and Fridays at 3:30 for practice. Anyone is interested, contact Tony Bryan or Saul Nkiwane.

This is now a trial year for soccer at CC. With a further successful season and further enthusiasm for the sport the college will be able to look forward to soccer as a permanent sport here at Colorado College.

The Colorado College soccer team combined a superior offense with a tight defense to whip straw Denver University 2-0 last Saturday at DU.

This was CC's first victory after dropping two close matches. The Tigers, in their first game, were edged by Air Force Academy 3-1 and the Black and Gold played a high-spirited second game only to be downed by Colorado University 5-3.

In Saturday's match against the Rudolf Geisinger tallied the first goal with only two minutes gone of the first period. Sophomore Abiodun Afonja went up to center in the final period in a brilliant offensive play to give CC a 2-0 advantage.

The Colorado College team dominated the entire match in a victory over the Buffaloes.

Next home game will be against the Colorado School of Mines. Everyone come out and support this team.

Colorado College

SERENE AFTERNOON of studying in one of the Tutt Library lounge areas. As a part of homecoming, the building will be dedicated at 3:30 this afternoon.

Tutt Library Dedication Set For This Afternoon

Colorado College's $1,250,000 Charles Leaming Tutt Library, a departure in library architecture, will be dedicated at homecoming Friday.

Dedicatory ceremonies will get under way at 3:30 p.m. in the atrium of the library, built under a grant from El Pomar Foundation of Colorado Springs and named for the late Charles Leaming Tutt, El Pomar president.

John Evans, honorary chairman of the First National Bank of Denver and a long-time friend of Tutt, will be the principal speaker.

A unique feature of the library is wall-to-wall carpeting on all four floors. Architects of the completely air-conditioned library were Kidmore, Owings and Merrill of Chicago.

The library is designed to hold 500,000 volumes and seat 525 readers. It now houses 180,000 volumes for the 1,200 students and 10 faculty members at the independent college of arts and sciences.

A minimum of walls and corridors creates a feeling of openness throughout the library. Study rooms, lounges and reading areas join stacks on all floors, making the entire collection easily available to readers.

The library encloses 50,000 square feet and provides seminar rooms, lounges, study rooms, open stacks, typing rooms, a well-appointed rare books section, a special collections suite, a fire-proof vault, and student conference rooms.

The main floor has glass walls on four sides, each set back 11 feet under a two-story head, faced with pre-formed concrete aggregate panels. These panels are separated by eight-inch-wide vertical windows. The two-story head is supported at the main level by 18-inch-square concrete pillars which form a colonnade around the glass walls.

The library has been in use since May 16 when the entire faculty and student body at Colorado College turned out to move books in from old Coburn Library, built in 1894.

This is the second million-dollar building to be dedicated at Colorado College in less than a month.

Last Sept. 18, the college officially opened its $1,500,000 Olin Hall of Science, just a block away. The two buildings are a part of a $6,000,000 campus construction program that got under way shortly after President Louis T. Benet became the chief administrator of the 88-year-old college.

Already completed are a student union, residence halls, and a heating plant. Construction now is under way on the first phase of a sports center. The swimming pool and ice rink are to be completed next year.

Librarian at Charles Leaming Tutt Library is Dr. Ellsworth Mason, recently elected chairman of the newly organized Colorado Council for Library Development.

Mason, who holds a Ph.D. degree in English literature from Yale University, is a leading authority on James Joyce. He is the author of numerous articles on Joyce and co-author of one book, "The Critical Writings of James Joyce."

Concert Series Opens Next Week

The Colorado College Winter Concert Series will open with a concert of the famous Hungarian String Quartet on Sunday, October 21st at 4 p.m. in the Fine Arts Center auditorium. The concert will be free to the public.

The Hungarian Quartet, one of the leading international chamber music ensembles, is presently in residence at the University of Colorado. Members of the group are Zoltan Szekely and Michael Kuttner, violins; Denes Kozmazy, viola, and Gabriel Magyar, cello.

The quartet was organized in 1935 in Budapest. By 1938 it had been heard in every major city of western Europe. It made its first American tour in 1948 and in 1950 adopted the United States as its permanent home.

The four musicians have been quartet-in-residence at the University of Southern California, Mills College and the University of Oregon. They were featured participants in 1960 at the Aspen Music Festival.

The program for the College concert will consist of string quartets by Mozart, Bartok and Beethoven. It will be of special interest to hear a quartet by Bela Bartok performed by such an outstanding group of his own compatriots. Bartok's rank as the foremost Hungarian composer is unquestioned and his six string quartets are challenging masterpieces of truly contemporary music. They have frequently been proclaimed the 20th century counterpart to the latest quartets of Beethoven. Exploring the technical and tonal resources of the string ensemble for entirely new sound qualities and combinations, these works are taxing the artistry of the performers to the utmost and belong to the most difficult repertoire of the entire string quartet literature.

New Events, Changes Spark CC Homecoming

This weekend, Blue Key will sponsor the traditional CC Homecoming activities. There will be several new events and some changes in procedure this year in order to make homecoming more meaningful for the present students and alumni.

The festivities will begin with the dedication of Tutt Library at 3:30 this afternoon. A pep rally will be held at 8:30 in the Slocum parking lot. This new event will be highlighted by the announcement of the homecoming queen. The band and cheerleaders will be on hand to build student spirit, and after the rally there will be an all-school twist party.

Instead of holding a parade on Saturday morning as in past years, the fraternities and sororities will compete in house decorations. The theme this year is "Come strip scenes," and the winners will be announced at the homecoming dance. The first student event of the day will be an all-school picnic at 12:00 on the lawn north of Coburn Library. No noon meal will be served in Rastall. Those who have meal tickets will need them in order to be served at the picnic. Others can eat for $1.

At 2 p.m. the Tigers will meet Colorado State College in this year's first conference game. The annual intramural cross-country race will take place during half-time while the Tigerettes and Band provide entertainment. The queen and her court will be introduced, and awards will be given to the cross-country winners.

From 9 p.m. to 1 a.m., the homecoming dance will be held in the main ballroom of the Broadmoor Hotel. There will be two bands to provide a variety of good music. The final homecoming event will be a memorial service in Shove Chapel at 11 a.m. Sunday.

In addition to the student activities, there will be a full schedule of events for alumni. These are of a serious nature, including the second annual Alumni Forum on Friday evening and the "Freedom and Authority" seminar on Saturday morning.

Freedom In Education

The furor caused last week in a seething controversy between Senator Barry Goldwater and Colorado University President Quigg Newton over the basic question of censorship is one which Colorado College students should follow with keen interest.

The origins of this controversy stem back to last spring when the Arizona Senator was met by a picketing group of Young Socialists (Y.P.S.L.) on the Colorado U. campus. Trouble erupted during his speech and he promptly laid the blame upon the Young Socialists. This the Young Socialists strongly denied and the Colorado University administration, the student government, and the Colorado Daily (school newspaper) in turn defended their actions while labeling the Senator's charges as distortions.

The fire was ignited last week when Carl Mitcham, a junior philosophy student, called Goldwater a "fool, a mountebank, a murderer, no better than a common criminal" in the editorial section of the Colorado Daily. This tactless, juvenile onslaught of the Senator did little good. Letters of apology were sent to the Senator by President Newton, the C.U. Board of Regents, the Board of Publications, and the editor of the Colorado Daily. Goldwater, apparently not placated, soundly castigated President Newton: "You (Newton) either do not know what is going on in the university or you don't care and in charity, I will presume the former. To put it briefly, I do doubt that you have the interest or the concern to be in the position you hold."

Newton considered Goldwater's tirade an all out assault on the University. His reply was important and pertinent. He called the staunchly conservative Republican "a symbol of . . . suppressive forces" and felt that the real issue had now been raised: "No longer need we engage in fruitless exchanges about the bad manners of a handful of students whose violent opinions only embarrass their friends and strengthen their enemies . . . We have a genuine democracy of ideas on our campus. We have fought long and hard to achieve it, and the fight has been against those who—like yourself—believe the function of a university is to indoctrinate, rather than to educate; to control thought, rather than to stimulate it . . . We have heard it from the John Birchers, from the Roseks, from the local Goldwaters. It is always the same: 'Our way is the only American way. All others are un-American and subversive. You must silence those who do not agree with us' . . . Senator, I shall not silence them."

This resounding plea for academic freedom and student expression does not only apply to the University of Colorado but to academic institutions throughout the country. Colorado College students should be aware and grateful of the dedicated effort by the present Colorado College administration to uphold the crucially important principles cited by President Newton. College administrations in such schools as C.C. and C.U. are to be commended for acting as the stalwarts and bastions of academic freedom—the truly unique quality of American education.

Harris Sherman.

The oriental percussion rhythms were provided by the Sodom City Five. The weekend revelry was continued Saturday at Col. Shove Chapel

Sunday Morning Worship

October 14, 11:00 A.M.

(Homecoming Sunday)

Preacher: Professor Kenneth W. F. Burton

Worship Leader: Miss Marla Bullock

Sermon Title: "Bought With a Price"

During this Homecoming Weekend Shove Chapel extends a very warm invitation for all College students and to visiting alumni to worship this Sunday morning. Amidst the happiness and celebration of this weekend it is good that we should pause to consider worship. The purpose of this sermon is to remind us that we are not isolated individuals but all we are we owe to many sources and ultimately to God. It is hoped that we may realize great riches that have been made for our spiritual and intellectual freedom, by men and women who have given of themselves and finally by the sacrifice of God Himself that we might have more abundant life.

From the Chair

By MAX POWER—President ASCC

Mr. Harold C. Harmon, college trustee and chairman of the Colorado College Campaign, Tuesday pointed out something which should be made as clear as possible to students here at CC. The new sports complex, now under construction next to Cossitt Hall, is not paid for, and cannot be paid for unless a concerted effort involving students, alumni and college administration is forthcoming.

When completed, the sports complex will enable Colorado College to have a full program of physical exercise and competitive sports of the kind which has benefited many similar colleges. There has been an increasing realization throughout the country that sports should and do play an important part on the liberal arts campus.

The much expanded intra-mural athletics program is the continuation of inter-collegiate athletic competition here at CC underscore this belief. We need, however, the facilities commensurate with our expanded program.

Yet almost $350,000 must yet be raised just to complete the ice rink and the swimming pool now under construction. Another $750,000 will be needed to erect modern gymnasiums and facilities.

It is difficult to gain large foundation grants for the construction of such a complex. But the support of the student body and student participation in the present campaign to finance the complex will give that campaign the boost it needs.

The sports complex will provide a means of recreation and for competitive sporting events which will contribute greatly to the atmosphere and the character of our campus and our student body. Still more is to be gained if the students themselves take an active part in making the complex possible.

Success Guide Outlined for Desirability

By Bob Goldman

Lesson One—How to Become Desirable: It is well-known that desirability decreases with accessibility, that is, for people that are (or seem to be) unavailable can be truly desired. Take, for example, lunch in Rastall Center.

Our first topic will outline the methods with which one may create an aura of inaccessibility and, at the same time, be perfectly available for Mr. or Miss, as the case might be) Right.

The first approach—certainly the most dangerous—is that of the Visiting Lover. This calls for the periodical visit of someone supposedly very dear to you. When she is away, you seem depressed, moody. You are constantly sending bling messages into the little book which you constantly carry around. At dinner, such phrases as "Marcia said that . . ." and "You must meet Marcia (or John, as the case may be). You're our kind of person." will subtly inform everyone that Marcia is indeed a person worthy of admiration and that you, in turn, are a fellow (or girl) to be reckoned with.

The difficulty arrives when the visitor must make appearance. Many a good attempt has failed because of poor planning at this stage.

It is certainly not necessary that you know a person of the qualities you have attributed to your friend. One young fellow went as far as to make excuses ("Alice couldn't come this weekend—American Cup Race, you know." or "Alice had a retrospective last Saturday; critics wouldn't let her get away.") to explain his imaginary sweetheart never coming. Eventually he killed her off in a plane crash over Tangiers. The usual procedure, however, is to carefully arrange your schedule so that you and your visitor are always leaving. If you are careful, your friends will never have to meet the visitor.

Campus functions are excellent occasions for this sort of thing. Wait until a movie has just begun and then rush out, dragging your visitor by the hand. "Was that Joyce and Rudy who just left?" I guess he had to catch a plane. Flew in from Mojave, you know."

When you finally deposit your friend wherever he or she stays between visits, lock yourself in your room and refuse to come out for two days. Finally, leave with a manuscript which you quickly mail in a plain manila envelope.

A surer method of the Lover-In-Absence Plan is to receive phone calls every evening. It is advisable that you be out when these calls come. When you return and find the message that Rudy (or Jane) has called for the sixth night, take the line, "I must resist. If I talked to him (or her) now, I would be lost forever. I must make my way alone. Perhaps there's someone here who will comfort me." Rest assured that there will be.

Naturally you can send yourself letters postmarked Yale or Harvard (Smith or Vassar). Avoid Middle-West or California as these are of inescapable provincialism. Many have discovered that a special delivery stamp can be worthwhile if the letter is delivered very late at night and is accompanied by gentle sobbing or wall kicking. It does no harm to give the impression that you are "involved" in something that has grown too large and that simple love is all that you seek.

The final course of action is the Joy (or Girl)-I'm-Trying-to-Forget Device. This requires a good deal of acting, but is worthwhile. At an advantageous moment you might remember that today is the second anniversary of your introduction. Ask your date not to mention peaches because that was our lover's favorite fruit. When he band plays "Blue Moon" (it always will) break down and insist on leaving the dance floor. Frequently call your partner by the wrong name. "You dance wonderfully, Rudy." "But my name is Clarence."

Workshop Meets Thursdays To Study Writers' Problems

Do you need help in writing? Are the walls of your room pined with rejection slips? If your answer to one or more of these questions is "yes," you need Writers' Workshop. Headed by those two sparkling, witty, and intelligent writers, Charles Meisner and Karen Cairns, Writers' Workshop is open to anyone interested. It will be meeting every Thursday night at 8:00 in Rastall.

The first meeting was held Monday night and was an overwhelming success. Packed to the brim with approximately seventeen people, the room overflowed with intelligence and creativity as poems were read and discussed.

At future meetings the creative mass will divide into groups of three or four to discuss individual problems and concerns in writing.

Freshmen, do you want to impress your English teachers? Come to Writers' Workshop. Bring a piece of your writing (or two or six) and an open receptive mind. Remember: creative, dynamic leadership is not enough. Writers' Workshop needs YOU!

Dominick to Speak To Students Today

U. S. Rep. Peter H. Dominick, Republican candidate for U. S. Senator from Colorado, will speak to CC students in the W.E.S. Lounge at 1 p.m. today. Rep. Dominick's appearance is sponsored by the Young Republicans and the Center for Practical Politics.

Rep. Dominick, serving his first term in Congress from Colorado's Second District, is seeking to unseat incumbent Democrat John A. Carroll. Carroll was first elected to the Senate in 1956.

Rep. Dominick, 45, is a resident of Arapahoe County—suburban Denver, which he represented in the Colorado legislature from 1957 until his election to Congress in 1960. While serving in the legislature, he was selected as Outstanding Freshman Legislator and Most Effective House Republican by the Colorado press corps.

Rep. Dominick defeated Democrat Byron Johnson by a wide margin in 1960 to win his seat in the U. S. House of Representatives.

Rep. Dominick serves on the Interior and Insular Affairs Committee and the Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee.

Both Rep. Dominick and Sen. Carroll won their parties' nominations without opposition.

Peter H. Dominick

The Center for Practical Politics plans to bring additional candidates for major office to the campus before election day, November 6, according to Executive Director Jean Torcom.

Reflections of Telstar

Remember the picture above? It flashed across your television screen on a hot night last July. Perhaps you remember that it originated from France. And that it reached the U.S. via Telstar, the world's first private enterprise communications satellite.

Since that summer night, the Bell System's Telstar has relayed electronic signals of many types—television broadcasts, telephone calls, news photographs, and others.

But there's one Telstar reflection you might have missed. Look into the faces of the Bell System people below and you'll see it. It is the reflection of Telstar's success that glowed brightly on the faces of all who shared in the project.

Their engineering, administrative and operations skills created Telstar and are bringing its benefits down out of the clouds to your living room.

These Bell System people, through their talented, dedicated efforts, make your phone service still better, more economical, and more useful.

The reflections of Telstar are many.

Dr. Lanner to Appear With Local Symphony

Dr. Max Lanner, chairman of the music department at Colorado College, will appear with the Colorado Springs Symphony Orchestra on November 29. He is scheduled to play in the second program presented by the orchestra in the 1962-63 season with Walter Eisenberg conducting.

Well known throughout the region as both performer and teacher, Lanner has played many times in solo recital and as soloist with the symphony orchestra. His appearance in November will mark the fourth time that he has played with the Colorado Springs Symphony, the last time being in 1955. The program will include works by Bach, Beethoven and Brahms with Lanner performing in Beethoven's Third Piano Concerto.

Lanner was born and educated in Vienna, Austria. Coming from a family of musicians, he inherited his talent from both his father and his mother. He is a graduate of the Vienna Conservatory of Music and earned his Ph.D. at the University of Vienna. After a successful career of teaching and performing in Europe, he came to America in 1939 and for several years was the accompanist to such outstanding violinists as Erica Morini, Nathan Milstein, Zino Francescatti, Tossy Spivakovsky, and Szymon Goldberg. He joined the faculty of Colorado College in 1946 and has been chairman of the department since 1961.

In addition to his appearances with the local symphony, Lanner has played twice with the Denver Symphony. In 1961 he played with the Fort Collins Symphony on one day's notice, replacing Nicole Henrietta Schweitzer. On such short notice, he nevertheless played the work originally scheduled, the Symphonie Variations by Cesar Franck.

At Colorado College Lanner is also in charge of the annual Summer Concert Series. In this series he has played many solo recitals and has earned a special reputation as a special chamber music player. He has appeared regularly for several years with the Denver Chamber Music Society and in the Albuquerque Chamber Music Festival.

His teaching activity includes not only students at the college but also a class of private students in Denver. He has held piano master classes and workshops and given lecture-concerts for piano teachers and young student audiences throughout the West. In November he will play with the Denver All-City Orchestra which is made up of young students under the direction of Fred Hoepfner.

In the summer of 1961 Lanner was the first pianist ever to appear in the new Broadmoor International Center, playing to an invited audience on that occasion. Tickets for the outstanding concert season are now on sale daily at the Chinook ticket office at 208 1/2 N. Tejon or by calling 633-1602.

Law School Opportunities Discussed by CU Professor

At a special meeting of upper-class pre-law students held in Palmer Hall Monday, October 8, Albert Menard, Professor of Law and Assistant Dean of the University of Colorado Law School, discussed preparation, requirements, and scholarships for the professional study of law.

Dean Menard discussed briefly the essential courses he felt ought to be taken by a pre-law student. Although he stressed that no academic major constituted a bar to law school admission, he noted that majors commonly followed are in political science, economics, business administration, and history. More important than the field of the major, Dean Menard said, is the student's performance in solid academic courses. The development of student ability to write and to speak concisely and clearly was also emphasized.

Dean Menard, in answering student questions, pointed out that the Law School Aptitude Test is required for admission to virtually all the law schools in the United States. Although he advised all students interested in attending law school to take the test, he refused to indicate any score below which difficulty or failure in law school is certain to occur. He also told the group that while law school scholarships for entering students are limited, some scholarships do exist for exceptionally well qualified students.

Students on the Colorado College campus interested in securing information about or application blanks for the Law School Aptitude Test should contact Professor Ray Werner in Palmer Hall 213.

Alums and Faculty To Discuss Future

Colorado College alumni and faculty will meet at 8 p.m. to-night in the new Charles Leaning Tutt Library to take a 12-year look into the future of the independent college of arts and sciences.

The meeting, known as the Second Annual Alumni Forum, will be one of the highlights of homecoming at the 88-year-old college.

Participating in the forum will be four faculty members and a distinguished alumnus. The program is entitled "Twelve Years to Go: Looking Ahead to the Colorado College Centennial."

Lloyd E. Wornier, dean of the college and professor of history, will serve as moderator of the Alumni Forum Friday night.

Panelists will include Professor Wilbur Wright of the physics department; Professor Louis G. Geiger, chairman of the history department; Professor Neale R. Reinitz of the English department; and A. Edgar Benton, a Denver attorney who received his bachelor's degree from Colorado College in 1950.

Advertising Awards Offered to Students

The third annual House of Edgeworth Scholarship Awards contest offering cash awards totalling $1,000 for college students in marketing and advertising has just been announced by Larus & Brother Company.

The awards consist of three cash prizes of $500, $300 and $200, given for the first, second and third best marketing and advertising programs for selling House of Edgeworth pipe tobaccos to the young men's market.

Winners of the national contest last year were John Larkin of the University of Texas, the first prize of $500; Miss Gene Culver of Auburn University, the first feminine winner to date the second prize of $300; Earl Llewellyn, Jr., of the University of Houston, the third prize of $200. Mr. Llewellyn is the second University of Houston winner since the program began two years ago.

Many marketing and advertising professors of leading colleges and universities have used the House of Edgeworth Scholarship Awards contest as a class assignment, giving the student dual advantage of getting class credit for the work as well as serving as an entry in the competition. Comment has been that the contest affords a very interesting as well as practical challenge as it involves actual products which are sold thru-out America and around the world.

In addition to the cash prizes, winners are given publicity in national trade publications. The winners are judged by a panel of three marketing and advertising professors on the basis of originality and actual merchandising value.

Further contest information can be obtained by writing to House of Edgeworth Scholarship Awards, Larus & Brother Company, Richmond, Va.

Benezet Delivers Speech At Denver University

CC President Louis T. Benezet addressed the students, faculty, and administration of Denver University on Tuesday, September 25. He spoke during the opening convocation at the University. In a speech titled, "A Region's Role in the Universe of Learning," Dr. Benezet stressed the need for universities that "teach men not only to act, to think, and to understand, but to care what it means for our future."

He also emphasized the strong chance that, if the universities do not fulfill their obligations, democracy will fall prey to Soviet Communism. "If we cannot teach our people to care for the State, democracy may not prevail, no matter how brilliantly the supporting knowledge is conceived in our universities."

The other task of the colleges and universities, Dr. Benezet noted, is "to straighten out between our academic and business communities what the teaching of freedom means in operational terms."

ASCC Notes

The first order of the afternoon was the introduction and a proposal of Hugh Bell as president. Phil LeCuyer as vice-president, and Beth Annberg as freshman class commissioner. Committee reports followed.

Assemblies: A sub-committee, the request of President Powe is drafting the goals and ideas of the Assemblies Committee. On October 16 the assembly will be a comparison by five students: Brad Snyder, Tom Ravin, Kam Beasen, Monty Bertram, and Ralph Schmidt, and a faculty member of their junior year abroad. The educational aspects last year will be emphasized.

Communications: ASCC has been awarded the coveted 5:30 p. m. KROC time slot Monday afternoons. Also the will be posted (somewhere) a list of ASCC committees—their chairman and purposes.

Academic: They will hold the first meeting next week.

College Development: Freshman Dave Nixon is interested in college development.

Rastall: Mr. Meis reported very interesting and enlightening weekend of workshops and discussions at the Student workshop conference at Colorado State University.

Others: Messrs Meis, Sabo and White have looked (briefly) into the possibilities of a social event of the Wednesday night Symposium Week. Mr. Nicholas the admissions office has knowledge of a great band without great name whom he feels to just what we're looking for, to play neo-hefty music and are expensive (free).

Senior Class Report: Dues ($3) will be collected at the beginning of second semester. This will include cap, diploma, etc. The signing behind the early collection of this sum is so the seniors complain at the beginning of semester rather than at the end. Also Betsy Gaskill and Dave Hury are meeting with President Benezet to work out plans for a commencement speaker.

The sophomore class reported that their foreign student, Iounna Chounramany, will speak at the class meeting on October 23.

New Business: Homecoming tickets are being pushed by Key members. The All-School Picnic will be held on the campus but grass between the barbies. (Mr. Kendrick has promised that the sprinklers will be turned off—or at least synchronized). Voting for homecoming queen will be held on Thursday Friday. Saturday classes will be cancelled this week.

Note to ASCC Executive Council members: Nugget pictures be taken at next week's meeting. Please dress appropriately.

How to Succeed In College Without Trying

(A play in one act.)

By Dave Clapp

CAST: L. T. BENZEDRINE, President of Coronado College; DEAN J. J. RUDE, Dean of Men; DEAN C. S. MEAN, Dean of Women; REVEREND K. F. W. BARTON, Campus Pastor; Deans, Professors, Department Heads, Instructors.

SCENE: A meeting room in the administration building of Coronado College, a small private school located in a western state. Milling about are the members of the administration, various deans and department heads, professors, and instructors.

TIME: 8:00 p.m. the night of the monthly faculty-administration meeting.

PRESIDENT BENZEDRINE: Ladies and gentlemen—and you instructors—will you all please be seated. If we're going to get out of here in time for Gunsnoke, we had better get rolling. (As he prepares to call the meeting to order he is hit by a spitwad.) All right! All right! Who threw that? I demand to know who threw that! (No answer.) Well, as all of you know, whoever threw it is honorable to turn himself in. I'll be waiting in my office after the meet—after Gunsnoke, that is, to accept your resignation. (He picks up a gavel.) The first monthly meeting of the administration and faculty of Coronado College will now come to order. (Bangs gavel loudly.)

DEAN RUDE: (Dodging gavel.) Go easy on that gavel, will you, Benny? Old Outlass Hall isn't what it used to be.

BENZ: Oh, yeah. (Brushes a layer of powdery dust from his shoulders.) Now, before we get down to business I'd like to make an announcement. Through the combined efforts of our physical education department and the architects, a great savings has been made available in the construction of the new athletic building complex. Briefly, a method has been devised whereby the hockey rink and swimming pool will occupy the same area in the new building. As I understand it, we'll just leave all the windows open during the winter—a real stroke of genius, eh, gentlemen? And you'll be happy to know that the $89,000 we save by this method will go into our faculty retirement fund. (Hysterical cheers from all.) Now I'd like to call upon you individually for your progress reports. Dean Rude, will you begin, please?

RUDE: Yes, thank you, Ben—uh, President Benezdrine. As Dean of Men, a position I have held for more than fifteen years now—

BENZ: Just give the report, huh?

RUDE: (Hurt.) Well! Anyway, in all my years as Dean I've never seen a finer bunch of men students as we have this year. Wholesome, clean-cut, shining examples of all-American boys, every one of them. Of course, there are a few bad apples in the barrel—bookworms, non-athletes, musicians—but on the whole they look fine. In fact, as Dean of Men for more than fifteen years now I can truthfully say—

BENZ: Thank you, Dean, Now, Miss Mean, will you tell us about the young ladies, please?

DEAN MEAN: Surely, Mr. President. I'm very impressed with our young women this year. I've ever seen We, too have our rotten apples, though—some of these girls just aren't interested in boys at all—but most of them are real CC material. As you know, each year I give a little lecture on the boy-girl situation on campus, and—

RUDE: I've seen these girls; they don't need any lectures, if you ask me.

MEAN: Well, I never! I'll thank you to mind your own business, whatever that is, Mr. Rude!

BENZ: Now, now, Miss Mean. I'm sure the Dean didn't mean anything by his remark. (Aside to Rude) Watch it, will you, J. J.? (Aloud) Does that conclude your report, Miss Mean?

MEAN: Well, I suppose so.

BENZ: Fine. Now, Reverend Barton, what have you to report?

REV. BARTON: Quite a lot, really. Attendance at morning worship is at an all-time high: we had thirty-seven people last week. Of course, we're still getting some slugs in the collection plates, but beginning next week we're going to issue the ushers brass knuckles, and I think that business will come to an abrupt halt. And—oh, yes: we've been having a little trouble, but we finally got the chimes back to ringing fifteen minutes off. Pays to keep the students guessing, you know.

BENZ: Amen, Reverend. Before we continue I'd like to commend the cooperative efforts of the Geology, Math, and Psychology Departments for scheduling all their hour exams on the same day. The rest of you could well follow their splendid example. It gives us a marvelous opportunity to slip out of town for a faculty picnic. Remember the last time? What a blast!

MEAN: Yes, until Dean Rude decided to go swimming in the park fountain.

RUDE: You've always got to bring that up, don't you?

BENZ: Now, Deans, this is no time for old quarrels. (Recognizing a hand.) Yes, professor?

PROF. A. Mr. President, I'd like to report that those of us in the language departments have been busy, too. We've made remarkable progress in the language labs. Why, we've speeded up the tape recorders, induced static in the handsets, and supplied all the lab assistants with disappearing ink for the attendance cards. C'est bon, n'est-ce pas?

BENZ: Try bone, professor. Keep up the good work. And how about the science department?

PROF. B: Why, we've been hard at work, too, Mr. President. In fact, we've worked out a system under which we will triple the fines for student breakage and pay for a new nuclear reactor in just six months! Our chemistry professors deserve special praise, too, for their extra-curricular activities: they've spent many a night changing the labels on the gas, water, and steam jets in the labs. Makes for quite an interesting lab period.

PROF. C: We haven't been sitting still in the English Department, you know. Just last week we had each professor assign all his students research in the same book on reserve at the library. What a scramble!

PROF. D: Mr. President, before we move on to new business I'd like to make an announcement. As you know, I am in charge of symposium week. Our committee is quite proud of having established January 11th and 12th as registration dates for the second semester, so that everyone will have to be back here then. But our greatest achievement was in having the Del-Rays, a local group, as guest performing artists for symposium week. The savings from the specified amount comes to $9500, which will be turned over to the faculty dance committee for our annual prom at the Broadmoor. (Much cheering and weeping for joy.)

BENZ: Excellent, professor. You'll be in the administration yet. Say, that reminds me: how are we doing on that Rackefeller grant, Professor E? We could really use another two million.

PROF. E: It's just about in the bag, L. T. Of course, I had to give a little over my expense account—$16,000, to be exact—but I think we've got ourselves another new building.

BENZ: I just hope they send us someone who can make a speech. That Corn fellow was absolutely the world's worst. "Hammurabi didn't go to college!" Brother—

MEAN: And suggesting that we lower our standards! My goodness! BENZ: I believe that concludes old business. There is only one article of new business. The committee on finance has moved that we double tuition beginning next year. You're all familiar with the expenses—running Coronado College, so I won't bore you with details. All in favor say "aye."

ALL: Aye!

BENZ: Motion passed. Do I hear a motion to adjourn? It's almost time for Gunsnoke.

(curtain)

The Student Conduct Committee met last Tuesday night to discuss the case of a girl who stayed out of the residence hall on the night of October 6. It was the Committee's judgement that this girl should be allowed to remain in school but that she should be put on disciplinary probation for the rest of this year. This means that in the occurrence of another serious case of misconduct on her part, she will be immediately suspended from school pending a hearing of the Committee. This notation goes on the student's record and will be removed upon her completion of the probationary period successfully.

CHECK FOR $655,000 first installment on the Ford Foundation's challenge grant to Coronado College, is turned over to Mrs. C. D. Richards for posting by Robert W. Broughton, business manager of the college. It was the largest single gift payment check in the institution's history. Coronado College will use the initial payment for scholarships, faculty salaries, utilities installations and other immediate needs. The Foundation will pay the balance of a challenge grant of $2,200,000 if the college raises $5,500,000 in matching funds within the next three years.

Variety Show

Student directors for the annual United Fund Variety Show have been chosen by faculty advisor, chief Tyree. They are Don Bradbury, Mike Irfield and Boots Jackson. Tryouts will run from October 15 through the 17th. Those interested please contact Mr. Tyree or one of the directors at Ext. 43 as soon as possible.

Rastall Center will sponsor an all college bowling tournament in the games area Sunday afternoon at 2:30. Everyone is welcome to join in the fun.

Modern Philosophy Fails to Answer Human Questions

By Jim Heckman

"Modern philosophy is doing nothing to answer the basic human question." Summarizing the work of modern American philosophers with this gloomy appraisal, Associate Professor of Philosophy Jane Cauvel went on to say that "The serious questioners no longer look to modern philosophy for answers, but rather to the creators and artists who are still concerned with human problems." Making these remarks in the third and concluding lecture in the Revolutions in America series, Miss Cauvel stimulated a near-capacity audience in Perkins Hall with her lecture, "The New Style of Doing Philosophy." The CC professor compared the old American philosophy, the pragmatism of John Dewey and William James, to the new Analytic philosophy as developed by Ludwig Wittgenstein and later workers at Cambridge University. Included also in the category of modern philosophy was the Logical Positivism of Carnap and Schlick, working at the University of Vienna in the early 1930's.

In her lecture, Miss Cauvel mentioned that pragmatism was the dominant American philosophy since the late nineteenth century, when such men as Dewey expanded a general philosophy that expressed general American vitality. Pragmatism embraced a complete picture of the body and mind of man as one whole. It held that nothing was absolutely true, that each problem of good and evil had its own empirical solution. Pragmatism of relativism influenced the growth of philosophy; rejecting any arbitrary judgments of worth, the pragmatists' most content test of value was whether anything worked; if a thing worked it was good.

The pragmatists had an optimistic view of man. They centered their philosophy around man and his actions—man gave life its own meaning.

The pragmatic method of philosophy included careful clarification of problems, a thoughtful study of alternative solutions to problems and the solution of these problems with a mind to the traditions inherent in our culture, as well as to the logical coherence of the solution proposed.

Dr. Cauvel then continued her lecture by turning to the logical positivism as they developed in Vienna in the late 1920's. The logical positivists provide a link between the pragmatists and the modern-day pragmatists in that they believed that all the meaningful philosophical questions could be solved through proper use of the mathematically logical systems. But, like the analysts they called for careful clarification of terms.

Concurrent with this development was the growth of two types of "modern" schools in England. Both groups had in common an analytical passion for classification of ideas and problems. The great aim of these philosophers was "not to write philosophy, but to see that all words were philosophically well written." Their chief aim was to separate spurious arguments from valid ones; "not to use new information, but to arrange the old" was the goal of English scholars. Philosophy became then a type of mental gymnastics—one that concerned itself with tautologies and less with teleologies. The two types of "linguistic philosophers" differed chiefly over the determination of adequate language for philosophical discussions. One type, "the common language group," sought to determine how various words were used by different peoples so that no confusion would result from misunderstanding the use of terms. The other, more esoteric group developed a rigorous symbolic notation to avoid the errors inherent in the common language. Both schools were founded as a result of the philosophical works of Ludwig Wittgenstein, a pupil of Bertrand Russell.

The school of analysts restricted itself solely to sterile philosophical statements which were empirically verifiable. All else was to be neglected, so that "the ambiguities of philosophizing would be avoided."

Showing her sympathy for the "romantic" notions of man, Miss Cauvel then made her observation that modern philosophy was abandoning its old functions and that the only philosophy which had meaning at all, was to be found in modern fiction, not in newly published philosophical works.

One can only say that this effective lecture with its interesting and informative viewpoints needed only another voice, that of a "modern philosopher," to buttress the particular attacks made upon this school. Except for this one weakness, and except for the fact that the speaker had no time to deeply and completely probe into the new philosophy for the benefit of her audience, this lecture was extremely well-given and intellectually stimulating.

Fall Lecture Series Is Opened by Prof. Geiger

By Mike von Helms

On Thursday, September 20, at 8:30 in Perkins Hall, Dr. Geiger, Colorado College historian, opened the first of a series of fall faculty lectures stating that he is thoroughly convinced that democracy's continued existence almost certainly depends upon what our colleges and universities do for their students, for the public, and for learning. American democracy as we know is more a product of these institutions than many of us realize. The experience of college education for millions is providing the unifying ingredient for a "New American Style" where other social forces have failed.

He went on to say, "The experience of higher education which has transcended provincialism may also transcend nationalism."

Professor Geiger showed that the revolutionary effects on the colleges launched under the Morrill Land-Grant College Act of 1862, were the admission of a host of new subjects to the precincts of higher education plus . . . the demonstration that higher education for the masses is possible. These innovations have proved as important for private colleges as the public ones. Furthermore, since Lincoln signed the grant in 1862, every profession has come to be based on college training, and since Roosevelt, the American voters have turned increasingly to college and professionally trained areas for people to handle their public business. This act, although it did not initiate the revolution in higher education, did mark a turning point for the advocacy of a thorough reform of American colleges.

Professor Geiger mentioned another mark in the educational revolution which began in the 1930's and is still distinguished by the "effort to reconcile popularity with quality, and by a deepening concern about effecting a satisfactory synthesis of utilitarian with cultural and moral elements." In short, our problem is "how to complete the integration of the college and university idea of specialization and general education that began after the Civil War."

Since the Second World War, there have been "many experiences with foreign students on our campus, or of our own students with universities abroad which provide everyday demonstrations of this point." He continued: "For ideals of truth, of freedom of freedom of thought, and expression are the universals of the true academic community, wherever it is."

Other educational and social forces such as the elementary and high schools and the churches have failed to provide a unifying experience and to draw Americans together as a nation.

"It seems clear that general education of the liberal arts college, even the different yet shared experience of professional graduate training, the extended sojourn in a community of scholars with common standards of excellence and conduct—these are becoming the unifying forces for Americans."

The effect of this educational revolution upon public services, Professor Geiger pointed out, is that it was "the German missile experts that we and the Russians brought home after the war, not the German generals." Moreover, the highly technical, college-trained technicians at Cape Canaveral are "overshadowing the men (Continued on page eight)

CC Political Science Majors To Discuss Graduate Studies

The Political Science Department has called a meeting for p.m. Tuesday, October 16th, in Rastall Center for all Political Science majors (Seniors and Juniors) who are potentially interested in graduate or professional school after completing their work at Colorado College. Opportunities for graduate and professional study will be explained, and the mechanics of obtaining admission and financial assistance will be outlined to all interested students by Professors Brooks, Gomez, and Sondermann of the Department. Professor Werner, chairman of the pre-law committee, will discuss questions of admission to preparation for, Law School.

"An End In Itself"

By James H. Fox

Two weeks ago Dr. Carl L. Roberts' introductory lecture to modern Behaviorism suggested that human action is meaningful in itself.

This concept has its origins in the German Structuralism of the late Nineteenth century who divided the "Inner Man" into images, feelings, and thoughts. At the same time in America, Titchener at Cornell, followed by Dewey, James, and other Functionalists, were also concerned with the state of consciousness, but more sophisticated than the Germans, rejected private events as unobservable, private events as unobservable, environmental causes. Several decades later Watson appeared with a concept of purpose and procedure which was the spark of a uniquely American revolution in modern psychology. Unless you are a mind reader, it is impossible to consider the mind as the object of the study of human behavior. Today Behaviorism is no longer controversial.

The result of Watson's revolution was an era of psychologists who not only rejected the study of consciousness, but also began only to predict behavior from observable phenomena.

But, somehow Watson's original purpose had been lost. Dr. Roberts declared that this exciting approach watered down into a "feeble revolution."

Causes of cause and effect became attached to the significant happenings in an experiment. For example, a rat's tendency to hoard pellets, after being deprived of them, would be ascribed to a "pellet hoarding drive." Very fruitful!

The sometimes naive circular nature of the Freudian outlook which, although outside the lecturer's subject of the evening, was also mentioned to emphasize his point.

Freud wrote in New Introductory Lectures on Psychoanalysis: "The whole of psychoanalytic theory is, in fact, built up on the perception of the resistance exerted by the patient when we try to make him conscious of his unconscious."

After dealing with this sad state of affairs, Dr. Roberts turned to an optimistic note. In the Thirties, a small, but real revolution was beginning within the "feeble revolution." Dr. Skinner and several associates at Harvard were experimenting with a concept called "operative conditioning." By adhering to certain standards of investigation proposed by Watson and developed by Dr. Skinner, a scientific method was developed in which the results were so consistent, that there was no need to explain them beyond the observable situation. From this foundation, the new Behaviorist could exert greater control over his subject with more and more imaginative techniques. A number of companies are now producing sensitive apparatuses especially designed for the laboratory. Although the results of laboratory experiments can be interesting, there are pragmatic effects in the accumulating knowledge. Donald Shearn of the lecture department is presently attempting to control the rate of human heart beat by conditioning the subject with electric shock. prevent his heart from accelerating. Another study which may have medical research is the work of the psychology department of the University of Maryland with ants. The problem is to discover how closely the eyesight of birds corresponds to human vision. The pigeon learns to peck at brightly lighted buttons, the distance of which simulates conditions of an optometrist's test chart.

Applied Behaviorism is also being used to deal with mental cases. Dr. Roberts reported an anecdotal interaction between Donald Shearn and a maniacal depress who was mute to all staff and inmates of a hospital. With a stick of gum for reinforcement, the subject began, after miraculously short time of treatment, to talk with other patients. As meetings progressed, the man was forced to make more and more of a complete utterance in order to receive the gum. The practical practitioner might intensify this event as a therapeutic reinforcement. Probably, the friendly sentiment of Dr. Shearn and the condition process were both responsible for the success of this "experiment." Although conditioning the patient to adopt "normal" behaviour certainly not the complete answer for psychosis or schizophrenia, may often help to break down barriers, so the psychiatrist does have some ground on which to communicate with him.

The Coming Age of Behaviorism is not professionally interested in man's ultimate reality. The concern is rather with attempted control of behavior and effect relationship for man's activity. As some modern philosophers will insist, relate thought to experience, psychologists should derive their principles only from their observation and recording of action.

Heiny Takes First in Tourney Intramural Golf Saturday

Bob Heiny shot an 82 in the second round of the Intramural Golf tournament held at the Patty Swett Golf Course last Saturday, and added to his first round score of 74, gave him a total of 156 strokes and the 1962 Intramural Individual Championship.

Mike Irshfeld's 77 was the best round of the day, and it enabled him to tie Pete Goodbody for second place honors with a total of 156 for the thirty-six holes. Dave Hall was one stroke back with a total of 157.

The Intramural Golf Tournament attracted 46 entries and uncovered some excellent prospects for the varsity golf team next spring.

The thirty-six hole scores of the women were: Bob Heiny (74-156), Mike Irshfeld (84-77-151), Pete Goodbody (78-83-161), Pete Bull (81-81-162), Bud Williams (80-83-163), Steve Wellman (82-82-167), Bill Casey (77-91-168), Tom Walsman (81-88-169), Pete Hunt (84-89-173), Lloyd St. (84-93-177).

Smash the Bears!

Let's all smash the Bears! How? Simple. The Bengals of '66 have obtained a beautiful 1949 Pontiac to be used Saturday, October 13, to help the Tiger eleven smash the Bears.

The car will be in the Slocum parking lot from 9 a.m. to 1:30 p.m. this Saturday for all mighty CC students and alumni to smash. (Girls are more than welcome to test their strength.) The charge will be 25c for each sledge hammer smash with the glass extra.

In addition the first one to smash a hole through the top of the "Bear" car will receive a free pitcher of beer from Giuseppe's, compliments of Big Bengal Baby Huey Thompson.

What a great way to drive the Black and Gold on to victory by smashing the Bears from 9 to 1:30 this Saturday in Slocum parking lot. Don't miss it!!!

Role of Athletics To Be Considered

An informal discussion of the role of athletics in small, private colleges will be held next Tuesday, October 16, 1962. Dr. William Hochman will present his views on the present athletic program at Colorado College and a possible future alternative to this athletic program. Questions and discussions will follow his presentation.

Everyone is urged to come to the W.E.S. Room in Rastall Center, Tuesday at 4:15 p.m. for refreshments, followed at 4:30 by the discussion.

Seay to Discuss Musical Experience

Colorado College music Professor Albert Seay, regarded as one of the nation's leading musicologists, will talk about "New Musical Experiences and the Electronic World" at 9:15 a.m. tomorrow in the Olin Hall lecture room.

Professor Seay has just returned from Italy where he spent a year doing research under a Guggenheim Fellowship for a new book on the history of Italian music theory in the 14th and 15th centuries.

Tigers Play CSC Bears

The Colorado College Homecoming game will pit the Tiger eleven against the Colorado State College Bears of Greeley at Washburn Field this Saturday afternoon at 2 p.m.

C.S.C. comes into the game supporting a 2 and 2 record. The Bears' victims are South Dakota University, 36-36, and Western State, whom they swamped 21-10 last week in their first Rocky Mountain Conference contest.

Greeley has been defeated by Omaha University, 41-22 and Drake University 21-0. The CC gridgers, after a week's rest, will seek their second win of the season against two setbacks. The Tigers rolled over St. Mary's 14-7 in their first game and have been on the short end of their last two, 20-14 to Washburn and 33-0 to Fort Hays State College.

This will be the first R.M.C. game for the Black and Gold who appear to be in top physical condition after last week's bye. Coach Jerry Carle said that defensive halfback Pete Davis will probably still be out of the lineup but that halfback Mike Magruder, out for the Fort Hays game, will be back along with backs Ron Taylor and Wayne Deutscher to give the Tigers a potent offensive. CC defeated Colorado State 24-13 in 1961 after losing to the CSC Bears 21-15 in 1960 and 30-0 in 1959.

Coach Carle announced his probable starting lineup with freshman Milton Franke at quarterback. Bob Broyles and Vince Greco will start at halfback and Wayne Deutscher at fullback. Ends will be Mike Minelli and Lee Muller; tackles, Dave Hays and Ben Melton; guards, John Trujillo and Al Loosli; and either Jerry Johnson or Art Basham at center.

CC sport fans should keep an eye on the Bears quarterback Tom Carlson who is their leading rusher and third highest scorer. The Greeley pass offense will be centered around senior end Jim Stokes. The Tigers will have to concentrate their defense on sophomore Jack Richardson who is the Bears leading scorer with twenty points. The game shapes up to be a hard-fought Homecoming contest between Colorado College and Colorado State College.

HAPPINESS CAN'T BUY MONEY

Can education bring happiness?

This is a question that in recent years has caused much lively debate and several hundred stabbings among American college professors. Some contend that if a student's intellect is sufficiently aroused, happiness will automatically follow. Others say that to concentrate on the intellect and ignore the rest of the personality can only lead to misery.

I myself favor the second view, and I offer in evidence the well-known case of Agathe Fusco.

Agathe, a forestry major, never got anything less than a straight "A", was awarded her B.T. (Bachelor of Trees) in only two years, her M.S.B. (Master of Sap and Bark) in only three, and her D.B.C. (Doctor of Blight and Outworn) in only four.

Academic glory was hers. Her intellect was the envy of every intellect fan on campus. But was she happy? The answer, alas, was no. Agathe—she knew not why—was miserable, so miserable, in fact, that one day while walking across campus, she was suddenly so overcome with melancholy that she flung herself, weeping, upon the statue of the Founder.

By and by a liberal arts major named R. Twinkle Plenty came by with his yoyo. He noted Agathe's condition. "How come you're so unhappy, hey?" said R. Twinkle.

"Suppose you tell me, you dumb old liberal arts major," replied Agathe peevishly.

"Have you ever smoked a Marlboro cigarette?"

"All right, I will," said R. Twinkle. "You are unhappy for two reasons. First, because you have been so busy studying your intellect that you have gone and starved your psyche. I've got nothing against learning, mind you, but a person oughtn't to neglect the pleasant, gentle amenities of life—the fun things. Have you, for instance, ever been to a dance?"

Agathe shook her head.

"Have you ever watched a sunset? Written a poem? Smoked a Marlboro Cigarette?"

Agathe shook her head.

"Well, we'll fix that right now!" said R. Twinkle and gave her a Marlboro and struck a match.

She puffed, and then for the first time in twelve or fifteen years, she smiled. "Wow!" she cried. "Marlboros are a fun thing! What flavor! What filter! What pack or box! What a lot to like! From now on I will smoke Marlboros, and never have another unhappy day!"

"Hold!" said R. Twinkle. "Marlboros alone will not solve your problem—only half of it. Remember I said there were two things making you unhappy?"

"Oh, yeah," said Agathe. "What's the other one?"

"How long have you had that bear trap on your foot?" said R. Twinkle.

"I stepped on it during a field trip in my freshman year," said Agathe. "I keep meaning to have it taken off."

"Allow me," said R. Twinkle and removed it.

"Land sakes, what a relief!" said Agathe, now totally happy, and took R. Twinkle's hand and led him to a Marlboro vendor's and then to a justice of the peace.

Today Agathe is a perfectly fulfilled woman, both intellectually and personalitywise. She lives in a darling split-level house with R. Twinkle and their 17 children, and she still keeps busy in the forestry game. Only last month, in fact, she became Consultant on Sawdust to the American Butchers Guild, she was named an Honorary Sequoia by the park commissioner of Las Vegas, and she published a best-selling book called I was a Slippery Elm for the FBI.

The makers of Marlboro are pleased that Agathe is finally out of the woods—and so will you be if your goat is smoking pleasure. Just try a Marlboro.

Harmon Discusses Fund Drive At Second Fall Convocation

On Tuesday, October 9, "Part II" of the Fall Convocation got under way before a sparse crowd in Shove Chapel. The avowed purpose of the assembly was to discuss the significance of the Ford Foundation grant to Colorado College, but a number of other items left unconsidered at the Ohn Hall dedication ceremonies intervened between ASCC President Max Power's opening remarks and the keynote address by Mr. Harold C. Harmon.

Dean Warner presented the President's Scholastic Improvement Prize to John E. Stanicek, as the junior student whose scholastic average has registered the great improvement in his four semesters at Colorado College. Stanicek received a $10 award to be used in the College bookstore for books other than texts.

Following the President's Award presentation, the President took the podium and made a few general remarks. Dr. Benetz first announced that the college community's size had reached its highest crest, with an enrollment of 1986 as of Oct. 7. The President, extemporizing, announced gleefully that the College's budget was balanced, and followed with words of fatherly pride concerning the purchase of Arthur House from the heirs of Chester A. Arthur. He expressed his concern and the concern of the faculty and administration over the library checking system and the controversy which has arisen up around this problem, and emphasized the students' role in suggesting solutions to what has become a thorny dilemma. Benetz closed his remarks with words of thanks, to the students in general for launching the fall semester with enthusiasm and eagerness, and to the football squad for their contribution to campus life. Undaunted by the almost complete absence of athletic representation in the audience, the President emphasized the fact that this College's concept of football competition rules out special subsidies and awards for players, and lauded the 1962 squad for their willingness to compete only for the sake of the game itself. "We might take our lumps for a while," the President opined, but pointed with hope to CC's search for intercollegiate competition against colleges with similar ideas about the place of football on campus.

ASCC President Max Power then introduced Mr. Harold C. Harmon, Class of 1960, and Chairman of the Colorado College Campaign. Mr. Harmon, reading from a prepared manuscript, began with a summary of the activities of the Ford Foundation's program of aid to higher education. The program, beginning in 1959 as a series of "heroic" grants to universities, was later extended to smaller private liberal arts colleges, and in 1960 negotiations between Colorado College and the Foundation began. The CC administration was asked to fill out an exhaustive questionnaire outlining the College's history for the previous ten years as well as plans for the next ten. Specific and penetrating questions were posed concerning enrollment, physical plant, faculty, endowment, and many other criteria of collegiate stature. The completed document finally submitted to the Foundation ran to 100 pages and convinced Foundation officials that Colorado College had the necessary potential to exert an influence far out of proportion to its size in the coming years.

On June 27, 1962, came the announcement that CC had been awarded a $2,200,000 challenge grant, the second largest among 21 competing colleges and the only one to be awarded in the 8-state Rocky Mountain area. Harmon reiterated the matching terms of the grant, which provide for an initial payment of $655,000, already received, and additional payments to be made at the rate of $1 in Ford Foundation funds for each $2.50 raised by the College. He emphasized the nature of the grant as unrestricted funds, the most useful and the most difficult sort of gift to come by.

Finally, Harmon noted that CC's present endowment was not adequate to meet anticipated demands, and that a portion of the funds raised would be used to "undergird our financial picture and to continue to relieve, at least in some degree, the burden from tuition."

In concluding, Harmon appealed to the students of the College to employ every means at their command to aid in the fund-raising campaign. The diversity of our student body means that it should be relatively easy to make this effort widely known and widely supported, and the trustee emphasized CC's undertaking as a unified one with all segments of the college community taking an active part.

Harmon, relaxed and methodical in his presentation, delivered a precise and business-like summary of the terms of a challenge unprecedented in CC's history, and clarified for all present the lines of battle for the coming campaign. The assembly was marred only by the fact that pathetically few were present to hear a cogent and well-organized address.

Lecture Series

that have graduated from our service academies. It seems clear that in 1962 Americans and Russians, although we have not acknowledged this to ourselves, are shifting an increasing amount of responsibility for national defense to universities and laboratories. Also, "advanced academic degrees are replacing the old blood and guts even in the services themselves." Since the war, "the academies have been relying increasingly upon the universities for educational models and the training of their faculties." This merely illustrates that "civilian and military are being drawn together into the common mold of American Democracy."

"An accompaniment of this vigorous development has been that educational institutions have assumed the role of art patrons. The artist, writer, or composer in residence is not a commonplace in the American College," he noted, "or am I prepared to say just how, or how much, these efforts have enriched our mass culture, but there's hardly any doubt that the effect has been significant. There has been a thorough filtration from the colleges to the masses, not only through the increasingly large segment of our people attending the colleges themselves, but by way of the public schools."

He concluded by saying, "Committed by the very nature to resist the party line of special leaders, the universities of the world on their way to becoming available to the masses of the world, may be the Church Universal, the agency of the peace of God that many have sought so long. No other institution of the modern world seems to promise so much."

Eisenhower Rally

Tuesday night a group of Young Republicans traveled to Denver's Coliseum to attend the Eisenhower Rally. The ex-President was the feature speaker. He urged citizens -- both Democrat and Republicans -- to get behind the candidates and to VOTE. Many Republican candidates were in attendance. Entertainment was provided between speeches. Everyone had a delightful time and the rally was a tremendous success.

Sunshine, Blue Sky, and Alums Spark Homecoming Festivities

Although the 1962 homecoming activities began officially with the dedication of Tutt Library on Friday afternoon, many students became first involved later that evening when they heard the somewhat unusual sounds broadcast over the campus by the Kappas and the Sigma Chis. Those who investigated further soon discovered that these came from some of the house decorations. This activity proved to be better than the floats built in past years, since the stationary nature of the houses permitted more attention to detail. There was still a great deal of frantic last-minute work, but at least it was not necessary to chase down the street to add finishing touches. The winners of the competition were the Fijis and the Kappas, with themes of Mickey Mouse and Dennis the Menace.

At 8:30, a crowd of about 150 loyal supporters crowded around a platform in Slocum Lot. After a torchlit procession by the Bengals, they attempted to hear the singing of Barbara Couey as the Homecoming Queen. Although the conditions were an improvement over those on Washburn Field last year, it was still extremely difficult for those present to see or hear what was happening. Those who managed to find a place near the platform heard Coach Carle introduce the football players and tell about the forthcoming game. Most of the students present remained for the all-school twist dance which continued for several hours.

On Saturday morning, some students attended the lecture by Dr. Seay. Although this was primarily organized for alumni, those students who went felt it was a valuable experience. By noon everyone had managed to get up and find their way to the ASCO picnic. It was a pleasant change from the monotony of the dining halls, and for some inexplicable reason, there was none of the rain, snow, wind or generally cold temperature usually associated with homecoming. This condition prevailed throughout the day and was a great surprise to some students who thought from previous experience that bad weather was always included as part of the planning.

This good weather, combined with the usual homecoming enthusiasm and influx of alumni, brought out one of the largest crowds for a CC football game in several years. The team managed to hold their own during the first half, and at halftime many enthusiasts' fans still had hopes of turning the 14-6 deficit into a winning balance.

Others had their thoughts set on the winning of another contest, as the cross-country runners set out over a 1½ mile course. During the race, the band, Tigers, and Tigerettes put on a half-time show which, although not professional, was well executed. The queen and her court were introduced to the crowd and at precisely the right time, the first runners arrived back in the stadium. Jim Railey of first north received the first place award. When the field had been cleared, the Tigers returned to be badly overrun by the Bears in the second half.

For the rest of the afternoon, the fraternity and sorority houses were open to the public, giving the freshmen an opportunity to become acquainted with them. Later that evening, a large number of students and alumni went to the Broadmoor for the homecoming dance. As always, it provided an excellent setting, and there was general approval of the idea of two bands to provide both twist music and slower tunes.

Sunday morning, those students who managed to get up early enough attended the memorial service in Shove Chapel. They heard the usual good service by Reverend Burton, and an excellent performance by the CC choir.

New ideas and careful planning make the 1962 homecoming better than many in the past. It was still, admittedly, not perfect and any constructive suggestions will be gratefully accepted by Blue Key and ASCO.

Tutt Honored As First Citizen At Dedication of Library Friday

Colorado College's spate of dedications came to an end, for this fall at least, with dedication of the Charles Leaming Tutt Library Friday, Oct. 12.

After an invocation by the Rev. Kenneth Burton and introductory remarks by President Benezet, the dedicatory address was delivered by John Evans, a close friend of Mr. Tutt and honorary chairman of the First National Bank of Denver.

Mr. Evans emphasized the place of the new library as the "academic heart of this great institution" and as a "symbol of its resurgence to still greater and more distinguished service." He went on to laud the library as a fitting and lasting memorial to the late Charles Leaming Tutt, trustee of the El Pomar Foundation and long-time trustee of Colorado College. Tutt, Dr. Evans said, should be recognized as the first citizen, "Civis Princeps," of his city and his state, because of the numerous public benefactions for which he was responsible. Evans asserted that higher learning was self-perpetuating and cumulative in its benefits, and that aid to such an endeavor was the highest good an individual or group could hope to achieve.

Following the dedicatory remarks, Professor Richard G. Beidleman, chairman of the faculty committee which helped to plan the library, expressed the College's gratitude for the new building. Beidleman expressed regret that Charles L. Tutt had failed to witness completion of the structure for which he was largely responsible but reiterated the library's role as a memorial to a great man.

He stressed the deliberate location of Tutt Library at the campus traffic center, closing his remarks by pointing up the contrast between CC's first library, a book-

Oktoberfest-Lumpenball To Be Held October 26

The German Club will sponsor an Oktoberfest-Lumpenball (i.e., Rag Ball) on Friday evening, October 26, i.e., Rastall Center Dining Room. Members of the Colorado Springs German-American Society have been invited, as special guests to enrich the evening with their participation and help on the various activities.

There will be both American and German dancing. Members of the German-American Society will give instruction in native German dances. There will also be games with prizes for the winners and, of course singing of German Folk Songs. Special German refreshments will be provided.

Because a Lumpenball is a costume party, everyone should plan to wear something suitable for a German theme. Almost any sort of costume, from that of king or queen of the Oktoberfest to that of an impoverished Bavarian peasant, will be appropriate.

All members of German Club, as well as one guest per member, are invited to attend at no extra cost beyond the club dues. Dates are not necessary, and everyone may participate in whatever he cares to.

Case in Cutler Hall, and the gleaming four-story Tutt building, which has a capacity for 300,000 volumes and 525 readers.

Dr. Benezet then expressed thanks to those who planned and built the library, introducing Mr. John Merrill of Skidmore, Owings and Merrill, designers of the building, and thanking the Lemcke Construction Company, prime contractor, Whitney Electric and Olson Plumbing and Heating, subcontractors.

H. Chase Stone, President of the El Pomar Foundation, presented the key to the $1,250,000 structure to Armin B. Barney, chairman of the board of trustees, after which Mr. Barney presented lifetime silver library privilege cards to Mrs. Charles Leaming Tutt and five trustees of the El Pomar Foundation.

To end the afternoon ceremonies, Dr. Benezet and Mrs. Tutt unveiled a bust of Charles L. Tutt, sculpted by Arvid Fairbanks of Salt Lake City, well-known for his statue of Spencer Penrose which stands outside the El Pomar Foundation Executive Offices.

The library is indeed the heart of any academic community, and dedication of the Charles Leaming Tutt Library served as a reminder to the College of the debt owed to the generous and unequivocal philanthropy of Tutt and the foundation which he headed.

Student Participation Urged For Mental Health Programs

Beginning this weekend, October 19-21, the first of nine work-study programs in mental health will be held at the State Hospital in Pueblo. Students from seven colleges in Colorado are participating in this program and it is hoped that students from CC will apply.

The work weekend is being sponsored by the American Friends Service Committee and is headed by Dr. Carl Levine, a member of the AFSC Colorado Executive Board. This program began last year when Dr. and Mrs. Levine of Pueblo College initiated two experimental weekends, leading the college students. The experiment was so successful that the nine weekends will be held this year. The Levines are scholars who have had a great deal of experience in work-camps in Israel and elsewhere.

The purpose of the AFS Institutional Service unit is to give college students a chance to work with major social problems in an area generally regarded as closed to those not clinically trained.

After a period of orientation by the hospital staff, student volunteers work in the wards under professional guidance. They also assist in recreational programs in the wards and in the children's center.

Faculty members from the various colleges will head the different weekends. Dr. Paul Kutsche of the Anthropology Department will be the leader on the weekend of December 7-9. Each weekend will be treated separately; students need not attend all nine sessions.

Application blanks may be picked up at Rastall desk and it is urged that those students interested apply. Cost to the participating student is transportation plus one dollar which will cover insurance and clerical expenses.

Martin to Discuss A.F.S.C. Service

Mr. Lawrence A. Martin, recently appointed College Program Assistant for the North Central Regional office of American Friends Service Committee plans to be in Colorado Springs on Tuesday, October 23, and Wednesday, October 24.

He would like to talk informally with students and faculty at CC about A.F.S.C. service projects and other issues of concern to Quakers and sympathetic persons.

Anyone interested may contact Lawrence Martin on the announced dates in Professor Madrugra's office, Hayes House.

Alford to Speak About Migrants

This Tuesday, Oct. 23, Mr. Jack Alford will speak at an assembly on "America's One Million Displaced Persons."

This lecture will concern itself with one of the nation's more pressing problems. The one million displaced persons refers to the migrant workers of America. These workers, essential for the gathering and harvesting of many crops, have had a history of injustice and mistreatment. It is one of the truly shameful aspects of contemporary life.

Mr. Alford is a graduate of the Fine Arts of Chicago Art Institute and the McCormick Theological Seminary. He has done professional photographic work and served as official photographer with the American forces in Korea. At present, he is the S.W. Area Field Representative of the Division of Home Missions of the National Council of the Churches of Christ. His work is centered about the migrant workers of this area and among their employers. Mr. Alford's secondary concern is work among the Indians of this region.

Commitment Is Seen To Probe Timely Issues

Commitment consists of students interested in exploring current issues in the fields of war and peace with the intent of acquiring knowledge about all pertinent aspects of the specific issue. The purpose of this group has been a bit reorganized this year with the hope that a wider span of possible problems with which to concern themselves will find a greater number of interested students.

October 24th is United Nations Day, and the organization has planned a few small discussion groups concerning specific problems pertinent to this year's UN session to be held next Tuesday afternoon, October 23rd. These will be led by members of the local branch of the American Association for the United Nations who are interested in presenting the specific issues to us.

On October 25th, Thursday, an invited guest will speak on a topic of a more general nature, but one definitely connected with the UN. Posters including the names of the discussion leaders, their topics, the name of the guest speaker and his topic and the times and places of the meetings will be up on Monday.

All interested students and faculty members are invited to participate in this small-scale "UN Week."

ASCC Notes

The first informal of business was a somewhat informal request that Messrs. DeGeorge and Loosli be reminded to attend the next week so that the executive council picture may be taken.

Committee reports are as follows:

Finance: Budget forms are due Monday, October 29.

Publications: Writers Workshop is planning weekly meetings with a faculty member to go over student material. Mid-November has been set as the approximate deadline for Tiger editor and business manager applications. Pub board is trying to get the "New Faces" magazine under its jurisdiction.

Social Co-ordinating: Sue Hile has been approved to replace Sue Caudill as co-freshman coordinator.

Student policy has a meeting this Thursday at 4:00 p.m.

Assemblies: Jack Alford will speak about migrant workers at the October 23rd assembly.

Communications: KRCO faculty sponsor, Chief Tyree, wishes to state that this station is always open to suggestions from students.

Constitution: They'll be here next week.

Academics: CC (and just about every other college in the USA) has received an appeal for funds ($20 from each school) from the South African college, Pius XLI. A motion that this institution be sent $40 pending further financial investigation of their situation by this committee and that the funds be sent because of the unique political and academic situation was tabled pending such investigation.

Rastall Center Board: Dr. William Hochman was the guest at a coffee hour Tuesday, October 16. He spoke on intramural sports. Rastall will sponsor a Turnabout Twist on November 12.

Ad Hoc committee on symposium entertainment is still conferring.

Sophomore class report: A class meeting will be held on October 30 at which time their foreign student, Wai will speak.

Under old business, Dr. Sondermann, chairman of the Symposium Committee has been invited to speak at the October 29th ASCC meeting.

New Business: Ann Armstrong, student member of the Faculty Library Committee, and representing that body brought up the fact that while there seems to be much discussion concerning the library check system, the library itself has not received any formal complaints or suggestions concerning the procedure. The committee would appreciate receiving news of such discussion other than by rumor. Jo Hellar informed Miss Armstrong that the Student Policy Comm. is discussing this at their meeting Thursday, and a representative of ASCC will speak to Mr. Mason, head librarian, concerning student views. Mr. Don Oden informed Miss Armstrong that Mr. Blackburn is heading a committee that is checking into the possibility of a student identification card. Possibly this card could be shown upon leaving the library and only those people without cards would be checked. This would put the checking system under the honor system.

A suggestion has been received from Dan Martin that someone in a campus pep or service organization visit the infirmary every day to see if the informed need cheering or things.

The National Student Association conference is being held at the University of Colorado October 26-28. Since CC is not a member, no representative will be sent. Anyone wishing to go however, may do so at his own expense.

The football coaches, team, etc., have requested that ASCC try to think of some way to keep the little brats off the field before, after, and during football games.

Homecoming has come and gone, and with it, the frenzied activities of various campus organizations as they prepare for this event.

But, before homecoming, many CC students express concern for the effect deferred rush might have on freshman participation. Obviously, there would be few new pledges. The Greek organizations—beyond causing some lack of manpower for house decorating purposes, might this not low concern for the queen race, etc.?

In retrospect, this was not the case at all. Participation in all phases of homecoming was excellent. The Friday night rally and the All-School Picnic on Saturday were very well attended, and a glance at persons looking at the various house decorations revealed that freshmen were very much in evidence. The balloting for the Homecoming Queen was extremely heavy (753 votes) and the game had the heaviest attendance of any in recent years. Further, the dance Saturday night was a smashing (twisting?) success with heavy attendance and although freshmen in general have no personal transportation available, they managed to appear in goodly number.

All in all, Homecoming 1962 was a good one—perhaps even as good as the posters said: "the greatest ever."

Letter to the Editor

To the Editor:

With Homecoming Weekend just over and still very fresh in the mind of the college community, I think we owe a special vote of thanks to the organization so largely responsible for the ease with which the major events seemed to take place. In the normal turn of events most people would probably forget the enormous responsibility placed on the collective shoulders of a student organization, a responsibility well met in my opinion. Blue Key; its Homecoming Chairman, Brad Chase, and its advisor, Don Oden, are to be congratulated for the excellent job they have done. I am confident that a large portion of the college community would join me in saying "Thanks."

Robin M. Rudoff

Chuck White reported that several people have requested that the possibility of changing the election format from running for commissioner to running for a specific office be looked into. This Constitution committee will do.

In line with tradition, the meeting was adjourned to the Kachina lounge for the purpose of welcoming the freshman commissioners to the fold. Because of complications not everyone could comply with the adjournment.

Sunday Morning Worship

October 21, 11:00 a.m.

Preacher: Professor Nicholas P. discalzi

Sermon Title: "The Paradox of God's Love"

Worship Leader: Mr. Dean L. M. slagle

Professor Piedadiscalzi will present an expository sermon on Romans 8:28. "We know that in everything God works for good with those who love him, who are called according to his purpose."

In his sermon Professor Piedadiscalzi will endeavor to show that this text does not state that that happens in the universe good. On the contrary, the text recognizes the presence and activity of evil. However, Paul at experienced and knew the presence and activity of God's love the universe which works for the transformation of evil; Paul, therefore, defined good not as absence of evil but as God's victory over evil. Hence, the person who loves God joins Him in his fight against evil and thereby affirms his faith in the providence of a God who suffers with his creation in order to redeem it.

From the Chair

By MAX POWER—President ASCC

Congratulations are in order this week for Brad Chase, Bill Hyle, Matt Bailey and the other members of Blue Key who made this year's Homecoming a truly outstanding event. All events were, on the whole, well organized and well attended. Many problems arising from deferred rush were met squarely and well, and it is to be hoped that many new features of Homecoming, such as the torchlight parade, will become traditional.

One recurring question that ASCC members are asked is this: "Can I, just a student, attend ASCC meetings?" The answer is, of course, that these Monday afternoon meetings are open, and that students are encouraged to attend.

Any student who wishes to speak on some item of business before ASCC, or who wishes to place a new matter before the Executive Council, will be recognized. We encourage students to follow reports of ASCC activities in the TIGER or in our minutes. Moreover, your elected representatives can tell you what items are currently being considered by ASCC, and they welcome your comments and your participation.

Must Do Irreputable Things To Field Reputable Teams

The "Importance of Athletics in a Small Liberal Arts College" was the topic of Associate Professor William Hochman's informal presentation to some fifty Colorado College students and faculty members last Tuesday afternoon at Rastall Center.

Professor Hochman opened his discussion by stating that one of the most difficult questions for a small liberal arts college to answer is not whether athletics can be justified but whether there is a style that fits a liberal arts college; a style that is being shaped slowly to meet the individual college needs.

Dr. Hochman remarked that, "We probably cannot field reputable teams in leading sports in our area without doing irreputable things." He went on to mention that these irreputable things included the subsidizing of athletics and the alienation of this group of students from the central mood and spirit of the student body. He also brought up that Colorado College is the only independent liberal arts college of its type in the Rocky Mountain West and is thus isolated. CC was at one time able to play schools of the same size and student body but that this no longer exists. Rocky Mountain Conference schools such as Colorado State College are no longer in the same class as CC. These schools have a larger men enrollment, their academic standards and admission requirements are lower than those of Colorado College, and they have a number of subsidized athletics. Therefore, it is very difficult to find a team within traveling distance that has the same requirement standards as established by CC.

Professor Hochman concluded that a first rate student body will be unable to play in the R.M.C. or the Western Hockey League on an equal basis with the other colleges of these conferences. Colorado College cannot compete in its present status without some type of financial athletic aid. This aid will produce an alienated group which is not desired of a first quality student body.

In his closing remarks Professor Hochman outlined the three desired elements that make up a college such as Colorado College. Number one, an intercollegiate program without any special athletic recruiting programs. Number two, a required two year physical education program. Number three, a broad program of intramurals based on different levels of ability with a permanent athletic staff.

During the lecture, Dr. Hochman at no time talked about, is athletics worth the cost, but rather, what athletic program is compatible to CC. It was an informative discussion of athletics at a liberal arts college.

FILM PREVIEW

Fine Arts Center

Tues., Oct. 23rd, 2:30, 7:10, 9 p.m.
"A Taste of Honey"

"A Taste of Honey" was filmed at a cost of less than half a million dollars, and yet it may be the finest English film to come to this country in the past two years. Director Tony Richardson adapted Shelagh Delaney's drama for the screen and in the process "A Taste of Honey" becomes an exception in dramatic presentations. The filmed version of the drama far surpasses the staged version in fullness, reality, and importance.

Richardson filmed the entire drama in the streets and houses where the story occurs, and in so doing he has created a revolution-ist's handbook of non-studio movie-making. Alleys, docks, churchyards, the sky, the weather all become an intricate part of the film. One can learn as much of the characters' emotions from the evocative and close-ups as from what the characters say.

The plot depicts the life of a fatherless girl of seventeen (Jo), and Jo's fly-by-night mother (Helen). The sensitive girl and the giddy mother have their spats and quarrels. Helen has belated attacks of motherly conscience, but pathetically rejects her daughter. Between family storms, Jo forms a puppy-love friendship with a young Negro. The friendship leads to a sexual experience that leaves Jo pregnant. On her own, Jo becomes a clerk, rents a ramshackle flat, and takes in a derelict and wistful young homosexual. The companionship becomes funny, charming, but hopelessly sad, ending with the return of Helen.

The film critics in the United States and England seemed quite unanimous in their acclamation of the film. Saturday Review, The New York Times, and Spectator all applauded the artistic photography and exceptionally fine talent in the lead roles. However, the film may cause you to think, and for one hour and forty minutes to be of an artificially appreciative mind. To those of you who were disappointed by "L'Aventura" I would suggest that you be willing to think about the implications and artistic subtleties after you leave the theatre. Try to remember, this film was not made in Hollywood, and deserves serious consideration.

"There's A Witch In My Valise . . "

by Chuck Miesner

In late February of 1954 Senator Joseph McCarthy, accompanied by his troupe of dwarfs and minstrels, charged a Mrs. Annie Lee Moss, a 49 year old colored cleaning lady working in the Pentagon, with encoding and decoding secret messages in the service of the Communist party. Mrs. Moss denied, under oath, both of these charges, whereupon Mr. McCarthy proceeded to state that, "We have two witnesses who know that she had been a Communist . . . a long time. This witness (meaning her testimony) is of no importance."

And so far the witch has been flogged—will she be hanged?

Granted a re-hearing, Mrs. Moss appeared once again, looking disappointingly un-witchlike in black coat, frayed white gloves and feathered hat. After much questioning and the usual threats of key, but as yet ephemeral witnesses, it was discovered that she was the wrong Annie Lee Moss (there being three of them living in Washington at the time) and when asked if she had ever heard of Karl Marx, Mrs. Moss, after some embarrassed hesitation, replied "Who's that?"

And on and on went the national lunacy, beginning in 1947 when the House Un-American Activities Committee, failing to force confessions from Ring Lardner and nine other writers, sent them all to jail. And from then on through McCarthy and even until now, with the activities of the society—that-is-so-great-we-dare-not-mention-its-name, there were witches coming through the windows, witch arms in the streets, with heads on flagpoles, and witch hairs in our cereal, with everyone else wearing a very Republican piece of garb around their neck.

But this was not to be ignored for long. Newspapers, magazines, comedians, and other sentries almost immediately attacked the superficial aspect of the problem—the bullying, the slandering, the forced confessions, and the fantastic absurdity of watching one grown man ask another grown man whether, when he was a young man in the post-war twenties or post-depression thirties, he liked his girls with long hair or short.

Even with this, however, the problem remained only chipped. It was not until someone came along and answered and delineated the real cancer beneath that anything was accomplished. And the man who did it—who did it with the Most clarity and the least saccharine—was Arthur Miller with The Crucible.

Miller works the play on two levels. He uses the Salem witch trials as the scene of the allegory—a scene which almost automatically completes the first level—that of parodying the fear, the bullying, and the pathos of the tried by what are largely visual effects, i.e., people screaming and staring wildly at spirits in the rafters, people running about hysterically, pointing fingers and scowls of damnation, etc. In short, he characterizes the external signs of the deeper problem—and with this he moves into the second level, the careful, ever-increasing movement of the theme of a group of people, faced with normal life-problems, who refuse to accept themselves—or the fact that they are just men alive—as the source of these problems and who then embark on a witch-hunt for a panacea. And as the hunt progresses through the toadstool logic of the arbiters, it expands in wild, flaring fingers as more and more people work out and "solve" their problems behind the illusory screen of the hanged and stoned.

This is what a nation did in 1947 and in 1954—and there are still many misty witches yet to be drawn on university windows by two-baton druids, and it is this fact, this possibility, that The Crucible exposes.

(Go and see The Crucible presented by the Colorado College Dramatics Department on the 25th, 26th, and 27th of this month.)

Lecture Series Continued With Dr. Walter Roberts

Dr. Walter Orr Roberts, director of the National Center for Atmospheric Research at the University of Colorado, will deliver the second annual Harold D. Roberts Memorial Lecture at Shove Memorial Chapel on October 23.

The lecture will be given at 8:15 p.m. The lecture is free of charge and open to the public.

Dr. Roberts is currently on leave from the University of Colorado where he is a professor of astro-geophysics. A Harvard University research associate, he is a nationally-recognized authority on the forces that shape the world's weather.

The Harold D. Roberts Memorial Lecture series, inaugurated last year by Nobel Prize-winning geneticist Hermann J. Muller of the University of Indiana, has been endowed by the family and friends of Mr. Roberts, who died in 1956.

A graduate of Colorado College, Harold D. Roberts was a prominent Denver attorney and a former chairman of the college's board of trustees. He received his bachelor of arts degree in economics, magna cum laude, in 1908.

He was an authority in the field of petroleum and mineral law. For many years he represented the Denver Water Board as attorney, and was serving his second term on the Colorado Conservation Board at the time of his death.

A skilled amateur naturalist, he was, with Mrs. Roberts, co-author of the book, Colorado Wild Flowers.

Venn Will Hold Conferences With Faculty and Students

On Wednesday, October 24th, Dr. Grant Venn, Special Assistant to the Associate Director for Volunteers for the Peace Corps, will visit the Colorado College campus.

He will meet informally with members of the faculty in a morning coffee hour and then confer with President Benetz and Dean Womer before lunch.

At 2:15 p.m. in Rastall Center individual conferences will be held between interested students and Dr. Venn followed by a short movie on Peace Corps Volunteers abroad at 3:30. At 4 p.m. the International Relations Club will sponsor a public meeting where Dr. Venn will lead a general discussion on questions of the Peace Corps.

Dr. Venn received his education at Washington State University where he attained his B.S., B.Ed., M.A., and Ed.D. degrees. More recently, he was president of Western State College of Colorado at Gunnison. Before that he served as superintendent of schools in Combing, New York and Otello, Washington. He taught Educational Administration at Washington State University and was a Guidance Counselor in the Pullman and Yakima Public High Schools. He was the first chairman of the New York State Council for Economic Education and is a member of the honorary fraternities (in Education, Psychology, Agriculture).

Snyder Represents CC At Science Foundation

The National Science Foundation held its first panel meeting on October 11 and 12. The members of this panel were made up of scientists from some leading colleges and universities in the nation. They evaluated proposals made under the foundations Undergraduate Science Education program.

Representing Colorado College was Professor Milton K. Snyder of the Chemistry department. In describing the Foundation's aims, he said "This program is intended to support scholarly development of out-standing undergrads at colleges, universities and non-profit research institutions across the country." Also the program provides for research participation as well as a variety of programs in undergraduate independent study.

Prof. Snyder joined the faculty of the independent college of arts and sciences here in 1957. He holds a Ph.D. degree from the University of Illinois and has taught chemistry there as well as at Drury College in Missouri.

THE OPENDOOR

Academic Freedom For What by Professor Darrell A. Rucker

The vigilantes are loose again (or still), stoutly armored in fear and hate, Klansmen and Birchites and Sons of Blood and Thunder. Fortunately for us, Colorado College has been virtually unscathed in recent years, and academic freedom is pretty much taken for granted, as it should be within any respectable institution of learning. We can thank a sequence of staunch administrations and a growing circle of friends of the College for our enviable position. But the fact that other institutions are having a rougher time of it should at least make us take stock of what we are doing with our freedom.

The first amendment to the Constitution guarantees freedom of speech, press, and assembly. Why then has academic freedom been traditionally singled out as a special problem, and why is it a source of almost constant battling in one section of the country or another? Academic freedom is a special concern because academic institutions are the principal location there is of ourselves and our world. Hence if we consider such examination of signal importance in a rapidly changing world, the problem of free discussion comes to a focus in our schools. On the other hand, those who consider any questioning of the language or the realities of politics, economics, or religion as a direct threat to themselves and their values will recognize a seminal evil in the colleges and universities. But to what extent do we in the colleges deserve to be considered either the best hope for or the worst threat to the well-being of the world?

Academic freedom, in most cases, seems to mean the freedom to say what we please, short of libel, inciting to riot, and obscenity. And such freedom of speech is a necessary requisite for an educational institution. But I doubt that being able to make any kind of speech we wish is any ultimate justification for the concern and effort necessary to maintain that ability. A college that functions as a seat of real learning is a community of scholars. This ideal college, unlike some actual institutions, is a community of teachers and students, for the simple reason that students can be educated only by participating in a process of scrutinizing our language, our ideas, and our world. The dogmatic assertion of any position, whether on the approved right or the disapproved left of the political spectrum, does not fulfill the obligation of a college to itself or to the society that supports it. The doctrinaire liberal and closed-minded socialist are no different intellectually from the crookpot rightist, so far as the role of a community of scholars goes. Yet we find ourselves continually defending the liberal's right to be doctrinaire because most of the attacks on the colleges come from the other side of the spectrum. But in uttering or accepting dogmas (whether in politics, science, literature, or philosophy), we are failing to meet the responsibilities of scholarly freedom.

Only if we utilize our freedom to examine as objectively as we can all that we deal with are worthy of that freedom. This means, first of all, being willing to look critically at whatever we study: at our political system, our economy, our religions, our sciences—and at different systems, both actual and theoretical. There is no room for sacred cows in a community of scholars; not even those of democracy or free enterprise. Otherwise we have no real ground for saying what is wrong or what is right about anything. Looking critically means, further, not looking for any purpose beyond finding out as best we can what the truth is. In other words, we should not read Marx in order to discredit his theories nor read Jefferson in order to justify his theories. Hence the viciousness of instituting "courses" in Communism which are nothing more than anti-Communist propaganda. It should go without saying that propaganda, pro- or anti-anything, is out of place in an education process.

The scholar, student or teacher, who looks at any field of knowledge as thoroughly as he can and evaluates it as best he knows how is performing the peculiar job of a scholar. The teacher's role is simply that of guiding the student in doing that job. A scholar who finds some things of value in Marxism is not thereby a traitor; neither is the scholar who finds something to credit in Goldwaterism thereby a reactionary. The man who overtly tries to organize the overthrow of the government to pave the way for Marxism is no longer acting as a scholar, but as a politician. And the goals of politics are different from the goals of scholarship. It is to be hoped that an exposure for a time to the world of scholarship will enable a man to become a better politician or lawyer or physician or business man, but the scholar's job is not that of any of these other callings. The politician or lawyer is committed to certain ideas or institutions; the scholar is committed to the search for truth.

Does the traditional concept of private property do anything other than befuddle economic analysis? Have most religions any reasonable relevance to the kind of lives we live? Are scientists entitled to the aura of infallibility we invest them with, any more than the priests were in the past? What evidence do we have that men ever have been or ever will be capable of governing themselves? What is scientific about the social sciences? Are art and philosophy anything more than conventionally respectable frauds? If a man is prepared to entertain such questions as these and to seek answers in all seriousness, then he is well on his way to becoming an educated man. If, however, such questions strike him as impertinent and improper, his mind must be opened before and education is even possible.

Academic freedom is freedom to seek the truth about anything of interest to men. Academic institutions have no responsibility of increasing man's knowledge, guiding the development of the intelligence of the young, and criticizing existing ideas and institutions, including the academic. The discharge of those responsibilities is dependent upon freedom of discussion; the continuation of that freedom, in turn, is dependent in an ultimate way upon the full acceptance of the responsibilities. As a college, we do accept the function of a community of scholars in principle. As students and teachers, we need to keep ourselves explicitly aware of just what that function is.—Darrell Rucker

Religious Affairs Committee

The first discussion group and supper sponsored by the Religious Affairs Committee will be held next Sunday, October 21, from 5:30 to 7:00 p.m. Professor Gray will lead the discussion on the current novel Lord of the Flies. The supper at the Alpha Phi house is 25c per plate.

The second discussion, to be held Oct. 28, will concern psychology and religion. The discussion leader will be Mr. Dietiker who is doing research work in the Children's Research Institute in Denver.

Tigers Fumble Away Game Against Tight CSC Defense

Coach Jerry Carle's Colorado College Tiger football team came up against a spirited defensive minded Colorado State College team, and the CC eleven wound up on the short end of their 35-8 Homecoming game. The contest, played before some 3500 Colorado College students and alumni, displayed fine passing and defensive plays by both squads. The Tigers fumbled away their chances for any victory when the Bears recovered three loose balls in the last two quarters and went on to score two of them.

CC standouts included the passing of freshman quarterback Milt Franke, who completed 9 out of 15 attempts for a total of 101 yards including the only touchdown and the two point conversion. The Black and Gold's passing offense helped to offset their total net ground game of only four yards. Senior fullback Wayne Deutscher was the leading rusher with twenty yards in four carries. Ken Mellin was top receiver snagging two passes good for 41 yards. Chris Batley helped the Tigers out of enemy territory several times by booting eight punts for a 41.55 yard average with one punt of 52 yards and another of 60 yards.

CSC drew first blood with 7:40 minutes gone in the opening quarter when the Bears Jack Richardson scampered 61 yards up the middle to the Tiger seven yard line. After one play which moved the pigskin to the five yard line, Chuck Chamberlain crashed over center for the TD. Richardson then added the first of five straight conversions.

The Greeley Bears' second touchdown came after a CC fumble on the 21 yard line, and Doug Duren plunged over the goal line for the second CSC touchdown with 6:58 minutes gone in the second period.

The Tiger offense began to click late in the first half after they took over on their own 20 yard line and in six plays marched down the field to score. The highlight of the drive was the passing of Franke to Ken Mellin for 38 yards and the 18 yard flip for the touchdown from Franke to Bob Broyles. The Black and Gold added a two point conversion on another pass from Franke to Broyles. At half-time the Tigers were only down by six points, (15-8).

It was all Colorado State College second half as the Bears tallied once in the third period and twice in the final stanza. Their third touchdown came with seven minutes left to play when CSC recovered a CC fumble on the Tiger 13 yard line and Frank Dalney carried across the goal line two plays later.

Fourth period scoring was set up by two more Tiger miscues. The CC eleven fumbled a punt return over to the Bears at the 12 yard line. On the next play Ed Pittach romped around left end to score. The fifth and final Greeley touchdown came with 48 seconds to go. CSC intercepted a Tiger aerial and following two plays Henry Hladik scooted the right side to end the point-making.

This was the first Rocky Mountain Conference game for Colorado College who will meet Western State College October 27, at Washburn Field. The Tigers play away this weekend at Concordia College.

Dr. Macartney brings a most distinguished background to his task. Educated at Winchester and at Trinity College, Cambridge University, he served in the European War, 1914-18, in the British Forces. After the war, from 1921 to 1925 he served as British Majesty's Vice Consul in Vienna. He joined the staff of the Encyclopedia Britannica in 1926 to 1928, and became a member of the Intelligence Department, League of Nations Unit, from 1928 to 1936. He joined the Research Department of the Foreign Office from 1939 to 1946. Since 1936 he has been a Research Fellow at All Souls College, Oxford University, and he has served as Montagu Burton Professor of International Relations at Edinburgh University from 1951 to 1957.

His many publications include the following: The Social Revolution in Austria; Survey of International Affairs; National States and National Minorities; Hungary and Her Successors; Problems of the Danube Basin. He has contributed many articles to professional journals and reviews.

Following his talk, there will be a question-and-answer discussion period. All Colorado College students are urged to avail themselves of this opportunity to hear one of the outstanding experts on the Central European discourse discussed the important topic of "Nationalism and Internationalism in Eastern Europe."

Any Information Team Be on CC Campus To Answer Questions

The Navy Officer Information Team consisting of LCDR W. H. Alexander and LTJG R. D. May will be on the Colorado College campus from 9:00 a. m. until 2:00 p. m. on October 26 to answer questions relative to obtaining a commission in any of eight separate fields. The team will be located at the Student Union.

The Navy is now accepting the applications of prospective college graduates up to one year prior to their receiving their degrees for Officer Candidate (School CS) and Aviation Officer Candidate (AOC) programs. Naval Aviators may apply when they have accumulated 45 semester hours, or 67 quarter hours of passage, grades.

Under the current regulations a prospective officer candidate for OCS or AOC programs will be placed on an inactive status until the academic requirements are completed. Naval Aviator Candidates will be sworn in upon completion of 60 semester or 90 quarter hours and be placed on active duty to commence the flight training program.

By this enlistment an individual is assured of getting the service of his choice, and in addition fulfilling the mandatory military service obligation when ordered to active duty.

Symposium Publicity Committee Announces Symbol Contest

The Symposium Publicity Committee announces a contest designed to help them arrive at the best graphic symbol for use in reflecting the spirit of this intellectual program and in conveying, in general, the scope of the week-long activities.

The title of the 1963 Symposium is, "THE CONTEMPORARY ARTS AND THE CITIZEN." The winning symbol will accompany this title on all programs, announcements, posters, etc. It is hoped that the winning symbol will lend itself to three dimensional construction so as to permit this committee to erect a large replica on the campus as a focal point for the entire program.

ELIGIBILITY: All registered students at Colorado College are eligible to submit as many single entries as they wish.

DEADLINES: Entries may be submitted to Mr. Oden, committee chairman, anytime up to but no later than 5 p.m. Friday, November 2nd.

ENTRIES: Entries may be black and white or colored in any manner. They must be submitted on heavy card, poster board or any firm paper to insure safety, ease of handling and display. Each entry must be done on a paper size of not less than 8 x 11 inches and not more than 24 x 36. All entries will be displayed in Rastall Center beginning Saturday, November 3rd and will remain the property of the Symposium Publicity Committee until November 12th at which time they will be returned to the entrant. The Committee reserves the right to use the winning entry in all of its media of publicity throughout the 1963 Symposium program.

JUDGING: A team of selected judges will review all entries on Saturday, November 3rd and the winning entry will be announced that same day. The judges will take into account the following areas of judging:

- (1) Simplicity
- (2) General artistry
- (3) Support of Symposium theme

PRIZE: The winning entry based upon the decision of the judges will receive a prize of $15.00.

QUESTIONS: Questions concerning the contest should be directed to Judy Cookingham or Don Oden.

The title of Mr. Housman's thesis is An Analysis of Disciplinary Procedures and Corrective Techniques Utilized by Junior High School Teachers and Administrators in District 60, Pueblo, Colorado. The examining committee will be Professors J. Victor Hopper, Van B. Shaw, and Ray Werner.

Notice!

The second meeting of the Student Education Association will be held Tuesday, October 30 at 4:15 p.m. in Rastall Center.

Mr. Eugene Hertzke, Principal of Will Rogers Elementary School in Colorado Springs will speak on the professional teacher and professional organizations.

Please Use It; Don't Abuse It

The Olin Hall House Committee wishes to solicit the aid of the students and faculty in helping us see that Olin Hall is used but not abused and that it is kept in a presentable condition at all times. Toward this end we have made a few fundamental rules, and we wish to make a few other suggestions with respect to conduct in the building.

1. Olin Hall will be open from 7:00 a. m. to 10:00 p. m., Monday through Friday and 7:00 a. m. to 4:00 p. m. on Saturday. Students are encouraged to make use of the lounge-study area in the west wing during these hours.
2. Whenever chalkboard areas are used in the building, we would like to request that these boards be erased when persons using them are finished.
3. Chairs are not to be moved from one classroom to another.
4. The bulletin board in the lounge is under the jurisdiction of Mrs. Ruth Weber, Olin Hall secretary and receptionist; and items to be placed on this bulletin board must be cleared with her at her desk in the lounge. Otherwise all bulletin boards in the building are for academic use and are to be used for material pertinent to the areas in which they are located.
5. Posters and signs may not be placed on the walls of the building for any purpose.
6. Smoking is permitted only in lobbies, offices, seminar rooms, lounge, rest rooms, and basement hall. All smokers are requested to use ash trays.
7. Lost and found items in the building will be turned in to Mrs. Weber at the reception desk. After several days these will be turned over to Rastall Center.
8. All suggestions and requests concerning the operation of the building should be directed to the Olin Hall House Committee: Dr. Snyder (Chemistry), Chairman, Dr. Bradley (Physics), Dr. Hamilton (Zoology).

Arnest's Paintings Exhibited in NYC

An exhibit of some 20 oil paintings done by Professor Bernard Arnest, opened Monday, October 15, at Kraushaar Galleries in New York City. The exhibit will hang in the gallery through November 3.

The exhibit is composed of paintings which Professor Arnest has painted during the past two years. Eight of the paintings are the result of his recent three month visit to Afghanistan. This trip was taken in the summer of 1960. Professor Arnest painted and sketched near the mountain city of Kabul and in the nearby region. He did so under commission from the U.S. State Department. The trip resulted in 21 paintings, ten of which were painted on the spot, and the rest upon his return to Colorado.

Let's Twist!

GIRLS! You have just one week. One week in which to hurry up and ask a fellow to the Turnabout Twist of Friday, November 2, at Rastall Center.

This is one of the few opportunities the girls have to switch roles with the boys and everybody should take advantage of it. This twister will be a swinger with Peter Krawer and his hand providing the music.

The dance is free, gals, and refreshments will be served, so get out and get yourself a guy for next Friday night.

LETTERS to the EDITOR

to the Editor:
In view of student criticism of the inspection system at the new Tutt Library, the Colorado College Library Committee wishes by this letter to back up the library administration in the current maintenance of this system.

Such a system might seem arbitrary and unnecessary in a community of scholars and gentlemen (gentlewomen, too.) However, the serious fact remains that each year from 800 to 1000 volumes are removed from the library when there was no adequate inspection system. There might be a feeling of conscience in suggesting that these volumes were removed by people not directly associated with the campus; however, there has been an embarrassing association between the nature of books lost and the nature of campus course assignments. In other words, this appears in the main to be a campus concern.

The library problem transcends the mere theft of books. For example, each month there is at least one case of mutilation of a library book or periodical. After the time of Ernest Hemingway's death, most of the articles about this American author were removed from library periodicals. Twenty or thirty articles have been clipped or torn from the Encyclopedia of the Social Sciences. Illustrations are removed from magazines and newspapers. Unfortunately, these particular kinds of misdemeanors are difficult to control even with an inspection system.

All of us on campus are interested in the fullest and easiest use of Tutt Library. The ASSC and the Honor Council are currently considering the problem; and we anticipate that a serious cooperation endeavor among students and faculty will result in a satisfactory solution.

Richard Beidelman

To the Editor of the Tiger:
Your article in last week's Tiger which dealt with my talk on athletics at a liberal arts college passed over a principal theme that I emphasized. Four articles featured that part of my talk in which I suggested that unsubsidized athletic teams might not be able to compete on an equal basis against subsidized teams in major sports in our area. You also featured my statement that a program of athletic subsidies had produced in the past an alienated element in our student body, that is, a group of students separated in mood and spirit from the main body of students.

Your reporter neglected to report my comments on the style in athletics that has been developing at Colorado College in recent years. I emphasized in my talk that an unsubsidized policy is now being followed at Colorado College and that Coach Carle and his assistants are now fielding an unsubsidized football team composed of men playing because they love football. I called on students to support that unsubsidized team enthusiastically because it is a team that is compatible with the spirit of a liberal arts college. The football team is making a great effort this year to demonstrate that we can continue to compete against teams within reasonable travel distance. I am one of those who hope that Coach Carle's program will be successful and that we can continue to play and enjoy intercollegiate football and other major sports at Colorado College.

Sincerely,
William R. Hochman
Associate Professor of History

Evening at Slocum Planned by Frosh

Since last month's elections, the freshman commissioners have been planning class activities. As a result of this, President Hugh Bell announces plans for a freshman song fest and dance to be held Saturday, November 10th. At 7:30, the frosh men will parade to the women's dorms and escort them back to the Slocum lounge. Singing by the fireside will begin the evening's events, and later there will be dancing. There is going to be a band and refreshments to help make the evening a relaxing break from studying. Dress will be sweaters, skirts, and slacks. This dance will be an excellent opportunity for making new friendships and for just having a good time.

There will be a freshman class meeting at 11:00 on Tuesday, October 30th in Perkins Hall. At this meeting, the frosh commissioners will give more information about the song-fest and dance, and other business will be discussed.

Political Science Department To Hold Meeting Concerning Job Possibilities for Majors

ASCC Presents Annual Variety Show Nov. 6-9

Associated Students of Colorado College will present the 15th Annual Variety Show on the evening of November 6th, 7th, 8th, and 9th at 8:15 p.m. in Perkins Hall. All proceeds from the show will benefit the United Fund Drive of Colorado Springs.

The variety show, directed by Boots Stockton, Don Bradbury, and Mike Irsfeld, is presented entirely by Colorado College students, and affords an opportunity for the participants to display their varied talents. The MC's are Diane Cox and Jerry Agnew. This year's show promises to be one of the best ever presented. Fernando Perez and Luis Arrieta will add a dash of Latin America flavor with their flamenco guitar music. Included among the three selections Mr. Cox and his dancers have chosen for the show is a number from Carmen, featuring Carrie Sanborn, Sece Boyce and Chris Thatcher. Returning to the show will be one of CC's favorites, Barbara Couey, as well as the fraternities and the sororities, each with their individual acts.

This is but a sample of the fine entertainment planned for this year's variety show. Tickets are one dollar, and sales start today, October 26, at Rastall Desk. Seats are reserved, so buy your tickets early!

Cultural Events Notice Provided for Residents

Colorado College has undertaken a project to provide special notices of cultural events taking place on the campus to all residents of the Pikes Peak area wishing to receive them.

In charge of this program is Dr. Fred A. Sondermann, associate dean of the college.

He has invited those who are interested in receiving information about lectures, concerts, discussions, exhibits and special seminars to write or telephone him at the college. They will receive announcements of events open to the public without charge.

"We feel the college has for a long time served as a real cultural asset to the community, and want to assure that it will continue to serve in this way—in fact, that it will perform an ever-increasing function in this area," Dr. Sondermann said.

"Therefore, we would like to have the names of all persons in the community who would like to receive notices of special events sponsored by the college."

HIGH TEST, LOW TEST, NO TEST

Just the other night I was saying to the little woman, "Do you think the importance of tests in American colleges is being overemphasized?" (The little woman, incidentally, is not, as you might think, my wife. My wife is far from a little woman. She is, in fact, almost seven feet high and heavily muscled. She is a full-blooded Chiricahua Apache and holds the world's hammer-throw record. The little woman I referred to is someone we found crouching under the sofa when we moved into our apartment several years ago, and there she has remained ever since. She never speaks, except to make a kind of guttural sound when she is hungry. Actually, she is not too much fun to have around, but with my wife away at track meets most of the time, at least it gives me somebody to talk to.)

But I digress. "Do you think the importance of tests in American colleges is being overemphasized?" I said the other night to the little woman, and then I said, "Yes, Max, I do think the importance of tests in American colleges is being overemphasized." (As I have explained, the little woman does not speak, so when we have conversations, I am forced to do both parts.)

Actually, she is not too much fun to have around

To get back to tests—sure, they're important, but let's not allow them to get too important. There are, after all, many qualities and talents that simply can't be measured by quizzes. Is it right to penalize a gifted student whose gifts don't happen to be of the academic variety? Like, for instance, Gregor Sigafos?

Gregor, a freshman at the New Hampshire College of Tanning and Belles Lettres, has never passed a single test; yet all who know him agree that he is stuffed with talent like a ham with cloves. He can, for example, sleep standing up. He can do a perfect imitation of a scarlet tanager. (I don't mean just do the bird calls; I mean he can fly South in the winter.) He can pick up B-B's with his toes. He can say "Toy boat" three times fast. He can build a rude telephone out of two empty Marlboro packs and 100 yards of butcher's twine. (Of all his impressive accomplishments, this last is the one Gregor likes to do best—not building the telephone, but emptying the Marlboro packs. Gregor doesn't just dump the Marlboros out of the pack. He smokes them one at a time—setting back, getting comfortable, savoring each tasty puff. As Gregor often says with a winsome smile, "By George, the makers of Marlboro took their time finding this fine flavor, this great filter, and by George, I'm going to take my time enjoying 'em!"

Well, sir, there you have Gregor Sigafos—artist, humanist, philosopher, Marlboro smoker, and freshman since 1939. Will the world—so desperately in need of talent—ever benefit from Gregor's great gifts? Alas, no. He is in college to stay.

But even more tragic for mankind is the case of Anna Livia Plurabelle. Anna Livia, a classmate of Gregor's, had no talent, no gifts, no brains, no personality. All she had was a knack for taking tests. She would cram like crazy before a test, always get a perfect score, and then promptly forget everything she had learned. Naturally, she graduated with highest honors and degrees by the dozen, but the sad fact is that she left college no more educated, no more prepared to cope with the world, than when she entered. Today, a broken woman, she crouches under my sofa.

© 1965 Max Shuman

And speaking of tests, we makers of Marlboro put our cigarette through an impressive number before we sent it to the market. But ultimately, there is only one test that counts: Do YOU like IT? We think you will.

Bowling Tryouts To Be Held Soon

Tryouts for the school bowling team will be held this Sunday, October 23, at 2:15 p.m. in the Rustall Games Area.

All male students who are interested are urged to be present. The ten top series scored by the bowlers will qualify for the play-off the following Sunday. From these, six bowlers will be picked to fill the six slots open on the team.

This year the schedule will include Colorado University, Colorado State University, Colorado State College, the Air Force Academy, and Pueblo Junior College. Other teams may be added as the season progresses.

The National Collegiate Tournament, as always, will be held at the site of the American Bowling Congress Tournament which will be held this year in Buffalo, New York. The regionals to qualify for this tournament will be in Denver, Colorado, this year.

You are asked to come early in order to reserve a position in the tournament. You may contact Bill Pelz at any time to assure yourself a reservation. This will be the only tryout for the team.

To the Colorado College Community:

Currently we are in a time of crisis. In fifteen years as a college president I have seen a good many come and go. This crisis, like the others, is serious, we can only trust in our leaders and in the realism of all government heads concerning the impossible consequences of all-out action.

The war such as is chronically threatened is not a war of guns and men, both would be useless. The Cold War we are living through is not a matter of guns so much as wills, backed up by minds who know what we are fighting for. Until and unless our country calls us to other posts therefore the best we can do as each crisis comes along is to stick to our posts in a college of this sort and try to prepare for the long, anxious pull which I still believe is the destiny of our times.

CC Outplayed By Concordia

Colorado College met a stumbling block last Saturday as the Black and Gold were axed 14 to 0 by Concordia College at Seward, Nebraska. The defeat left the Tigers with a 1-4 record with four games still remaining.

CC at no time was able to master an offensive attack as they picked up only 29 yards on the ground and netted only 40 yards via the air. Concordia, on the other hand, gained 217 yards rushing and picked up 44 yards passing.

Concordia's first touchdown was set up in the first period when CC fumbled a punt on their own 16 yard line. Three plays later Ron Royuk crashed over from the 1 yard line to score. After the extra point Concordia was in front 7-0. The second TD came in the final period when a Tiger aerial was intercepted by Ed Richter on the Colorado College 34 yard line. With 1:42 left to play in the game Ed Richter scooted over the goal line to add the second six points. Following their second successful conversion, Concordia had won 14-0.

CC's longest gain was a 20-yard pass play from Bob Broyles to Vince Greco who also drove for 25 of the 29 yards gained by CC to lead Tiger rushers.

Colorado College will return to Rocky Mountain Conference action this Saturday as the Tiger eleven battles Western State at Washburn Field starting at 2 p.m. Western State is 0-2 in RMC play and is 2-4 in all games. Last week Eastern New Mexico tipped Western State 23 to 7. This game will be a battle to see which team can escape the cellar. Other contests will see league leader Adams State try to down a strong Colorado State College team at Alamosa. Colorado Mines will journey to Black Hills Teachers College for a non-conference game.

Intramural Football

Coming down the back stretch in the Slocum Intramural program, definite wing powers have been established. Second South and First North are the only teams that have unblemished records. Second West, not to be counted out of the race, has only one loss and two ties as a result of an upset-minded First South squad's efforts, who contained the Second West offense, and held the score at 0-0. Previously in the week, Second West had beaten First West, in an apparent down the stretch drive.

First North continued its winning ways by downing Arthur House, while Second South's Dee Wilson, a fine passer, connected with Lyle Hayes to edge stubborn Third West 8-0. Across the way, First South, pointing towards the Second West game, whipped Fourth West 12-0, on two passes from quarterback Carl Hahab to end Steve Prough.

Second South and First North primed for their eventual showdown, as the former downed First West and the latter downed Second North.

Third South, a one time contender, battered Fourth West 22-0. Bob Bohac put on a dashing appearance as he passed for two touchdowns and ran for the third.

First North faces the rough going in that it must go against Second South and Second West. Second South aspires to a win while Second West's only hope is having Second South downed by First North, and in turn getting the upper hand over First North. This would, if no other losses or ties occur, throw the league title into a three way tie, and a series of playoffs.

Carl Roberts Appointed Member of N.S.F. Panel

Professor Carl Roberts, chairman of the Colorado College psychology department, has been appointed a member of a special National Science Foundation grant evaluation panel.

The panel is scheduled to meet Nov. 12 and 13 in Chicago to evaluate proposals submitted to the NSF for grants for undergraduate instructional equipment in the sciences.

Professor Roberts and other scientists from leading colleges and universities across the country were asked to serve on the panel because of their experience and interest in science education.

Professor Roberts joined the faculty here in 1957. For the past year he has been studying the effects of certain sensory changes in the learning process under research grants from the National Institute of Mental Health and the National Science Foundation.

Carle to Head Referee System

Jerry Carle, athletic director at Colorado College, has been appointed referee-in-chief of a new system of officials that will be used in the Western College Hockey Association this year.

According to the new setup, six officials will work all WCHA games during the forthcoming season.

Carle, who will be in charge of the system, will assign one official along with two local line-men for each conference game.

The officials will be moved around throughout the year. In this way, the WCHA hopes to get more consistent interpretation of the rules.

Jerry Carle became athletic director at CC six years ago and is also head football coach. Carle holds a bachelor of science degree from Northwestern University where he played football under both Lynn Waldorf and Bob Voights. He also spent a year at the University of Minnesota.

Migrant Unemployment Frequent Alford Asserts During Assembly

by Brad Snyder

Mr. Jack Alford, field representative of the National Council of Churches, spoke last Tuesday morning to a small but interested group of students on the plight of America's 10,000,000 migrant workers. Reverend Kenneth Burton, minister of Shove Chapel, introduced the speaker by commenting that, after President Kennedy's speech on the previous afternoon, the subject of migrant workers might no longer seem so pressing, but that this was the duty and nature of a good government to continue to strive for the solution of smaller and more personal problems even in times of extreme crisis.

Mr. Alford began by differentiating between the million migrant workers who are residents and citizens of the United States and the half million Mexican nationals who are imported each summer exclusively for harvest work. He then went on to describe the life and work of those million Americans. Unemployment is frequent, perhaps totaling half the year. Wages are criminally low. The work itself is physically exhausting and the children often begin well under ten years of age. Yet, and this is their true plight, there is very little opportunity for these people to change their way of life. The large growing and mining companies, who are the major employers, deny the right to organize unions. The migrants themselves cannot vote for change, since they do not live in one community long enough to gain suffrage. And the children, by the time they have grown into adults, seldom have more than a third or fourth grade education, again since they are always on the move, and thus can only with great difficulty go out in the world and learn new trades.

Similarly, since any given employee stays such a short time, none of the employers feel bound to provide decent living quarters.

Mr. Alford told of crowded and decaying houses, filthy sanitary facilities and practically non-existent fresh water sources.

Mr. Alford then presented a series of slides showing the life of the migrants and the work of the Harvest Ministry, which is pretty well equally divided between religious and social betterment. This reporter, as perhaps many others in the audience, was surprised to see that the migrant workers were by no means idle drifters upon whom improvement was being forced. They had bright, clean and ambitious faces and seemed to exhibit care and taste in what few clothes and possessions they had. It would seem that reform is more than long overdue; that these people want to be responsible American citizens; that legislators as well as religious and social groups must begin to give these people the rights and opportunities which are inherent in their purpose

Among the young people being graduated from college in these times, there are some who think and feel—perhaps a little more deeply than the others—about the world we live in, the future we face. They ask, "How can I make my career really meaningful? More than just personally rewarding?"

And many of today's most successful young people are finding a fulfilling answer to these questions as officers on the Aerospace Team... the United States Air Force. They can tell you that no career could better combine the opportunity for achievement—and the deep inner satisfaction of knowing that they are helping preserve the very future of America.

How can you become an Air Force Officer?

If you are a college senior and not currently enrolled in ROTC, Air Force Officer Training School provides an opportunity to qualify for a wide variety of career fields. The graduate of this three-month course receives a commission as a second lieutenant. As the Air Force continues its technological advance, officers with college training will move into positions of increasing importance.

For full information—including the opportunity to earn graduate degrees at Air Force expense—see the Air Force Selection Team when it visits your college, visit your local Air Force Recruiting Office, or write: Air Force Officer Career Information, Dept. SC210, Box 805, New York 1, New York.

Pervasive Effect of Weather Subject of Roberts Lecture

On Tuesday, October 23, President Benezet opened the second in the Harold E. Roberts Science Lecture Series, endowed by a late chairman of the Board of Trustees and member of the class of 1908. After a few prefatory remarks, Benezet introduced the evening's second Roberts, Dr. Walter Orr Roberts, former director of the High-Altitude Observatory at Boulder, Colo., research fellow at Harvard, and presently director of the National Center for Atmospheric Research in Boulder to lecture on the question: "Can the World's Weather Be Controlled?"

Dr. Roberts, taking the podium, launched initially into an exposition of the pervasive influence the weather's course has on the lives of the entire world population. In an increasingly crowded world, he pointed out, population was expected to double in the near future, while during the same period of time agricultural productivity could be expected to increase by only 25%. This means, he pointed out, that adequacy of the world's food supply will become increasingly more precarious, and that weather will become an ever more crucial factor in the maintenance of high productivity. Also as a direct result of a radical increase in population, Dr. Roberts followed the probable increase in urbanization and the resultant higher degree of vulnerability to the whims of the weather. Finally, the lecturer simply sketched in the outlines of the huge savings possible in planning and ordering events on the basis of predictable, if not controllable, meteorological phenomena.

Moving from an indication of the need for weather predictability and control, Roberts traced meteorologists' efforts to follow the course of weather trends since 500 B.C. It was at about this time, asserted Roberts, that world weather took a sudden turn for the worse, altering Scandinavia's climate from a mild to semi-arctic pattern and rendering the Mediterranean area more suitable for the growth of civilization. The next 1000 years apparently showed a gradual return to pre-500 B.C. weather patterns, with Scandinavian climate at its mildest again around the 11th century, a time of wide cultural expansion for the area. Once again, however, Roberts pointed out, a new worsening of the climatic conditions took place in about 1500, very similar to the drastic change of 500 B.C. He outlined attempts by meteorologists to reconstruct day-to-day weather patterns for the 15th and 16th centuries, apparently at opposite extremes of a possibly cyclical variation in climate.

The Roberts' lecturer then considered the principal forces thus far indicated as key factors in determination of the world's weather patterns. He emphasized the intimate interrelationship between meteorological events, however widely separated, and indicated the importance of the jet stream in determining weather and pointed out the apparent tendency of certain changes in weather patterns to be cumulative in their recurrence. He asserted that meteorology was happily emerging from a discussion of phenomena qualitatively to a real analysis of the same phenomena quantitatively.

The Harvard research fellow then outlined the aims of the principal project at the National Center for Atmospheric Research in Boulder. In 3 major steps, said Dr. Roberts, the Center has hopes, albeit extremely long-range hopes, to achieve some degree of control over weather patterns. The three steps:

1. To set up a new, extremely wide-reaching system of weather observation, at 5000 points in the northern hemisphere and covering 5 atmospheric and 2 oceanic levels. The immediate aim of this first step is to achieve a reliable system of long-range weather prediction.

2. To employ these long-range methods of prediction in assessing possible weather changes as a result of artificial intervention.

3. After evaluating all the dangers and probable advantages of such intervention, to actually make the crucial attempt to alter weather patterns to suit man's own needs.

The first step, said Roberts, is already in progress. The second will require the use of computers not now available; computers capable of performing 1 billion calculations per day. He estimated that the project would require 10 years to complete and asserted that odds against the third step's eventual completion ran as high as 100 to 1, but pointed out hopefully that even if control of weather were not achieved, the improvements likely in long-range forecasting would make the project well worth the effort.

Finally, Roberts turned to the possible implications of such control if achieved. By making a tiny change in the weather patterns around the Gulf of Alaska, the lecturer asserted, the climate of all of North America could be drastically altered. Such forces in the hands of mankind, Roberts felt constrained to assert, could be used either for extreme benefit to the entire world or for "weather warfare," if man so chose. "Fortunately," he asserted, tongue in cheek, "such dismal prospects are highly unlikely, since the prospects for the project's success are extremely small."

The Roberts' lecturer closed with a plea for international cooperation in weather control efforts, asserting that a free exchange of information in this area could accelerate progress tremendously.

WERE READY — Colorado College President Louis T. Benezet (left) and Gerald L. Schlessman, prominent Denver businessman, bring a life ring along to inspect construction on the college's new swimming pool. The olympic-size pool, expected to be completed next spring, will be a part of a $1,200,000 sports center at the independent college of arts and sciences in Colorado Springs. Mr. Schlessman and his family are the principal donors to the swimming pool building. Sliding doors, glass walls and patios will provide an indoor-outdoor atmosphere.

Cap and Gown Holds Dinner

Cap and Gown, Senior Women's Honor Society, held its first dinner meeting of the year on Wednesday evening, October 17, in the Hall. Guests attending this dinner were President and Mrs. Louis Benezet, Mr. Donald Lelong, business professor, and Miss Nyquist, president of Alpha Lambda Delta.

Each month Cap and Gown has one regular business meeting and one formal dinner, to which various guests are invited. The group also sponsors the Shove Coffee Hours and undertakes projects throughout the year. Plans for this year include a tea for junior women with 3.0 or above cumulative grade average and a similar tea for sophomore women in the spring. A series of speakers for women students on life after college—more than teaching or graduate school—and a bulletin board in the City Center displaying opportunities for women college graduates.

Cap and Gown members are selected on the basis of leadership, scholarship and service within the college community. These women may be recognized by their white blazers, which bear a green badge of the organization on the pocket. Members of the group are: Sece Boyce, president; Julie Bohke, vice-president; Pam Eng Benham, secretary; Lani Magintien, treasurer; Polly Franklin, treasurer; Ann Armstrong, and K. Bessezen. Cap and Gown advisers are Mrs. Glenn Brooks, Miss Ann Shihnew, and Mrs. Benezet. Arnest.

Pershing Rifles Holds Installation

On October 16, The Pershing Rifles Company D-9 of Colorado College held its annual installation dinner. Following the dinner, a very enlightening talk on the villa warfare was given by the guest speaker of the evening, Colonel Charles E. Roman, who is now Deputy Post Commander at Fort Carson. Other guests in attendance were various members of the ROTC Department and the Battalion Staff.

Installed were James Cotton, commanding officer, Jay Vetter, man as executive officer, Grant as personnel officer, Anisgar as public information officer, Ernest Le Melle as operations officer, and Denis Sauve as support officer.

Contemporary Arts and Citizen to Be Subject of Symposium

Through the maze of mid-term examinations and papers, January 14 may appear to be far away, but the importance of the date, the mark for the beginning of the 1963 Symposium, is already evident. Entitled "The Contemporary Arts and the Citizen," this year's event will give the student body an opportunity to explore current developments in the arts; including literature, music, drama, art, and movies. The six day event will be sparked by some of the most influential exponents of contemporary arts. A partial list of participants includes Milton Babbitt, composer, of the Princeton University Music Department; Raymond Auger, a Program System Engineer and inventor of the "Painting Machine," which he will demonstrate; Philosopher and Esthetician Abraham Kaplan, of the University of California; Clement Greenberg, one of America's foremost critics in the field of art; Philip Roth ("Goodby Company" and "Letting Go") member of the English Department, Princeton University; outstanding American poet Karl Shapiro of the University of Nebraska; Frank O'Hara, Director of Theatre Arts at the University of Minnesota; Arthur Schuller, an important contemporary composer, and active musician in both jazz and classical fields; George Mills, anthropologist of the Colorado Springs Fine Arts Center; Hazel Barnes, Philosophy Professor and lecturer on Existentialism at the University of California; Max Eastman, CC alumnus and popular writer; John Greenway, authority on folk music, of the University of Colorado; and one of the best of the contemporary music groups, the Claremont Quartet.

Held in conjunction with the appearances of the guest speakers, artists will be a variety of experimental film shorts and recent art films, as well as a jazz session and an informal dance. Discussions will be arranged at the Fine Arts Center will exhibit a collection of contemporary art; in short, Colorado College's survey of current developments in the arts will be as comprehensive as possible, certainly an event of which any college or university should be proud.

The ultimate success of Symposium in 1963 lies in the interest and participation of conscientious CC students. The campus book store will make available paperbacks pertaining to Symposium subjects, and the Christian Science Reading Room will have relevant reading material on the reserve shelf.

Volfman Presents German Assembly

The Assemblies Committee will present Mr. Karl Volfman, the pianist and singer of German folk songs, Tuesday, November 6, 11:00 in Perkins Hall.

Mr. Volfman has appeared at many colleges throughout the country with his theoban, an ancient lute with 12 strings. He has been called an "itinerant modern minstrel."

All students of German and those interested in music should attend this assembly.

Debate Team Wins Honors

The Colorado College Debate Team combined talent and experience to win top honors at the Skyline Forensics Tournament on Saturday, October 27. Competing against seven colleges and universities from Colorado, the CC squad won the Sweepstakes, awarded to the school with the highest number of points in all events, and the first place debate trophy.

Two Colorado College debate teams consisting of Charles Puckett and Susan Caudill, and David Bitters and David Helms were defeated with the Puckett-Caudill team awarded first place on the basis of team quality points. The winning CC team defeated Adams State College, University of Colorado, Denver University and Colorado Woman's College with the Bitters-Helms team defeating Denver University, Regis College, Colorado State University and Adams State College.

In the individual events competition Charles Puckett, Jo Heller and Susan Caudill each won first places in rounds of Extemporaneous Speaking with Puckett finishing second and Heller third in the overall competition.

Other teams consisting of Max Power, Jo Heller, Jody Komor, Sheila Krystal, Bruce Cochener and Tom Dean also won rounds of debate to contribute points towards the Sweepstakes Trophy. This was the first competition for the CC team during the 1962-63 season.

On November 9 and 10 teams from Colorado College will participate in the University of Colorado Forensics Festival in Boulder and the Bronco Forensics Festival in Edmond, Okla.

Graduate Record Exams

Spring graduation candidates who are current graduate fellowship applicants must reserve tests for those GRE scores which must be established for your fellowship program application at the Counseling Center by Friday, November 2.

In order for departments to have results available by the last day of instruction on December 8, the test will be given sooner than the national administration date which is November 17.

The test schedule for the fall semester is:

Area Tests—Friday, November 9 (8:30 a.m.-12:30 p.m.)

Aptitude Test—Saturday, November 10 (9:00 a.m.-12:00 p.m.)

Advanced Tests—Saturday, November 10 (1:30 p.m.-5:00 p.m.)

College Announcement

When the new calendar was adopted last spring, the faculty was asked to consider an additional break in the first semester if the schedule proved to be too tight.

All evidence indicates that under the new calendar the student body has worked hard and well. Therefore, Thanksgiving vacation will be extended to Monday morning, November 26, at 8:00 a.m.

We know that we can count upon the student body to abide by the traditional rule, namely, that any one not present at his last class on Wednesday, November 21, or his first class on Monday, November 26, may be dropped from the course with an F.

Earhart Scholarships Announced for Science

The 25th annual Earhart Scholarships have been announced by Zonta International for the 1963 academic year. The $2,500 grants, offered to qualified women for advanced study in aeronautical sciences, were established by Zonta, an executive women's organization, as a memorial to Amelia Earhart. The world-famous air pioneer was an active member of Zonta (her only non-professional affiliation) for many years before her disappearance in 1937 in the initial attempt to fly around the earth at the equator.

Funds for the annual grants are provided jointly by Zonta's 450 clubs in 19 countries. Individually, Zonta clubs also conduct service projects benefiting their local communities in many important fields.

A bachelor's degree in a science qualifying a candidate for graduate work in aeronautical science is the basic requirement for a scholarship, plus evidence of exceptional ability and personal character. The award may be used in any college chosen by the candidate and approved by Zonta's scholarship committee. Winners to date have included students from the U.S. and Canada, and from various European countries as well as from Egypt and Formosa. However, the majority have used Zonta's Earhart grants in U.S. graduate schools. Among this year's group is the first third-time award winner in the history of these scholarships.

Candidates, or instructors wishing to recommend students, can obtain further information about the Amelia Earhart scholarship grants from Zonta's headquarters office, 59 East Van Buren Street, Chicago 5, Illinois. Applications must be filed by February 15, 1963.

Variety Show Proceeds Donated to United Fund

Associated Students of Colorado College will present the 15th Annual Variety Show next week on the evenings of November 6, 7, 8 and 9 at 8:15 p. m. in Perkins Hall. All proceeds from the show will benefit the United Fund Drive of Colorado Springs. Directors Boots Stockton, Don Bradbury, and Mike Irsfeld have put together a really big show. The first act will consist of such outstanding performances as Chopin's Scherzo played by Barbara Couey, "No, No, A Thousand Times No" by Betas and Thetas, and "Swingcopation" by Andrea Miller.

Also, the Kappa Sigma Teeny Group, a South Pacific medley by Joyce Manning and Dwight Kramer; The Couriers, a folksinging group; and the Gamma Phi Betas, who are "Bringing Shakespeare Up to Date," will add to the program.

Three of Mr. Cornick's enticing dancers will do a Flamenco dance from Carmen; and the Alpha Phis are presenting "And the Light Went Out."

Betsy James and Miss Stockton are returning to the show, but rather than hanging onto young men from the audience, they will "Hang on the Bell, Nellie."

Highlights from the second act will include the Nikators, a duet piano number with Kathy Maes and Judy Hooker on separate pianos; and the Phi Delta Thetas doing "With a Little Bit O' Luck."

Mike and Lynn Grace will appear as reminders of the old Folk-singers, Inc.; the Kappa Gamma Gammies are going to duckdance, Philippine style; Colleen Conklin will hula; and the Delta Gammies will depict "The Tale of the Three Bears."

Spanish American music will be provided by two young men who call themselves the Latinos; Bob Sonnenberg will provide music marimba style; and group of jazz dancers will do their interpretation of "Steam Heat."

Featured each night will be a different homecoming queen from the high schools in town. Palmer, Wasson, St. Mary's and Cheyenne Mtn. High Schools will be honored in that order.

Diane Cox and Jerry Agnew are MC-ing the show, and it promises to be not only outstanding entertainment, but also a most worthwhile project since proceeds are going to the United Fund. For this reason no activity cards will be honored. All seats are on reserve for one dollar. Tickets may be purchased at Rastall Center Desk, Buy now.

Last Sunday CC lost a soccer game to CSU 9-2. What was significant however, was not the score, but the fact that the Tigers showed possibilities of playing exciting soccer. Solomon Nkiwane, Va, Abiodun Afonja, Mike Pleasants and Tony Bryan were outstanding performers, while the other players, mostly freshmen and sophomores, played promisingly.

Yet all these individual performances were negated finally by lack of condition and little experience as a team. Time and again a scoring situation was thrown away by an overly hard or quick pass, which eluded a man in the open. Time and again a frantic kick was made when a well passed ball could have started an offensive play. These mistakes, however, are inevitable unless enough practice time as a team is allotted. This can only happen when soccer becomes a varsity sport.

In some ways soccer is an ideal sport for this college. The saving in equipment alone makes soccer more tenable economically than most intercollegiate sports, and as our win against DU showed, we can stay within this area and play all schools of all sizes on a fairly even footing. Also we do not need to recruit talent. It is already here, ready and eager. But we must take advantage of the situation.

The first step is to get a full-time coach who will be able to mold his wealth of individual talent into a cohesive team. With this accomplished, we should make soccer a varsity sport with all that this entails. From what I saw Sunday, CC has enough talent, if properly trained, to meet any team in this area.

Anyone who has seen good soccer knows that it is a crowd pleasing sport of constant motion. Even the people who saw soccer played Sunday at its raggedest, were excited and pleased. I hope that the Administration and Athletic Department will get together and try to find a way of making this golden opportunity for varsity soccer a concrete reality.

"Lavender Hill Mob"

Lavender Hill Mob is a superior British-made thriller divided into almost equal parts of high comedy and farce. Sir Alec Guinness has the lead role, and once again he displays his uncanny ability to assume completely different characters he plays. In Lavender Hill Mob he changes his voice and gait to become a mousy, meticulous under clerk of the Bank of England. After being a trusting employee for twenty years, the employee figures out a method of pinching a million pounds of gold from the bank. The ingenious means of shipping the gold to the Continent, and the evasion of the English police in the final scenes of the film lend themselves to the best tradition of satirical gold humor.

Producer Michael Balcon (Kind Hearts and Coronets) has turned out a picture set against London's most genteel suburbia, to a perfect point of departure for this wild ride into a world of uproarious fantasy. I need not say that Guinness is one of the great comedians of our time, and Lavender Hill Mob is strong evidence of his abilities.

Future weeks at the Fine Arts Center will bring Never on Sunday and Black Tights. If students have a desire for a particular film to be shown at the Center, I would be interested in knowing about the film, and perhaps something of its merits. The Fine Arts Center is interested in films that appeal to the college students, and would consider all suggestions.

Sermon Title: Christianity and Politics

Preacher: Rev. Professor Kenneth Burton
Worship Leader: Mr. Paul Carson
The preacher has chosen his sermon this week to precede the general election on Tuesday. Many people loudly assert that Christianity should keep its nose out of politics. The preacher agrees with them if they mean by that that the Church should support a particular political party. However, as the Christian faith is concerned with God's activity in the world and the affairs of men, he feels that Christian people should be vitally interested, and involved, in everyday politics.

ASCC Notes

Because of technical difficulties (with the minutes) the agenda was reorganized and the meeting began with the introduction of Professor Fred A. Sondermann, chairman of the Symposium. Dr. Sondermann distributed copies of the Symposium program (series 2781 series B) "The Contemporary Arts and the Citizen, and gave a brief history along the line of "our Symposium and how it got the way it is." He pointed out that every participant who was selected to appear has accepted. Those coming are not what we consider big national names—but are absolutely first rate people. Heading the roster are Frank Whiting, Karl Shapiro, Clarence M. Quaker, Philip Roth, Clement Greenberg, Abraham Kaplan and Gunther Schuller. The cost of this rather impressive "visiting faculty" (plus the administrative odds and ends) runs somewhere in the neighborhood of $8000, $2000 of which is expected to come back to us through receipts from the public.

The Finance committee is at the moment preoccupied with trying to straighten out the "unreal mess" of the AWS books. "Unreal mess" have four books and nobody is quite sure what's what. College Treasurer Mr. John Howard has been solicited to help and the help of anyone who understands the way a woman's mind works is welcome to have a go at them. On the more cheerful side, Steve Frink jovially stated that "ASCC is pretty rich this year"—$320 more than they had at this time last year.

Publications Board has set the deadline for TIGER editor and business manager applications on Wednesday, November 14.

There was no report from the Traffic committee as such, however Mr. Lewis felt that this would be the appropriate place to question the screwy doings of the Police and Sanitation departments of Colorado Springs regarding San Rafael Street. They keep putting up "painting" signs and never paint. Ben asked that the Traffic committee look into this and see if they can find out what's going on. (Further developments in the city's problem of how to control the overflow of traffic on this dead-end include a turn-around street — which by the way is a circle and the issuance of tickets for backing-in-to-parking).

The Student Policy committee meets Nov. 2.

Assemblies committee reports that the program on November 6 will feature German folksinger, Karl Wolfram. German club is jointly sponsoring this with the committee.

The Communications committee coffee hour will be held Wednesday, November 7 at 4:15 in Rastall. All members of the CC community are invited to attend.

This seems to be the year for constitution trouble. This time, the student guide constitution hasn't been returned.

Rastall Board has approved the idea of jointly sponsoring a dance on the Wednesday night of Symposium. Mr. Meis and his committee are waiting for ASCC approval. ASCC so moved. Maybe now the ad hoc committee will do other than confer. Because of a recent match between Messrs. Power and Meis, Rastall has challenged ASCC to a bowling match.

The Freshman class is sponsoring a dance on November 10.

Under Old Business, Polly Thompson has conferred with Dr. Paul Kutsche on the subject of whether volunteers for Mental Health Committee (see article) can be organized under ASCC auspices. ASCC is not too keen on the idea. Dave Helms asked that ASCC look into the possibility of giving the frosh something to decorate for Homecoming next year. Mr. Meis reminded him that the freshmen were responsible for the pep rally backdrop in the Slocum lot.

New Business: Because of concern stirred up by the Cuban situation, Mr. Don Oden, representing a faculty committee, informed ASCC that Mr. Richard Kendrick, physical plant director, was sent this summer to a Civil Defense training school which he felt offered a very good program. There are several Civil Defense approved campus sites to be assigned and will be distributed at a later date.

CSU is holding another conference—this time they are seeking to organize a cooperative travel-talent exchange. Those requested to attend include the student body president, a person closely associated with international travel and a person associated with the talent on this campus. Mr. Power feels that although we would probably put more into such a conference than we could get out, we should go. It's not too good for inter-college relations for us to consistently not go. He'll go if someone will go with him.

Railroad Fans Plan Excursion From Cheyenne to Laramie

On Sunday, November 18, the Union Pacific Railway, in cooperation with the National Railway Historical Society, will operate its last serviceable steam locomotive, number 8444, on a railfan trip from Cheyenne to Laramie, Wyo., and return.

The train will leave Denver Union Station early Sunday morning, with the 8444 being coupled on at Cheyenne. Numerous photo stops will be made on Sherman Hill, both westbound and eastbound. Fare for the all-day, 300 mile excursion is $12.00. Please contact Russ Sperry, 632-2839, for additional information, tickets, etc.

Laboratory Approach to Physics Being Introduced by Freshmen

Senior and two freshmen at Colorado College are helping the faculty to develop an independent studies program in physics for freshmen who have completed the high school Physical Science Committee course.

As a result of the new laboratory approach to teaching physics, PSC courses are turning out increasing numbers of high school graduates with advanced understanding of the scientific process. This is causing college physics teachers across the nation to give serious consideration to retooling their freshman physics courses.

Dr. Wilbur Wright, professor of physics at Colorado College, said he hopes the work undertaken by the three students will provide an answer to the problem of what laboratory experience can be offered PSC graduates.

The program got under way this fall when faculty in the physics department suddenly realized they needed new laboratory experiments for these graduates.

Professor Wright said a freshman independent studies program may result as a kind of tutorial system with a senior working with two or three freshmen on a common research project.

Jerry Macon, a senior majoring in physics, is helping two freshmen, Louis C. Sass, Jr., and William R. Moninger, on a project concerning the molecular nature of gases.

Sass and Moninger sought out Professor Wright during the first week of classes, explained that they were PSC graduates, and that they wanted to undertake a research project dealing with the nature of gases.

They were assigned to work with Macon, Professor Wright's laboratory assistant.

Professor Wright saw an opportunity to have the students participate in the development of a freshman college course that would take up physics where PSC leaves off.

"We wanted to develop the kind of experiments that would be accepted by the PSC students and that would permit them to continue to push ahead," the Colorado College physics professor said. "And who could be of greater assistance than students who had been through the PSC course?"

"Some of these students are ready to do real research right now," he said. "An independent studies program could be just like judo. If we give them the opportunity, their own strength will flip them on past their teachers into the forefront of science."

Professor Wright said Moninger and Sass wanted to stimulate the molecular theory of gases in motion.

They placed two dozen glass beads between two glass plates bounded with a wooden frame. They shake the frame and place it on an "overhead" projector and take a photograph of the projection of the beads in motion.

The beads caught in motion appear elongated. These represent the "hot" molecules. Those appearing motionless represent the "cold" molecules.

The three students then chart statistically the proportion of beads going at various speeds. Interpretation of the averages gives them a better understanding of how molecular gases can possess properties such as "pressure" and "temperature."

Greek News

Beta Theta Pi: Tuesday night the Betas were hosts at a dinner given for the Thetas. The following night they again played hosts; this time at a dinner for the Gamma Phis.

Kappa Sigma: The Kappa Sigma annual Halloween party was a stimulating experience for all those in attendance. Except for a few anxious moments when pledge Julius Fenckmann nearly drowned in the apple-bobbing bucket, the evening was a rousing success. New pledges Stan Lathrop and Mike Magruder are currently involved in their pledge project of swabbing soiled diapers at the Little Folks School."

Phi Delta Theta: Monday night the Phi Deltas elected their new officers for the coming semester. They are John Reid, president; John Van Ness, vice-president; Dave Holdorf, secretary; Ben Lewis and Ed Lorson will continue in their positions as treasurer and social chairman respectively.

Sigma Chi: Chapter elections held Monday night ended another full week of activity for the Sigs. Elected for the winter term were: Bill Ward, president; Fred Luft, vice-president; Bob Bauer, secretary; and Colin Nichols, treasurer. Last Saturday afternoon, the Sigs and their dates enjoyed a "picnic" at the Bluffs. The party was given in honor of Scott Brantjen who recently became engaged to Carol Rinderknecht of Marion, Ia.

Alpha Phi: The Alpha Phis held a dessert with the Phi Gams on Monday night.

Delta Gamma: The DG project of old to the blind is in full swing this week with girls going to the Deaf & Blind School almost every day. This month the girls will be working with girls and boys between the ages of 6 and 10.

Monday night the DGs celebrated Halloween with a party at the Delta Gamma haunted house. Fifty ghosts, dressed in sheets, competed in contests and games. The hot-air twins, Portia Van Meter and Ginny Metcalf, took honors in the bubble-room blowing contest. Mandy Hamilton told of dim prospects for the future in the fortunetelling booth. The highlight of the evening was a skit by Diane Johnston and Janie "Witch Hazel" Anderson. The two ghosts sang several bloody songs, then ended the evening with a demonstration of the new '62 model four-speed, stick-shift broom.

Gamma Phi Beta: The annual fall costume dance was held at the Paint Pony on Saturday night. The affair was highlighted by wild costumes based on the Halloween theme. Following the regular Monday night meeting, the active chapter was treated to a surprise Halloween party given by the pledges and Mom Cunningham. Wednesday evening the actives retailed with a surprise party for the pledges.

The entire chapter is looking forward to an informal discussion sponsored by the Religious Affairs Committee. The topic will be Arthur Miller's The Crucible, just presented by the CC Players. The discussion will be held Sunday evening, November 4, at the Gamma Phi House. All interested members of the college community are cordially invited to come.

Kappa Alpha Theta: The annual visit of their district president, Mrs. Edward Cass, made this an enjoyable and exciting week for the Thetas. Monday evening they had a Halloween party. Refreshments were served, and fun was had by all.

Kappa Kappa Gamma: The Kappas wish to give a hearty welcome to Miss Joan Wallington, Kappa field secretary, who is visiting the Colorado College campus this week. They also would like to thank the Gamma Phis for helping make the costume dance such a success.

Crucible Receives Favorable Criticism

By Charles Miesmer

Probably, one of the difficulties in presenting the "Crucible" is repairing the inadequacy of the play's central theme—i.e., a study of integrity over evil. When the play appeared in New York, most of the adverse criticisms centered around the fact that the hero, John Proctor, was unbelievable as a person, perhaps even unreal—through the fact that he was too white, too flawless, and in this, the demonstration of his integrity as strong and imperious as it should have been. His face, however, bore a curious, almost cheerful expression for most of the play, and for this reason more than any other he was not the demonic, terrifying character that the role implies. It is significant to note that in the dark (beginning of Act II Scene III), when we are conscious of only his voice (i.e., when there is no conflict of voice and face), he is much more convincing as the unbalanced irrational symbol of evil that he represents.

Nate Cloak's performance was another which was weakened by inconsistency. When calm, he has a reverend, pure and straight; but when aroused, or placed in a situation that demanded a show of excitement or outrage, he became a kind of child-person: he did not become excited, he became flighty; he did not rage, he sulked. It is unfortunate that the part was such a long one for Cloak was not proficient or experienced enough to handle the sustained mood-shift of his character and frequently appeared miscast.

Faced with an underdeveloped yet crucial role, Carl Chard as John Proctor was a fine shouter and convincingly Right and Down-trodden, despite the line "Who is John Proctor?" and some of the best scenes of the play occurred in his violent interchanges with the various evil characters (particularly Reverend Parris).

But conversely, some of the worst art to be found in his intimate exchanges with his wife Elizabeth (Sue Bea Fertig) and his sometimes lover, Abigail Williams (Adrienne Zech). In the former it was not so much Chard's fault as Miss Fertig's whose lack of overall intensity quickly overtook the calmness of the role and stiffened rather than intensified. Some of her powerful lines were comely, but merely fell. But in the latter, Chard did not seem to respond passionately enough even in a negative sense, to the lures of the harlot Abigail. Only when some kind of violence was involved, as in the opening scene of Act II was the acting convincing.

Adrienne Zech and her poor followers (Georgia McClay, Betsy James, Jody Komer, and Linda Biggs) were quite good in relatively easy roles with Miss Zech emerging curiously well in her brassy lines and fabrications.

The performances of James Fox and John Giammes, (Giles Corey Reverend Parris) can best be appraised from the viewpoint of the trial scene, which they and they alone salvaged. The movement of this scene hinges around the timing of Deputy Governor Danforth (Martin Hyblom) and this was often bad. Fox and Giammes, however, kept the scene moving and made up for its several lapses (though not quite for its length) by competent, quick acting. Giammes was the most consistent actor with a long role and Fox perhaps the most intense, especially in his raging assault on Putnam (David Greenberg) and his vry truths cast at Danforth and Reverend Hale (Nate Cloak).

Danforth's acting however, was not at all bad, and when he got around to speaking, his voice was as strong and imperious as it should have been. His face, however, bore a curious, almost cheerful expression for most of the play, and for this reason more than any other he was not the demonic, terrifying character that the role implies. It is significant to note that in the dark (beginning of Act II Scene III), when we are conscious of only his voice (i.e., when there is no conflict of voice and face), he is much more convincing as the unbalanced irrational symbol of evil that he represents.

Nate Cloak's performance was another which was weakened by inconsistency. When calm, he has a reverend, pure and straight; but when aroused, or placed in a situation that demanded a show of excitement or outrage, he became a kind of child-person: he did not become excited, he became flighty; he did not rage, he sulked. It is unfortunate that the part was such a long one for Cloak was not proficient or experienced enough to handle the sustained mood-shift of his character and frequently appeared miscast.

Tituba (Polly Franklin) and Sarah Good (Susan Fagginger-Auer) the former kind of a primitive parody of the fear and weakness of the citizens and the latter an essentially comic character, performed well separately and beautifully together when the juxtaposition of the fear-parody an out-and-out comedy (just before the tragedy) is complete. Miss Franklin's acting, in a role which is often stereotyped and trite, was sensitive and funny and altogether convincing.

But the best performance occurred within a small but highly significant role—that of Ann Putnam (Gail Fichter). Ann Putnam is the best hint of "falseness" in the play—she is fear, bigotry, irrationality, cruelty and all that is symbolically evil in Salem. All her children are dead or dying, and when she walks onto the stage with finger pointed, she too, is death. Miss Fichter was able to convey this exact feeling of tension, of chill, in a role that superficially is little more than that of a harpy, but a role that bursts into crucial fruition and then is over. In mastering this, she was not only the most convincing actor, but the only one to combine voice, gesture and expression with complete success.

In conclusion, it is necessary to note that, due to the weakness of the play itself, Good is often an impossible role to fulfill. It is understood, therefore, that the actors portraying the roles of evil symbols will probably appear more convincing than those who portray good. And this is exactly what happened. Fortunately, the momentum of Evil was great enough to carry the play over the rough spots, and it is this that made the performance a basically good one, enjoying a good deal of intensity and an enthusiastic audience response.

Russian Response to Cuba Not Readily Comprehensible

Monday afternoon, a large number of interested students attended the second in the series of informal discussions at Eastall Center. Dr. Glenn Brooks of the political science department and Dr. Bentley Gilbert and Robin Rudoff of the history department gave statements of their viewpoints on the Cuban crisis and answered questions directed to them from the audience.

All three expressed surprise at Russia's handling of the situation. It was felt that the Russians would not have built the missile bases without having planned courses of action which would be to their advantage in all cases. At this time, they have not followed any such course, and Professor Rudoff stated that this has been a "major diplomatic failure—so far." Dr. Brooks noted that there seemed to be a missing factor in the situation—something which the Russians wanted other than the bases in Cuba. The choice of other possible points is limited, and it was agreed that Berlin would be the most logical place for a related crisis to erupt. In any case, we cannot consider the crisis to be past, but must be alert for any development in any part of the world.

In discussing the effect of the crisis in the United States, Dr. Brooks commended the students at CC for the "calm, analytical spirit" in which they reacted to the situation. He said that he had seen very few who were either panicky or indifferent. The reaction of the general populace of the nation, however, may be dangerous, as our apparent success could create a more "hard-nosed" attitude, inviting the more belligerent factions to clamor for action against the Russians in other areas such as Germany and the other European satellites. We cannot assume that the Russians will give us as easily in other areas, as we tested them in a "dispensable area." It is difficult for people to grasp the danger in the use of force in our policy, and this reaction must be avoided.

Predictions for the future were either pessimistic nor extremely hopeful. It was agreed that neither we nor the Russians desire or would plan an all-out nuclear war. If such destruction occurred, it could be the result of a process of escalation—the flaring of a crisis into progressively greater conflict. We must be careful not to allow this to occur as we will end ourselves in a state of continued minor crises for many years to come.

NOTICE!

There will be a picnic at Dr. Lawles' home, Sunday, November 11 at 4:30 p. m. for all those who participated in the first annual All-College Mixed Doubles Tennis Tournament. Contact Rob Pittaway regarding transportation.

Freshman Songfest Set for November

Preparations are in full swing for the freshman songfest and dance to be held November 10 from 7:30 to 11:00 in the Slocum Lounge. Mike Sabom is in charge of the board and Dan Cooper has a trio lined up for the songfest. Charlotte Adams and Connie Clay are taking care of the refreshment end of what should be a gala evening. This is not a date function. At 7:30 there will be a parade of the frosh men to the women's dorm at which time the girls will be escorted to Slocum. All Freshmen are urged to attend. This is a class function.

Reflections of Telstar

Remember the picture above? It flashed across your television screen on a hot night last July. Perhaps you remember that it originated from France. And that it reached the U.S. via Telstar, the world's first private enterprise communications satellite.

Since that summer night, the Bell System's Telstar has relayed electronic signals of many types—television broadcasts, telephone calls, news photographs, and others.

But there's one Telstar reflection you might have missed. Look into the faces of the Bell System people below and you'll see it. It is the reflection of Telstar's success that glowed brightly on the faces of all who shared in the project.

Their engineering, administrative and operations skills created Telstar and are bringing its benefits down out of the clouds to your living room.

These Bell System people, through their talented, dedicated efforts, make your phone service still better, more economical, and more useful.

The reflections of Telstar are many.

Al Loosli is a 6-foot junior from South Pasadena, California. He came to CC from South Pasadena High School where he lettered one year in football and two years in basketball. He was named to the All-South California football honor squad in his senior year.

Milt Franke

Milt Franke is a 6-foot, 1-inch freshman from San Francisco, California. Milt lettered in football, basketball, and baseball at Lowell High School. Milt is one of three quarterbacks on the CC squad and has been leading the league in pass completions with around 50%.

ROTC Battalion Hosts Tiger Club

On October 2 the ROTC Battalion was honored to be host to Misses Nancy Petit, Linea Erickson, Isabel Williams, Nancy Bowers, and Audrey Snyder, selected members of the Tiger Club. The guests were escorted to the drill field where they were introduced to Lt. Col. Decker, P.M.S.&T., Lt. Col. Powell, and his staff. During the drill period, the ladies were escorted by the staff for an instructive tour of the drill field and Battalion activities. At the end of the tour they watched a practice review by the Battalion Members of the Tiger Club will also be present for the November 3 full-dress review which the Battalion will stage featuring the well known Ft. Carson Band.

Soccer Team Loses

The CC soccer team picked a beautiful day for their first home game of the season last Friday. The game was a heartbreaker with CC losing to CSU in the last quarter 3-2.

CSU drew first blood with a tally in the second quarter on a clean goal. CC came right back in the same quarter when Va Chounramany met the net for the goal. CC pulled into the lead with another goal by Colin Pease in the third quarter.

The fourth quarter was filled with excitement as CSU tied the game with a good, clean shot.

The winning goal was questionable in the eyes of most of those who saw it, in that there happens to be a hole in the net, and the referee ruled the ball went over the line and through the hole while CC rooters felt the ball went over the net. Thus CC, through a bit of hard luck perhaps some faulty equipment, and perhaps a little overconfidence came out on the short end of a hard fought game.

This year, like last year, there is good spirit, and the skill has been augmented. There are good possibilities of fine teams in the future with the help of student participation, support, better equipment, and training organization. The next home game is with Colorado School of Mines on November 10th. Let's get out and support the rising game of soccer on the CC campus.

Poets, artists, and writers, if you haven't started creating yet, you had better begin now. The KINKINNICK deadline is November 26.

Abio Afonja gives the ball a hard kick during CC's first home soccer game. The final score was CSU, 3; CC, 2.

THE WESTERN STATE QUARTERBACK is forced to a three-point landing during the home game.

Tigers Claim League Cellar By Losing to Mountaineers

The Tigers suffered their second Rocky Mountain Conference football defeat and their fifth loss of the season last Sunday at the hands of Western State College. The Mountaineers ran up 34 points to CC's 0 in a contest played before loyal fans at Washburn Field. The win boosted Western State into fourth place in league standings with a 1-2 record while the defeat left the Tiger eleven in sole possession of the cellar 0-2.

The Mountaineers capitalized on three pass interceptions and sloppy Tiger tackling to notch their victory. WSC held a wide margin in total offense as they marched 248 yards on the ground and added 115 through the air for a net of 363 yards. Colorado College gained 101 yards rushing and picked up 39 yards in the air for a net of 140 yards total offense.

Western State dominated play in the first quarter as CC had the ball for only eleven plays. The Mountaineers' first touchdown came with 4:25 left on a 72 yard sustained drive in 12 plays with a five yard pass from John Hancock to end Mike Claboe climaxing the march. Roger Thompson added the first of four extra points to give Western a 7-0 lead.

WSC tallied two more times in the second period by intercepting two Black and Gold aerials. The first came with 5:40 gone of the period when an interception was made at the CC 37 yard line, and seven plays later when quarterback Jim Novack appeared to be caught behind the line of scrimmage and his field and danced 17 yards to pay dirt. Minutes later Cliff Blanke intercepted a second CC pass and returned the ball to the 18 yard line. Two plays later Stan Hergenreiter hit Mac Singleton in the end zone with a perfect strike. Score at half-time had Colorado College on the short end 21 to 0.

Western wasted little time at the start of the second half. The Mountaineers chalked up their fourth TD. After taking the lead off and driving 55 yards in eight plays, Steve Landgren smacked over from the three to make it 27-0. The Tiger's only scoring came midway through the third period when they moved the ball 56 yards down into WSC territory only to fumble on first down for a goal play.

The final six-point game came 8:20 remaining in the first half period when a third Tiger South was hijacked by WSC on the 17. Hancock, two plays later swept around the left side of the 13 to score.

Senior halfback, Vince Groy played a fine game as he got out 76 yards in 14 carries and hauled in a 9 yard pass and on a 15 yarder to total 100 individual yards on offense. Steve Saband won seven carries gained 31 yards and a 4.4 average.

This Saturday coach Jomple Carle's team tangles front runner Adams State Indians, 2-0 in a game of the RMC in a contest at Adams State.

In other games played last Saturday Adams State rolled over their opponents 48-28, and Colorado State blasted Black Hills State Team College 45-19. This Saturday hosts CSM and CSC plays at 10 against New Mexico Western.

Hockey Players Open Ice Practice

Thirty-one CC iceers laced their skates Thursday, November 1, for an opening practice session of the 1962 hockey season.

Coach Tony Frasca has been putting his potential ice squad through conditioning drills on Ashburn Field for the past two weeks. The first actual team practice was held off Thursday at 5 p.m. at the Broadmoor World Arena.

Frasca said there were 14 seniors among the boys who hit the ice as well as five returning juniors and a number of sophomores from last year's frosh squad.

The freshman squad, numbering 12 men, will start practice about a week after the varsity team returns to the ice, Frasca said.

The Tigers will spend about two hours—from 5 to 6:45 p.m.—on the ice each night. The entire squad will turn out as a unit at first, working hard on fundamental drills such as passing, shooting and swift skating.

Frasca said he will start trimming the squad to the usual 18 man team in about two weeks. The Tigers open their season on November 28 with a non-conference game against McMaster University here.

Slocum Intramurals

With but a few games remaining on the football schedule, two definite contenders for the Slocum title, in Second South and Second West, have emerged. Second South, behind passes by Dee Wilton, remained undefeated in downing First South 14-6. Second West, in a run and pass by Louis Jaramillo breezed by an inept Third South 14-6.

Third West continued its upsurge by swamping Fourth West 7-0, while nearby First South dealt itself out of a first place tie with Second West and Second South by settling for a 6-6 tie with First North.

Second South moved closer to the title by defeating Third South 14-0. Second North gained a victory over Third North on a forfeit. Second West also moved closer to the title by literally bombing an aroused Third West. On three passes by Jaramillo to Susenhill, Symons, and Camm, Second West came back from a half-time deficit of 6-0 to finally win 22-6. Meanwhile Arthur House completely obliterated all hope for a first place tie by First North on gaining a 13-6 margin over them.

Completing a good week, Arthur House edged the Socratic 7, 6-0. First North came back by gaining a forfeit over First West to complete the week's play.

This week's games will end the 1962 schedule that seems to forecast a tie for top honors between Second South and Second West.

INTRAMURALS

Intramural Touch Football continued last week with Kappa Sigma winning two contests, one a make-up game. The first game was a decision over the Zetas, 11-2. This game was hotly contested all the way with the sharp passing of Joe Bernquist proving to be the difference. In the second game, the Kappa Sigs defeated the Phi Gams in a Sunday afternoon contest, 21-0.

In the third game of the week the Phi Deltas proved to be too much for the Betas and defeated them by a score of 24-15. Here again, the quarterback proved to be the offsetting factor with Jeff Sauer at the helm for the Phi Deltas.

Fraternity intramural tennis moves into the semi-final matches this week. In the singles, Hutchins of Kappa Sigma will face Taylor of the Phi Gams and Etheridge of Kappa Sigma will face Irshfeld of Sigma Chi. In the doubles, Helms-Howland of Phi Delta Theta will face the duo of Etheridge-Hutchins of Kappa Sigma, and Irshfeld-Rosen of Sigma Chi will face the team of Taylor-Mill-slage of Phi Gamma Delta.

Within the next couple of weeks, ping-pong and volleyball will commence, and all fraternities are asked to begin forming their teams for these respective activities. This year, each fraternity is asked to enter four men in the singles for ping-pong. The entries are asked to be handed in to Coach Leon Eastlack in the athletic office or given to Bill Pelz, intramural manager.

Below are the current standings in the Fraternity Touch Football League:

Fraternity	Won	Lost
Sigma Chi	4	0
Phi Delta Theta	3	0
Kappa Sigma	2	1
Phi Gams Delta	1	3
Zeta	1	3
Beta Theta Pi	0	4

Volunteers Needed For Deaf School

If you enjoy children and want to do something worthwhile, come to the Colorado School for the Deaf & Blind. Volunteers are needed mainly for weekend activities. A few CC students have already participated in this program. They have observed the wonderful Ten Center which was started, and is maintained, by volunteer workers. They have taken the intermediate deaf girls and boys out for a playday. Learning sign language is another of the numerous opportunities open to volunteers. The Religious Affairs Committee is acting as liaison between the Deaf & Blind School and the college community. If you are interested, please call Judy Jaccard, X274; or Bentley West, 635-9488.

Prof. Kramer Finds Rare Rock Glacier

Colorado College geography professor Fritz L. Kramer says the rock glacier he has discovered in the arid region of eastern Nevada may provide scientists with new knowledge about climatic changes in pre-historic North America.

Professor Kramer said the rarely encountered rock glacier appears to be the only one in the 600,000 square mile area between the Rocky Mountains and the Sierra Nevada.

The unique thing about the rock glacier is that "part of it appears to be moving," the geographer noted.

"The rock glacier may provide indices for past climatic fluctuations," he said. "If it is moving, it will leave a record."

The head of the rock glacier abuts the main cliff of Wheeler Peak, southeast of Ely, Nevada. Professor Kramer reports in the current issue of "Pacific Discovery," published by the California Academy of Sciences. Wheeler Peak at 13,063 feet is the second highest elevation in Nevada.

Professor Kramer, also director of the College Museum, said the rock glacier is in a mile-long crie.

"The upper two-thirds of the crie flow, sloping gently at an average of 10 degrees, is occupied by a bulky rock mass that appears to have flowed from the ice field beneath the cliff like viscous lava or molasses," he said. "This is the rock glacier."

"The name 'rock glacier,' given this phenomenon quite early, describes the appearance well," Professor Kramer continued. "The whole mass resembles a glacier composed not of ice but of angular and subangular rocks. The appearance also strongly suggests flow. Around this point controversy raged for some years. Generally those who investigated the feature in the Rockies and the Sierra Nevada maintained that, while flow was responsible for creating the rock glaciers, such flow was a thing of the past and all rock glaciers are at present inactive."

When asked what causes the movement, he replied: "Some early workers thought they were dealing here with land slide phenomena, some thought creep or solifluction were the responsible agents. Others pointed correctly to ice as the only possible vehicle for creating the observed surface forms. The first shallow excavation in an Alaska rock glacier showed that the subsurface rock was cemented by ice."

Asked about the origin of ice, he said: "The answer to this question is significant because it bears directly on the origin of rock glaciers." Professor Kramer said. "The ice beneath the rock glacier may be glacial ice, that is, the remnant of a former true glacier, preserved by the overlying rock much the way ice in an old-fashioned icehouse is kept frozen during the summer by a covering of sawdust. If this view is correct then rock glaciers represent the dying stage of Pleistocene, or perhaps post-pleistocene glaciers that have become choked and thoroughly covered by rock debris. The ice, however, may only be the refrozen meltwater from the winter snows, accumulated at depth, and filling the interstices of the rock debris."

"Wahrhaftig and Cox, who investigated rock glaciers in the Alaska Range, put forth this latter explanation," Professor Kramer said. "They point out that, if Pleistocene glacial ice were responsible, fossil rock glaciers should also occur at considerable lower elevations than those that have been found so far. There is, however, the possibility that such lower-lying rock glaciers may either be obscured by forest vegetation, or that they have long since been destroyed by water erosion." He explained that rock glaciers have been reported in Alaska, the Sierra Nevada, the Swiss and Ital-

Volunteer Service Program Organize

CC students are now beginning their second year of participation in a program of varied volunteer service. Last year, the majority of the work was done in the State Mental Hospital at Pueblo, but this year the students are discovering opportunities for similar service in the Colorado Springs area. At this time about 25 students are training to work at Pueblo and 20 are working locally, as well as various groups on campus which have volunteered time during the year. There are three general areas of service in which the students may portion their available time—periodic volunteer work, local service, and weekend work camps sponsored by the American Friends Service Committee. It is felt that these three provide students with varied opportunities depending on their available time.

Last year, this program was coordinated by the Anthropology-Sociology Department under the guidance of Mr. Paul Kutsche. This year, in order to perpetuate the program, a student committee will be set up to coordinate the various programs and student participation.

An organizational meeting of all students interested in serving on this committee will be held Tuesday, Nov. 6, at 4:00 p. m. in Rastall 203. It is felt that this program can function on a much more advantageous level if governed by the participants themselves. It will also insure the permanence of the few avenues through which CC students can directly serve the social network of which they form a part.

New Course Concerning History of Ed. Offered During Spring Semester

A course on the History of Education in the United States will be offered by Colorado College beginning in the spring semester which gets under way Jan. 21.

The new course, which will carry three hours of credit on the junior or senior level, will trace the development of America public schools and colleges since Colonial times. Teaching the course will be Professor Louis G. Geiger, chairman of the department of history. It was designed to serve as a parallel course to Philosophy and Education, taught by Professor J. Glenn Gray, chairman of the philosophy department.

Professor Geiger, who has been on the faculty at Colorado College since 1960, is the author of numerous historical works, including "University of the Northern Plains." He currently is collecting materials for writing the first complete history of higher education in the Rocky Mountains and Great Plains. The work is being financed through a Colorado College Public Affairs Research Grant. Funds for the grant were made available by the Ford Foundation.

Professor Geiger, who spent the past summer visiting colleges and universities throughout the vast region in an effort to establish the location of basic source materials, plans to trace the history of higher education in the mountains west from the 1860's down to the present day.

In addition to "University of the Northern Plains," the Colorado College professor is the author of "Joseph W. Folk of Missouri" and "From the Apennines to the Alps."

State Department Recruiting Officer To Be in Denver

Miss Jocelyn LeMieux, Recruiting Officer for the U. S. Department of State's Foreign Service, will be in Denver for two weeks beginning Monday, November 5, through Saturday, November 17. She is seeking career-oriented people for secretaries, communications clerks, and typists to work both over-seas in our American Consulates and Embassies and in the "home office" in Washington, D. C.

Service to our country, combined with adventure and travel to many parts of the globe, are the opportunities which await candidates for the U. S. Department of State's Foreign Service. Miss LeMieux is fully aware of these advantages having served in three Foreign Service posts overseas and can give a true picture of "life overseas" to potential candidates. For those who prefer to remain in the United States and wish to contribute an active part in direct support of the Department's responsibilities in the field of foreign affairs, there are also positions in the U. S. Department of State in Washington, D. C.

The standards are high and skills are an important qualification. The people who are chosen for the Foreign Service are really representative of America to many of the people in the 300 posts overseas. To qualify as an applicant for service overseas, one must be a high school graduate, at least 21 and single with no dependents, subject to a background investigation, be an American citizen for five years, and be willing to go anywhere in the world. In addition, the person must be able to pass both a Foreign Service clerical written test and a rigid physical examination.

Interested applicants who meet these qualifications are urged to contact the U. S. Department of State Recruiting Officer in Denver at the Colorado State Employment

Grace Donates Grant For International Work

Mr. James Brewster Grace, CC '61, has made possible by a gift of $500 per year, a program in international field work for students, starting with the summer of 1963.

The grant will alternate between the disciplines of anthropology and political science, and will support students in the field during the summer. Although no strict limitations have been placed on the use of the grant, preference is to be given to projects lying outside the boundaries of the United States.

Many CC students will recall that Mr. Grace, as a senior majoring in religion, founded the spring vacation workcamp with Navajo Indians. From this experience he went on after graduation to his present work with the American Friends Service Committee in Japan, where he is arranging and leading workcamps.

Mr. Grace has taken his concern for Colorado College with him to Japan, and carried on a lengthy discussion by mail with faculty members as the best use to which his gift could be put.

The new program will greatly enrich our instruction both in cultural anthropology and in foreign relations, by taking students to the "laboratories" for first-hand research.

Services, 251 East 12th Ave., or telephone AC 2-1551. Daily office hours are from 9:00 a. m. to 4:30 p. m. except for the following dates when the office will be open until 7:00 p. m.: Monday, November 5; Friday, November 9; Tuesday, November 13; and Friday, November 16. Interviews will also be held on Saturday mornings from 9:00 a. m. until noon.

If you are unable to visit Miss LeMieux during the time she will be in Denver, she suggests you write her in San Francisco: Regional Director, San Francisco Region, U. S. Civil Service Commission, 630 Sansome St., San Francisco 11, Calif. Attention:

Alpha Kappa Psi Presents Debate

A formal debate on the proposition that Socialism best serves the interests of the United States, will be held Monday, November 5 at 8:15 p. m. in the Olin Hall Lecture Room. It is one of a series of program sponsored by Alpha Kappa Psi, according to Lloyd Fisk, president of the professional business fraternity. Debaters will be David McReynolds from New York City, a member of the National Committee, Socialist Party and Robert LeFevre, Colorado Springs newspaper editor.

McReynolds, supporting the affirmative is also field secretary for the War Registers League, executive committee member of Turn Toward Peace and associate editor of Liberation magazine. He graduated from UCLA in 1953 with a B.A. in political science. LeFevre was formerly in radio and television before becoming editor of the Gazette-Telegraph. He is found-der and president of the Free School, located north of the city, and author of several books, including, This Bread Is Mine, and His Government and Just Lashed, Constitutional Government Today in Soviet Russia.

When the hour-long debate completed, questioners in the audience will have a limited time to confer with each of the speakers. The fraternity welcomes all students, faculty and staff to program.

Premedical Students

Premedical students planning to enter medical school in September 1963 who have not as yet applied application procedures should do so immediately. The faculty medical committee, Dr. E. Hitchcock, chairman, should be contacted at once regarding letters of recommendation.

Modern Musicians to Present Art and Thought at Symposium

Symposium 1963, "The Contemporary Arts and the Citizen," will give Colorado College the opportunity to hear the art and thought of a group of distinguished musicians, each of whom may claim an important position in his phase of contemporary music; included in this group will be performers and composers of modern "classical" music and jazz, as well as representatives of American folk music.

Milton Babbitt, American composer and chairman of the Department of Music at Princeton University, will be present to enrich the Symposium with his knowledge and ideas upon new forms of musical expression, and with his own views on the composer in American society. Babbitt studied at Princeton, where in 1938 he became an instructor in music and mathematics; he also studied composition privately with Roger Sessions. In 1948 Babbitt adopted the twelve-tone method of composition, later expanding it into the realm of rhythm (twelve basic rhythmic values in a theme) and instrumentation. Outside of the U.S., his music has been performed in France, Italy, and Switzerland, and he was represented at one of his works at the 1953 International Music Festival in Oslo. Internationally recognized, Milton Babbitt will make an important contribution to the Symposium.

John Greenway, folksinger and authority on folk music, from the University of Colorado Anthropology Department, should prove to be a popular Symposium participant. Greenway, who holds degrees in both anthropology and English, and who was on a Fulbright Fellowship in 1956 and 1957, is the author of American Folksongs of the West, editor of the periodical Southwestern Lore, and a member of the American Folklore Society. Greenway has issued numerous recordings and articles, and is a frequent lecturer in the Rocky Mountain area.

The Symposium will give Colorado College an opportunity to hear a first-rate chamber music group. The Claremont Quartet, associated with the Juilliard School of Music, is an ensemble composed of four astute musicians, well steeped in contemporary music for the string quartet. The Colorado Artist Management organization, agents for a large percentage of the finest chamber music groups, speaks of the Claremont quartet as being an ensemble of the highest quality. The quartet will give two concerts of contemporary works, the first being open to the Symposium student-audience while the second will be presented to an audience of friends and alumni of CC; the four members of the group will further contribute to the scope of the Symposium by participating in a discussion of trends in contemporary music.

Among the contributors to this comprehensive view of modern music is a member of the Colorado College Department of Music, Mr. Albert Seay, a distinguished musicologist who was a Fulbright scholar to Italy from 1956 to 1957, and Guggenheim Fellow last year. Dr. Seay, chairman of the Rocky Mountain Section of the American Musicologist Society and the author of numerous articles published in American and European music magazines, will speak on electronic music. The subject of his lecture is undoubtedly one of the most intriguing developments in contemporary music.

A musician well known in both jazz and classical circles is rather unique, yet the Symposium will have an outstanding one in the person of Gunther Schuller. As the first French horn player in the Metropolitan Opera Orchestra for over ten years, as a musician who has an exceptional knowledge and understanding of jazz and has worked closely with John Lewis, leader of the Modern Jazz Quartet, and as a composer whose chamber works have been heard in New York and on the continent, Schuller will be a Symposium participant with a wide range of appeal. Schuller's compositions are of special interest, as many of them represent a blend of his appreciation and understanding of both jazz and classical works; he is one of the main proponents of "Third Stream Music," a cross-fertilization of characteristics of jazz and classical music, and one of his compositions was performed at New York's Town Hall in 1959 by the Beaux Arts String Quartet with the Modern Jazz Quartet. Schuller played a prominent part in the Monterey Jazz Festival in 1959, and he is the author of several scholarly articles appearing in books and magazines.

An hour of entertainment tinged with musical history will be presented by Max Morath, CC alumnus and popular ragtime pianist. Morath, who has performed on campus several times in last few years, has gained quite a following through his pairing of a unique collection of old photo slides with his ragtime piano music.

Johnny Smith needs little introduction to Colorado College, nor indeed, to any jazz enthusiast; the guitarist will be performing and speaking on trends in modern jazz and contemporary music in general, for the Symposium audience. Smith, now a resident of Colorado Springs, has been recognized as one of the finest of modern jazz guitarists, and can claim numerous Downbeat and Metronome magazine jazz poll victories; lesser known is the fact that he has been guitarist with Eugene Ormandy and the Philadelphia Orchestra, and that he has played trumpet and violin with various concert groups.

These, then, are the personalities who will represent modern music in this year's Symposium; the CC student will also have an opportunity to express his talent musically, for there will be a Folk Music Hootenanny, music recitals, and a jazz jam session to round out the event.

Dr. T. H. Rawles CC Mathematics Professor, Dies

Dr. Thomas Howard Rawles, professor mathematics at Colorado College, died unexpectedly at his home, 1945 Mesa Rd., Thursday. He suffered an apparent heart attack while teaching in a classroom and was taken to his home. Dr. Rawles was 64 and had been connected with Colorado College except for war service, 27 years. He was a former treasurer of the college and former director of admissions, but had returned entirely to teaching, which was his chief interest. He held a Ph.D. degree from Yale University and was an outstanding expert in mathematics and a member of several mathematical societies.

He had a brilliant war record, having served with the Rainbow Division in World War I and returned to active service in May, 1942. He was a major in the artillery and attended the Marole Services School in Lexington, Va. In conformity with the Army policy of releasing officers, after more than 38 years service, Dr. Rawles had been returned to the inactive status.

He assumed the duties of treasurer of Colorado College December 1, 1940. During his administration he formulated a number of financial regulations, which were adopted by the board of trustees as permanent policies for the administration of finances. Under his direction two vacant properties on the campus were renovated to provide apartments for Navy personnel. Other campus properties were improved, notably the Student Union building, the Grill Room and the College Book Store.

He had been on the administrative staff of the college since 1935 when at his request he was returned to teaching. He had published extensively in the mathematical field. Certain methods which he developed have been cited by textbook authors, both in the United States and abroad.

Dr. Rawles was born Dec. 12, 1897, in Bloomington, Indiana. After earning his bachelor's degree at Indiana University in 1919 he served with the actuarial department of the Reinsurance Life Co. in Des Moines, Iowa, and after that for three years was representative for Standard Oil of New York in Greece. He returned to America to earn his master's degree from Indiana in 1925 and his doctor's degree from Yale in 1927. From 1927 to 1929 he was an instructor in mathematics at Yale, and from 1929 to 1935 served the mathematics department there as assistant professor.

His ability as an administrator was recognized by Colorado College officials who brought him here in 1935 to be director of admission and dean of freshmen. He served in this capacity until World War II, when he entered military service.

IN MEMORIAM:

MAYBE WHEN IT SNOWS they'll turn the sprinklers off?

from the Honor Council

The ideal of the honor system, imbedded in tradition and furthered by development, has both tangible and intangible significance for the college community and its individuals. The individual must reflect on his own inner convictions to derive personal significance from the system.

As a college community, we can partially grasp the tangible meaning by evaluating the practical aspects of the working honor system. In order to initiate such evaluations, a few comparisons between a system such as ours and a proctored system are here considered.

What is a proctored system? One specific description that comes to mind is of an examination taken under surveillance of an instructor. The majority of us have experienced such a method in our prior academic lives. The test is given, and the teacher must remain in the room to prevent or discontinue any acts of cheating in the process of occurring. In this situation the student is looked upon as a potential cheater, and the teacher as a preventative force.

The honor system, on the other hand, has a more positive nature. It respects the honor of the individual and turns to this factor to guide the student in his actions. The system has to be enforced for the betterment of the community, but the enforcement is placed in the hands of the individual rather than in those of the instructor. The individual has an obligation to turn himself in if he cheats personally and to turn in others who may not act in accord with the system.

In selecting Colorado College for a higher education, we have likewise chosen the honor system and, it therefore, has an integral part in our lives. It is not only an obligation but a privilege as members of this college to uphold its principles.

Student Policy Committee

The Student Policy Committee is attempting to establish a basic standard of conduct for students of the Colorado College community. The committee is concerned at present with the students' feelings on his responsibilities to the community. The committee will hold its next meeting on November 16. Comments may be directed to Ann Armstrong, Alice Brooks, Jo Heller, Erv Hinds, Luis Markisen, Hank Rase, and Dale Spall. Written comments may be left in the ASCC box, Rastall Center. The committee would appreciate all ideas on what students think their basic responsibilities are to the college community.

The Assemblies Committee will present Mr. Guy Carwan in an assembly entitled, "Freedom Songs of the South" on Tuesday, November 13 at 11:00 in Perkins.

Mr. Carwan and his wife, Candy, who will appear with him, participated in sit-in demonstrations in several Southern cities. He will talk about his experiences and sing songs from the sit-ins and freedom rides.

This promises to be a most interesting assembly, and all are urged to attend.

Presbyterians Sponsor Summer Work Program

About 650 College-age and adult volunteers, mostly Americans, went out under the auspices of the United Presbyterian Church this summer to help with church work in depressed areas of the United States and twenty-eight other countries. The Volunteers generally took care of their own travel and living expenses, and found they gained as much from the experience as they contributed.

General information about 1963 summer service possibilities and information about community service, volunteer, and work camp projects in the United States is available from the Student Summer Service, room 1296, 475 Riverside Drive, New York 27, N.Y. Data about overseas projects and work camps is available from the Office of Student World Relations, room 924, the same address. Information about study programs, working seminars, and stateside educational projects, may be obtained from Presbyterian Service, Witherspoon Building, Philadelphia 7, Pa.

Civic Design Committee Reports Promise of Area

The Colorado College Civic Design Committee, as the result of a year-long study, financed by a $10,000 grant from the Rockefeller Foundation, reports that the greatest promise for development of the Rocky Mountain-Great Plains area may be recreation and use of natural regional advantages.

Since large scale industry and crop agriculture are impractical in the region, the committee suggests: The establishment of wholly new cities to take care of the nation's population explosion; advanced scientific research centers; educational institutions; and fine arts programs; development of a national recreation area; center for language and cultural understanding; and the development of the region as a laboratory for semi-arid area living.

Members of the Civic Design Study Committee, under the chairmanship of Prof. Glen Brooks of the political science department at Colorado College, are Prof. Bernard Arnest, Prof. Robert Z. Brown, Prof. Kenneth Curran, Prof. Louis Geiger, Prof. Paul Kutsche, Prof. Douglas Mertz, Prof. Fred A. Sondermann, and Prof. Van Shaw of the Colorado College faculty, and Colorado Springs Architect Gordon Ingraham. Ex-officio members are Colorado College President Louis T. Benetz and Vice President W. R. Brossman.

Phi Delta Theta: Saturday
Phi Delta Theta enjoyed a rousing picnic with the spirited, but ailing Sigma Chi. The picnic was in celebration of the devastating Phi Del-Sigma Chi football encounter. The fine repertoire of both choruses kept everyone well entertained throughout the afternoon.

Monday evening the Phi Dels were honored to have President Benezet and Mr. and Mrs. Brossman at the house for dinner. Early in the week, the Phi welcomed their field secretary, Raymond Hunkins.

Sigma Chi: Last Sunday the Sigs hosted the DGs at an informal evening supper. The previous day they held a "picnic" at the Bluffs to celebrate winning interfraternity football. Tomorrow will find the Sigs devoting their day to redecorating the Boys' Club on South Tejon—their annual local service project.

Alpha Phi: The Alpha Phis are looking forward to a Sunday dinner with the Sigma Chis. On the 12th they will be hostesses to the Denver Alpha Phi Mother's Club.

Delta Gamma: Monday night the DGs held an informal dinner for the members. Sunday morning the sophomores surprised the upperclass girls with an early breakfast. The event was highlighted by a pantomime of "Tiptoe Through the Tulips."

Gamma Phi Beta: Sunday the Religious Affairs Committee held the discussion of Arthur Miller's The Crucible at the Gamma Phi lodge. Jim Fox led the small but dedicated group in an exchange of views.

The Gamma Phis have been studying hard this week to brush up their Shakespeare and hope everyone enjoyed the Variety Show as much as they did.

Kappa Alpha Theta: The Thetas held their scholarship desert luncheon. Guest speaker, Dr. Fred Sondermann, gave an excellent talk on this year's symposium.

For the variety show this year, the Thetas did a skit with the Betas. The success of the melodrama—"No, No, a Thousand Times No." will be celebrated tonight by a cast party.

Kappa Kappa Gamma: The Kappas will officially start their new philanthropy project this Sunday when they make a get-acquainted visit to the Colorado Springs Child Day Care Center. They are looking forward to a dessert Monday night, which will honor the CC football team.

For the past week, the Kappas have been hostesses for their field secretary. Friday night they held an hors d'oeuvre party in her honor.

Alpha Kappa Psi Tours Interstate Gas Company

On October 26, Alpha Kappa Psi toured Colorado Interstate Gas Company. The purpose of the tour was to study the effects of automation on the various aspects of the business. After a briefing on the history and plans for the expansion of the company, the group was treated to a demonstration of the capabilities of computers in solving technical engineering problems and spending the routine work of accounting. The group was amazed that one computer was capable not only of handling the payroll of 900 employees in 65 minutes, but also of actually playing Christmas Carols. This tour was the first of the year for the members of the professional business fraternity. Future tours are planned next semester for the Denver Mint and Coors Brewery.

Tiger staff pictures will be taken on Tuesday, November 13, at 3:30 p.m. Staff members should be in the Tiger Office at that time.

Musical Assembly Presented Tuesday

By Genevieve Vaughn

Medieval and Renaissance music, played and sung in the manner of the time, was the feature of a concert given by Karl Wolfram, Tuesday, November 6, at Perkins Hall under the joint sponsorship of the Music and German departments and the Assemblies Committee. Wolfram was formerly a professor of economics at the Universities of Munich and Hamburg. He became fascinated by the theorb, a 12 stringed 16th century instrument similar to the lute, and quit teaching to devote himself to singing and playing the theorb. The instrument he used for the concert was made in 1961, but he demonstrated a 16th century theorb which he reconstructed.

The first part of the program was devoted to Medieval and Renaissance music, from an early 14th century love song to 16th century ballads ranging in subject from what to do with an impossible wife to a flirtation between a girl and a passing horseman. Wolfram's next group of songs dated back to the Thirty Years War and reflected the sufferings of the poor people during the war. The second half of the program was devoted mainly to songs written to poems by 19th century romantic poets, including Goethe and Joseph von Eisenbach. In this vein also was a 20th century Lautenlied, or "lute-song," written for a poem by Hugo von Hoffmannsthal. Wolfram concluded the program with Swedish and Norwegian folk music.

Wolfram's stage manner was warm and informal and he displayed a love of music he sang. He had a feeling especially for the medieval and renaissance music. Judging from the stillness of the auditorium, the audience was very receptive. Perkins Hall was filled almost to capacity due to the advertising efforts of the Assemblies Committee.

Wolfram studies old music manuscripts and old poems until he finds the earliest existing version of a song. There are many song collections available in German archives.

He is 33 years old and lives in Hamburg with his wife and two daughters.

SERMON TITLE: "Faith Tragedy"

Recently our college community was appalled and dismayed by a number of tragic events. Some of us have been shaken by occurrences and they have raised anew amongst us the old problem of evil. What is there in this tragedy and sinning waste, if there is any at the Bible itself is acutely aware of the agony of this question. It asks it in magnificent, poignant form in the Old Testament. New Testament speaks concept of God's involvement in the sin and desolation of the world, although not giving an rational answer points to rescue by which man can live up to world's tragedy and overcome it.

"Never on Sunday"

Never on Sunday is a rambling, tedious little politico-political fable about the Virtuous Vice and the Quiet American. The theme of the film is old, but the director Jules Dassin presents it in an amusing enough in so doing to save it from the depths of mediocrity.

Briefly, the story is of an American in search of truth in the country of Greece, Aristotle, Plato. He believes that if he can learn what caused Athens to decline, he can then save the world. But what our American "Red" finds on his Odyssey is not Plato, but rather a beautiful prostitute who becomes to him the symbol of a decadent ancient Greece, with the zeal of a missionary, he set out to save the prostitute. Within the plot arises a far more involved philosophy, although never reaches Aristotelian heights. Our Homer discovers that the talk more satisfaction in the joy of living than in any search for abstract truth, that knowledge is not power, and lastly, that only way to save the world is to love the people in it.

I would like to suggest an implication of the film. The logic is not entirely in Greek, but rather a representation of the differences in culture and perceptions. He has recognized color values of the native tone. If Never on Sunday had been a loss of not merely flavor, but of the humor, and perhaps even, the point of the film, Stan Keller's

I pointed out last year, when the idea was first formulated, that if a lot of planning wasn't done, and if the visiting lecturers and schedule wasn't top-notch, "Symposium Week" might just as well be listed as "Ski Week." Without mandatory attendance (something from which everyone shrinks), more CC students would be at Aspen than in Colorado Springs.

The planning stage is now over, the publicity stage has begun, and it looks now as if "Symposium Week" should be well attended.

My doubts vanished when I looked at the schedule of events. The program that has been decided upon is a most diversified one, planned for the broad spectrum of CC students. Revolving around literature, music, drama, art and movies, there is something to whet the interest of everyone.

The schedule has been balanced to permit maximum participation without overlap, and, further, to distribute the various phases of contemporary art throughout the week. Each day contains a varied program, ranging from lectures to discussions to jazz sessions to experimental films. These have been laid out to be not only entertaining, but intellectually respectable.

The speaker list is extremely good. Every single person CC contacted to act as a lecturer or speaker has accepted! And, though, while running over the list of names, some may not be immediately recognized, these men are at the top or near the top in their fields. The idea of a symposium week has been so enthusiastically accepted that persons wishing to speak during this event have contacted CC on their own initiative.

All in all, the week should be both informative and entertaining—not just another week of school, or a week to spend at the K or elsewhere—but a week in which to explore the arts of our society, and to enjoy ourselves at the same time.

I hope—and, in fact, predict—there will be more CC students on campus January 13-19 than on the ski slopes. It will be well worth our while. CEP

The Enthusiasm Committee, under the enthusiastic leadership of Pat Chapman has been asked to organize enthusiasm activities for the remainder of the soccer schedule. This will include cheerleaders, band, etc.

The bulk of the meeting was concerned with the approval of Finance Committee appropriations. They are as follows: Choir, $300 to help finance their tour; Center for Practical Politics, $50; Commitment, $70; Convention Fund, $400, this money is to be used for financing students representing CC at regional conferences (especially at CSU); Darkroom, $300; Foreign Student Committee, $2,420; Homecoming, $350, this is merely to underwrite any deficit that may occur and most of this will probably be returned; International Relations Club, $300; Kinnikinnik, $2,109.70 (.85 per student per semester), this increase over last year's allotment is to enable the Kinnikinnik to have color pages in at least one of the issues; All-School picnic, $150, again this is for underwriting the event in case of a deficit and most of it will probably be returned; Student Assemblies, $660; TIGER, $2,978.40 ($1.20 per student per semester). Appropriations for AWS and the Nugget have been held back due to procedural difficulties of the organizations.

Applications for TIGER editor and business manager are due November 14.

Under the auspices of the Social

Co-ordinating Committee, plans for the All-College Conference, February 23 and 24, are being formulated. Applications for chairman will soon be opened.

Student Policy: See article on page 1.

Guy Carwan, ex-freedom rider, will be the assembly speaker next Tuesday, November 13. He will sing "Freedom Songs of the South."

Because of numerous requests for donations (Foster Parents, the Laverne Madigan Fund for Indians and Eskimos) Dave Holdorf, chairman of the Academic Committee has asked whether a general policy regarding contributions should be established or whether they should continue to review them on an individual basis. The council voted unanimously to postpone discussion of this point until next week.

Rastall Center Board set up a television in the Hub last Tuesday for the purpose of enabling students etc. to watch the election results. The Rastall Center has been practicing for its bowling contest with the ASCC, however no date has as yet been set for this showdown. Also, a star bowler (not Max) will be at CC on the 27th of November. Sunday, November 11 Rastall will sponsor "The Three Penny Opera." The German movie, with English subtitles, will be shown in Perkins.

The ad hoc committee has taken a "definite stand," but they say it's top secret.

Americans in Southern Rhodesia

By Solomon Nkiwane

I come from Southern Rhodesia, which is still a British self-governing colony in Southern Africa. It is a small country of about the size of California (over 150,000 square miles) and has a population of about 3% million.

The white Rhodesians (mainly English) have often described Southern Rhodesia, affectionately, as "the land of sunshine." And indeed, it is not uncommon to see them basking themselves in the southern tropical sun with apparent contentment. Unfortunately, since about five years ago when the African political "wind of change" blew loose into Southern Rhodesia, the "sunshine" is fast turning into "darkness."

However, for different reasons, Americans have found their way to Southern Rhodesia. In fact, we have had quite a big share of American visitors to Africa. Despite the fact that the country is inland (1000 miles from the nearest coast) and that she is almost surrounded by hostile countries, such as Portuguese Angola and Mozambique in the West and East respectively, the Republic of South Africa in the South, Americans are not failed to get there in large numbers.

The first batch of Americans I saw were soldiers. How and why they passed through Southern Rhodesia, I don't know. But, as I drove along Five Street in the city of Bulawayo in 1958, we came across a group of about ten American soldiers. They were all complaining bitterly about the shortness of the buildings.

"Hey, guys, do you call these skyscrapers?" one asked. "Oh no. In fact I'm sick and tired of them short buildings here" was the answer, to the great amusement of my Australian friend.

As one goes to the Victoria Falls, however, which is certainly the pride of Southern Rhodesia's natural assets, one usually comes across thousands of tourists from all over the world. Amongst these tourists you are sure to detect the Americans by their apparent inquisitiveness and curiosity.

First, Americans generally like to talk to the local people and ask questions, while their children usually have fun with the monkeys and baboons which are found in large numbers at the Victoria Falls. Secondly, Americans tend to be nicely curious. If, at the Victoria Falls, you see anybody creeping right into the precipice of the Falls (usually trying to take the most unusual picture!), in nine cases out of ten, it is an American. At least, that is what most people think.

At any rate, I would like to warn any American who visits the Victoria Falls, that many people have died there. Currents of swirling wind there sometimes change and places generally regarded as safe zones sometimes become dangerous.

Southern Rhodesia also has large national parks for game. One of these, which teems with all kinds of animals, is the Wankie Game Reserve. If you travel by train from Bulawayo to the Victoria Falls you pass through the Wankie Game Reserve. It is not unusual sometimes that the train stops because of the stubborn and sluggish elephants found on the rail.

Once, I traveled by train which was forced to stop that way. While the local people and certainly the European travelers complained about the wasted time, and exhibited why-not-go-through-those-dum-dum-beasts-and-kill-a-few-of-them attitude, I saw quite a few of these travelers getting out of their cameras and taking pictures, apparently cheerful. The first one I asked told me that he was an American.

At the University of Rhodesia, and Nyasaland, there is a history professor, Dr. T. O. Ranger, an American. He has, in relatively a short time, made himself very popular with one section and very notorious with the other section, of the Rhodesian community. He has led desegregation campaigns, and once in 1961, he was pushed into a swimming pool by white Rhodesians while wearing his Sunday best! Two weeks ago Dr. Ranger was arrested with other 1800 African leaders in the name of "peace and order" in the country.

Election . . . 1962

By Bob Williams

The national trend in this week's off-year election can be regarded as a mild victory for the administration of John Kennedy. Historically the party in power has lost an average of nearly thirty seats in the House of Representatives. The fact that the Republicans have picked up approximately half a dozen seats can be regarded as a Democratic victory since they have minimized their possible losses. As a result of the slim Kennedy victory in 1960, the President failed to sweep a great many Representatives into office, therefore the Democrats had none of the customary seats to lose in this year's non-presidential election. Indications are that the next session of the House will be politically more conservative than the last. Because of this fact, the prospects for passage of key pieces of the Administration's legislation would appear very dim.

In the upper branch of Congress, the Democrats have picked up at least five seats. It would seem that these gains will strengthen the Administration's position in the Senate, rather than that of the Republican-Southern Democratic block. Since many of the most significant pieces of legislation in the last session of Congress were defeated by one or two votes, the additional Democrats may be able to lend the critically needed votes for an Administration victory on key proposals in Congress.

The Republican strength across the country was supposed to be shown by the picking up of many Governorships. The importance of these gubernatorial elections that might evolve for 1964 in the Republican party. Generally speaking, the Republicans have elected governors to many of the largest electoral vote states such as New York, Ohio, Pennsylvania, and Michigan. The Democrats have surprisingly won many smaller electoral vote states such as Vermont, New Mexico, and Massachusetts.

The closeness of important races in such previously one party states as Alabama, Oklahoma, Vermont, and New Hampshire demonstrated the increase of the two party system in the United States.

The defeat of Richard Nixon in California probably closes the book on his political career. Most significantly, this election loss rules the former Vice President out of any future contention for a national elective office.

The prominent elections within the state of Colorado is best described as a Republican sweep with both John Love and Peter Dominick winning by unexpectedly large pluralities. Dominick's victory spotlighted a moderate national trend of increased popularity of ultra conservative Republicans.

WES to Dedicate New Dance Studio

The Women's Educational Society of Colorado College will dedicate the Dorothea Cornick Dance Studio at its annual meeting Saturday, Nov. 10.

The society, organized in 1880, to assist girls attending CC, has raised more than $10,500 to build the dance studio and remodel the girl's gymnasium in Cossett Hall.

The dance studio is named in memory of Mrs. Cornick, late wife of Professor Norman S. Cornick of the college dance department.

Mrs. Cornick, formerly a dancer in New York, had taught dance at the college for a number of years.

The WES project to raise funds for the dance studio and girl's gymnasium, which got under way in the spring of 1961, has been under the direction of Mrs. Hartley Murray.

The project has been one of the principal objectives of the society under the presidency of Mrs. Louis T. Benetz.

Dedication of the dance studio will follow the society's annual luncheon and business meeting to be held in Benis Hall.

Special guests at the luncheon and dedication ceremony will be Professor Cornick; Miss Betty Young, director of physical education for women; and physical plant director Richard Kendrick.

Serving on the committee to set up the dedication are Mrs. Murray, Mrs. Alice Preston, and Mrs. Mary Warner.

Mrs. Joy Rucker will be in charge of the luncheon.

Religious Affairs Committee

The Reverend Alexander Lukens of St. Barnabas Episcopal Church of Denver will be a guest speaker of the Religious Affairs Committee Sunday, November 11, at 5:30 p. m. All are welcome to participate in the discussion with Rev. Lukens on "Motives for Living" at the DG house. The following Sunday's discussion will be led by Rabbi Gordon of Iowa in the Theta house. Suppers will be served at each of these discussion periods for 25c.

Survival Kits Purchased From Sophs for Finals

Are you feeling the academic bind? Are you beginning to wonder if you will survive the finals (which incidentally begin in 32 days!) with sane mind and healthy body? If you are—the sophomore class has your interests at heart! The class has sent registered students offering to deliver one special Survival kit to each student for only $2.00. The survival kit will include such goodies as apples, oranges, bananas, cookies, brownies, candy, Fritos and numerous others. Your only duty is to write your parents reminding (begging!) them to order one for you. If your pleas fail, then please be sure to order one yourself. Get your form at the Rastall Desk and return it with $2.00 to Jo Heller—Loomis Hall. All profits will go to the support of the classes' foreign student.

Notice!

Mr. Ervin, a representative from Stanley Aviation Corp., will lecture and show a film on Stanley Aviation Corporation's supersonic escape capsule for the B-58. The lecture and film will be held at Rastall Center on Tuesday, November 13, at 7:15 p. m. in the WES room. The program is sponsored by Alpha Kappa Psi, and the public is invited. There will be refreshments.

In the fifth paragraph of the review of "The Crucible" in last week's edition, the wording should have read, "Adrienne Zech and her four followers . . ." not ". . . poor followers," as was printed.

CC Tigers Barely Miss First Conference Victory

A tremendous team effort by the Colorado College football eleven almost resulted in the Tigers scalping the front-running Adams State Indians in an RMC game played last Saturday at Alamosa. The final score favored the Indians 21 to 20 when a two point extra point try by the Bengals was nullified by an offside penalty. The win gave Adams State a 3-0 league mark and at least a share of the conference championship. CC now supports an 0-3 mark to hold down fifth place.

The Indians scored twice in the first quarter when halfback Carl Letters smashed over from the two yard line, and minutes later when halfback Jim Edwards plowed into the end zone from the two. Ochoa kicked both the extra points to give ASC a 14 to 0 half-time advantage.

The Tigers came roaring back in the second half to almost pull at a victory. The Black and Gold killed their first TD when Chris Letley intercepted an Indian pass in the seventeen yard line and rushed past the goal line. Adams State came back later in the period to tie the third marker when the Tigers scampered to pay dirt from the CC three yard line. Ochoa's third successful place kick proved to be the margin of victory.

Colorado College made its bid in the final stanza as they registered two touchdowns. With 11:40 left, Wayne Deutscher stormed fourteen yards to score, and, after Steve Sabol's conversion, CC was up only 21 to 14. The excitement mounted when Vince Greco passed ten yards to Lee Muller to give the Tigers their third TD (only 4:10 left in the contest). Coach Jerry Carle's eleven decided to go for the two point conversion which was broken up on a highly disputed offside penalty. The Bengals displayed a devastating defense and potent offense in the contest with each squad member putting everything he had to the game. It was a team effort that tallied CC's three touchdowns and it was a team effort that barely missed topping the conference champions, proving that CC football hasn't completely given up the ghost. Their next try is with Nebraska Wesleyan University in Lincoln, Nebraska. The Black and Gold will wind up their 1962 Rocky Mountain Conference season November 17 when Colorado Mines invades CC at Washburn Field.

In games played last weekend, eastern State triumphed over Colorado Mines, 13-6. This was eastern State's final conference game and they finished with a 2-2 record. This week's schedule finds Adams State at Colorado School of Mines, Colorado State College journeys to New Mexico Western, and Western State plays host to Idaho State.

Sabol Named To RMC Squad

Steve Sabol, a Colorado College junior from Villanova, Penn., has been named fullback of the Academic All Rocky Mountain Conference football squad.

The academic team members, the first such grid squad ever chosen in the Rocky Mountain Conference, are selected on an equal basis according to scholastic ability and football skill. The team will represent the 53-year-old RMC in selections for the national Academic All-American team later this fall.

Twenty-year-old Sabol, the only Pennsylvania choice on the academic squad, graduated third in his class from Haverford School in Haverford, Penn., and has been a consistent performer in both the classroom and on the football field at CC.

He is majoring in education and has been a member of the CC Tigers since his first year.

Sabol moved from quarterback in high school to a college fullback in a roundabout method. The first year at Colorado College he filled the freshman field general's spot. Later he was transferred to halfback and then to the slotback in Coach Carle's pro-style offensive system. He moved to fullback in his sophomore year, a position that suits Sabol no end.

Sabol has carried the mail for a CC touchdown almost this year and has booted the conversions after four more. Place kicking is a new line of work for the CC fullback. He tried it for the first time this season and has been quite successful.

For instance, Steve turned out for the CC track squad for the first time in the 1962 spring season, moving into the shot-put bracket, he nailed down third place in the Rocky Mountain Conference.

Although Sabol is the only Colorado College selection on the RMC academic first team, CC placed three men on the academic second team. These are Stu Brubaker, sophomore guard, Al Church, senior tackle; and Bill Mellin, junior halfback.

Notice!

Plans have been made for block seating for CC students during CC games at the Holiday Hockey Tournament in Boston. CC will play games on December 26, 27, 28 and 29. A sign-up sheet is available at Rastall Center Desk. Questions may be referred to Brad Chase or Tom DiMare.

CC Basketball

Count drills for the 1962 basketball season have started at Colorado College with 18 potential hoopsters turning out.

CC basketball coach Leon "Red" Eastlack said the squad includes seven returning lettermen plus two transfer students from junior colleges and nine freshmen.

Eastlack said both transfer students, Bob Heiny and Bob Baker, promised to be outstanding players. He also pointed to freshmen Phil Hart and Pete Susenihl as strong contenders for this year's starting five.

So far the Tigers have confined their drills to defensive patterns and conditioning. Although Eastlack intends to keep the squad at its present strength, he doesn't plan to move in offensive practice for another week.

By all indications, Eastlack said, the team will possess a better overall balance than they did last year. They are lacking in height compared to other Rocky Mountain Conference Squads, but Eastlack said they would probably be able to compensate for that by better overall unity on the court. The Tigers open their 1962 campaign on December 1, meeting St. Josephs on the Rio Grande at Cossett Hall at 8 p. m.

He continued his studies at Columbia University and Columbia University Russian Institute. He has been an instructor of Russian and Russian history at the University of Maryland's Far East Division in Tokyo, and executive director of International Research, Inc., in New York.

He has also worked as an interpreter at the U.N. and for the U. S. State Department. In his work with the State Department, he was involved in working out details leading to the Kennedy-Khrushchev talks in Austria, and in planning the proposed direct flights between New York and Moscow.

CC vs. Mines

The CC Tigers will round out their season of football in a game with the Colorado School of Mines on Washburn Field tomorrow. No matter what the season had in store for either of these teams, it is all thrown to the winds when they meet. Traditional rivalry is always an upsetting factor. Let's give the squad some support tomorrow, and there's little doubt they will respond and give everyone a good game.

Symposium Will Enable CC To Examine Spirit of Art

By Bruce Colvin

In the view of the public, modern art may well be the most puzzling aspect of the contemporary arts. Certainly no other art form today has been the subject of so many controversies, controversies that center in the body of the general citizenry. Through the catalyst formed by such men as a philosopher esthetician, an art critic, a social anthropologist, and an experimenting scientist, Symposium will enable Colorado College to examine the spirit of contemporary art, with resulting ideas that may apply equally to the fine arts in general.

Clement Greenberg, art critic, is a man whose thoughts and judgments have made an important mark on the painting and sculpture of the last two decades. Hilton Kramer, contributing editor to Arts Magazine, has named Greenberg "a writer who has certainly brought the finest mind to the regular practice of art criticism in our time." This excerpt is from the October issue of Arts, which features a review of Clement Greenberg's book Art and Culture: Critical Essays, a review which is also meant as a tribute to Greenberg. His writings have appeared in numerous art journals, and he has contributed regularly in the past to The Nation, Partisan Review, and Commentary. His book, Art and Culture, will soon be available in Tutt Library. Greenberg will speak to the Symposium audience on modern painting, and will participate in a discussion on the relations between the public, the artist, and the critic; surely few other persons are as highly qualified as he to comment on these subjects.

A distinguished philosopher, Dr. Abraham Kaplan, will lecture on truth in art, a subject that has great bearing upon all forms of artistic creativity. Dr. Kaplan is professor and former chairman of the Department of Philosophy, University of California at Los Angeles, having also been on the faculties of Harvard, Columbia, New York University, and the University of Michigan. He is a recipient of both Guggenheim and Rockefeller Fellowships, was a Fellow at the Center for Advanced Study in the Behavioral Sciences at Palo Alto, and is now a Fellow at the Center for Advanced Study at Wesleyan University, Middletown, Connecticut. He has lectured throughout the United States, India, Israel, and Japan, and is the author of Power and Society, The New World of Philosophy, American Ethics and Public Policy, and of numerous articles in journals; The New World of Philosophy is now in two volumes, and it is a prime example of Kaplan's knowledge of contemporary philosophies, and of his concern for interpretation of modern life.

Dr. George Mills will give his views of contemporary art, views which stem from a background of anthropology. Dr. Mills is now the anthropologist and assistant director of the Colorado Springs Fine Arts Center, Curator of Taylor Museum, and lecturer in General Education for Colorado College. Educated at Dartmouth and Harvard, and the recipient of an American Anthropological Association Fellowship, Dr. Mills has been recognized particularly for his research on the cultures of the American Southwest, and has also studied extensively the relations of art, culture, and society. His ideas should undoubtedly further the scope of Symposium's study of the contemporary arts and the public, and will be an important addition to the overall synthesis.

Probably the most thought provoking segment of this year's Symposium will be presented by a young scientist, Raymond Auger. Through his interest in the field of automatic control, Auger has developed a machine which can be programmed to create paintings.

Auger studied mechanical engineering at Georgia Tech for two years, and during the time became the founding editor for its literary magazine. He transferred to Columbia University to pursue his growing interest in psychology. Auger supported himself while at Columbia as a draftsman, and went on as a research engineer-designer after his final year there. A course in neurological psychology started him on an experiment in constructing artificial nerve networks capable of controlling a simulated musculature system. The device developed, from its inception in 1955 into a machine capable of performing a variety of tasks, of which painting was the final phase. When it was discovered that many of the paintings held qualities of generally accepted aesthetic values, attempts were made to increase the "free will" of the machine so that the device's creative capabilities were emphasized. The machine, its creator, and its creations have been featured in newspaper articles in the United States and Europe, and on five national television programs. Auger was Technical Editor of the Automatic Control series from 1956 to 1960, when his book, The Relay Guide, was published. Upon the publication of the book, Auger made an extensive trip abroad which took him through the USSR, where he gained an interest in research being done in the fluid amplification field, a field in which he has now achieved prominence in America. Raymond Auger will be an extremely interesting participant in the Symposium, and his machine, which he will demonstrate, may raise important questions as to the true definition of art.

In conjunction with Symposium Week, the Colorado Springs Fine Arts Center will be holding an influential exhibition originated by New York's Museum of Modern Art earlier this year, "Recent Painting U.S.A.: The Figure," of which the New York Times' John Canady said "is the most imaginative, the least arbitrarily exclusive, and by far the most explorative exhibition the museum has held in a long while." An exhibition of student art will also be held during the week, thus presenting our own portion of creativity in art.

IRC Announces Film, Discussion on Mexico

The International Relations Club announces the presentation of the movie, "Forgotten Villages," based on a story by John Steinbeck and narrated by Burgess Meredith. Tuesday, November 20 at 7:30 p.m. This black and white sound movie covers the story of a small village in Mexico and of a boy and his family involved in the clash between superstition and medicine. The movie lasts 60 minutes. After the film there will be a general discussion on Mexico led by Dr. Don MacCorquodale, local physician and enthusiastic, keen observer of the Mexican scene.

The I.R. Club extends an invitation to all its members and everyone interested in Latin American affairs and Mexico—or those who simply wish to see a good movie! Perkins will seat 300 comfortably!

From the Chair

By MAX POWER — President ASCC

One point which all members of ASCC contend with again and again is this: Are ASCC meetings open to students. And again and again we answer: Yes! They certainly are. The meetings, held each Monday at 4:00 in Rastall Center are open, and interested students are urged to attend and contribute to the discussion if they wish.

A revitalized Assemblies Committee has, in the past two weeks, produced two excellent assembly programs, each of which has drawn a good student-faculty turnout. The projected programs which will fill the Tuesday at 11 a.m. slot look equally as interesting, and it is to be hoped that the Assemblies Committee will make the college community aware of these attractions.

Keep an eye on the evolving reports of the Symposium. You'll be pleasantly surprised.

Our congratulations to the CC soccer team. With their enthusiasm and ability, they have elevated soccer, largely unheard of on this campus two years ago, into an important inter-collegiate sport. We suspect that enthusiasm for and participation in soccer is on the increase. This opportunity to involve more of our students in rugged, intercollegiate competition can only strengthen the whole college athletic program.

ASCC Notes

The meeting was "kicked off" (figuratively) with a plea for student support of the new soccer team. Hopefully there will be another home game at which students may show their enthusiasm.

The interviews for Tiger editor and business manager will be held Friday evening, November 16. Any interested personnel are urged to apply; business managers are particularly welcome. There is a stipend...

The Assemblies Committee has accomplished the greatest revolution since 1789. It is now a "model of efficiency," with carefully delegated sub-committees and personnel. The committees will try to hold an informal post-assembly luncheon whenever possible so that interested students may meet the speaker personally. An afternoon coffee hour will also be scheduled if interest merits. Tuesday, November 20 will bring Rabbi A. A. Gordon speaking on "Travels in Israel," and the battle cry of the committee is "Fill Perkins!"

After lengthy discussion and rapid attrition of several motions, a very flexible conclusion was reached concerning the numerous requests for funds which have been flooding the Academic Committee. Mr. Howard reminded the Council that almost $1000 of student money is given to charitable organizations annually by means of the Variety Show and the Campus Chest Auction. It was also mentioned that several of these requests may be referred to other campus groups which might care to contribute. It was therefore decided that the Academic Committee would consider each request separately and consult the Council only if it felt the plea worthwhile.

Rastall has embarked on an intensive plan to fill the leisure hours of those who do not plan to utilize the Thanksgiving holiday by doing the past three month's work. There will be a Bridge Evening Nov. 23 and a movie on Nov. 24. Saturday, Nov. 17 will feature a Twister after the game (chez Hub).

The "Top Secret" idea of the ad hoc Symposium Social committee has been described as "concrete." This writer suspects paper mache.

The Sophomore Class has found a date for the Winter Carnival—February 15 and 16. Friday night will feature a show by CC figure skaters, followed by the annual hockey and broomball games. Saturday night's dance will be at the Antlers. Tune in later for more information.

The Social Coordinating Committee's "Blue Book" (or "How to Succeed in Social Chairmanship Without Even Trying") is available in the Activities Office.

May we again stress that ASCC meetings are open meetings and may be attended by any and all who wish to see what the student government is really like. If you've nothing to do on a Monday afternoon and you are in Rastall, or if you have to make a special trip, do come.

Miss Benham performed her usual suave job of adjourning the meeting at 4:45.

There will be a Student Education Association meeting Tuesday, November 20, 1962, in Rastall Center at 4:15 p.m.

Miss Marion Reid and Mrs. Elizabeth Wade will speak to the group on their experiences teaching in England on an exchange teacher program. Also at this time the group will have its picture taken for the Nugget.

Benezet Presents Program To Strengthen Greek System

Recently a discussion centering about both the strong and the weak points of the Greek system and its future at Colorado College was held at the Kappa house. The program featured Dr. Benezet and included representatives from each of the five societies. It was prompted by the general feeling among CC students that the administration was against the Greek system and was therefore attempting to weaken them through such measures as increased academic pressure.

In answer to the question of the role of the Greeks in the point of view of the GG administration, Dr. Benezet stated that the definition of their goals, fraternities are organizations whose existence is based upon the ideal that each member may grow in such a way as to strive towards high ideals of the organization. He feels that the trouble between the faculty and the Greeks arises when these fraternities do not live up to their standards, and towards this end, he suggested his own four point program. 1) The fraternity could ask the question, "What do we owe to ourselves?" Under this heading he would include duty, high standards, and constructive activities. 2) In the same manner, the fraternity should ask "What do we owe to the college?"

In answer to this he mentioned the importance of college citizenship, participation in extra-curricular activities, support of the college community standards and partnership in the acquisition of education. 3) In turn the question of what the college owes the fraternity should also be considered. In this list he includes support of the fraternity ideal as well as physical support (maintenance, buildings, food service), its participation in the education of the college.

4) His final point centered upon concrete plans for improvement, some of which he stated, have already been carried out: 1) An annual leadership conference between the faculty and the Greeks 2) Alumnae and faculty-fraternity advisors. 3) Monthly Greek and Panhellenic luncheons. 4) A faculty member representing the fraternity point of view. 5) A fraternity calendar (deferred to next year). 6) And, finally, a fraternity evaluation of effectiveness in areas.

In the question and answer period which followed, the first question mentioned was the advantages and disadvantages of deferred membership. Dr. Benezet stated that although the fraternities might suffer financially the first semester, he feels that the system offers a net advantage to both the fraternities and the fraternities, and that it will be better judged in its second year than its first.

In answer to the question of the role of the Greeks at CC, Dr. Benezet pointed out that each person by examining the things he considers important to his personal development, must decide what is his role. While some may feel that fraternities are a distraction from their studies, others feel that they serve as an effective counterbalance to the purely technical side of a college education, as well as being a means by which we, as individuals, are able to develop close and meaningful relationships by working with a group.

After a discussion of the rationing of discrimination in the choosing of members, in which it was stated that the major emphasis should be placed on what each (the fraternity and the prospective member) could give each other, Dr. Benezet closed by challenging each fraternity (and each individual as a member of a fraternity) to re-examine its philosophy of selection—overcome the stereotyped picture of a "sorority girl" or a "fraternity man" and to dare to be different.

Carawan Demonstrates Musical Proficiency

By Terry Winograd

"Songs of Freedom in the American South" was the basic theme of a program presented Tuesday morning to an appreciative audience by Guy Carawan and his wife Candy. Mr. Carawan, who has a master's degree in sociology from UCLA, claims that he is not a true folk singer since his experience in this field is the result of his travels of the past ten years rather than representing a basic background. In spite of this claim, he exhibited great proficiency in both his singing and in playing the banjo, guitar, and recorder. The program began with several folk songs of the Southern mountains, including such old favorites as John Henry. The audience particularly enjoyed his rendition of several ballads by Woody Guthrie, whom he called the greatest folk poet of our time.

It was while doing research on southern folk songs that Mr. Carawan first became acquainted with the problems of civil rights in the South.

Since 1952 he has worked with the freedom riders and sit-in demonstrators, and for this he has been arrested several times. The final part of the program was devoted to the songs of these groups, several of which were composed by the Carawans. "They Went Wild Over Me," a satirical drink composed by Gandy was one of the audience's favorites, as was her husband's "Ballad of the Student Sit-Ins." These and other songs expressed the spirit behind the struggle for freedom in the South, while the philosophy of this movement was perhaps best seen in the final hymn which the students sang along with the Carawans—"We Shall Overcome."

Young Democrats

Twenty-seven grim, determined Young Democrats of Colorado College spent the greater part of November 6th in a fruitless effort to enlighten the people of El Paso County and Colorado.

Although Colorado failed to follow the progressive pattern seen elsewhere throughout the United States, the Young Democrats have resolved to continue their fight in hopes of victory in 1964. All YD's are to be thanked for their efforts, in particular Sponsor, Paul Bechtel, President, Harris Sherman; Vice-President, Sally Twaddle; and Secretary, Suzanne Armstrong.

COMMITTEES: AN AGONIZING RE-APPRAISAL

To those of you who stay out of your student government because you believe the committee system is just an excuse for inaction, let me cite an example to prove that a committee, properly led and directed, can be a great force for good.

Last week the Student Council met at the Duluth College of Veterinary Medicine and Belles Lettres to discuss purchasing a new dorm for the students union. It was, I assure you, a desperate problem because Sherwin K. Sigafos, junior of the students union, threatened flatly to quit unless a new dorm was installed immediately. "I'm sick and tired of napping that dirty old floor," said Mr. Sigafos, sobbing convulsively. (Mr. Sigafos, once a jolly outgoing sort, has been crying almost steadily since the recent death of his pet wart hog who had been his constant companion for 22 years. Actually, Mr. Sigafos is much better off without the wart hog, who tunked him viciously at least once a day, but a companionship of 22 years is, I suppose, not lightly relinquished. The college tried to give Mr. Sigafos a new wart hog—a frisky little fellow with floppy ears and a waggly tail—but Mr. Sigafos only turned his back and cried the harder.)

But I digress. The Student Council met, discussed the dorm for eight or ten hours, and then referred it to a committee. There were some who scoffed then and said nothing would ever be heard of the dorm again, but they reckoned without Invictus Millstone.

Invictus Millstone, chairman of the dorm committee, was a man of action—little and lean and keen and, naturally, a smoker of Marlboro Cigarettes. Why do I say "naturally"? Because, dear friends, active men and women don't have time to brood and bumble about their cigarettes. They need to be certain. They must have perfect confidence that each time they light up they will get the same gratifying flavor, the same Selectate filter, the same soft soft-pack, the same flip-top box. In brief, dear friends, they need to be sure it's Marlboro—for if ever a smoke was true and trusty, it's Marlboro. Get some soon. Get matches too, because true and trusty though Marlboros are, your pleasure will be somewhat limited unless you light them.

Well sir, Invictus Millstone chaired his dorm committee with such vigor and dispatch that when the Student Council met only one week later, he was able to rise and deliver the following recommendations:

1. That the college build new schools of botany, hydraulic engineering, tropical medicine, Indo-Germanic languages, and millinery.
2. That the college drop football, put a roof on the stadium, and turn it into a low-cost housing project for married students.
3. That the college raise faculty salaries by $5000 per year across the board.
4. That the college secede from the United States.
5. That the question of a dorm for the students union be referred to a subcommittee.

So let us hear no more defeatist talk about the committee system. It can be made to work!

Gibbs School Offers Senior Scholarships

Two national scholarships for college senior girls are offered for 1963-1964 by the Katharine Gibbs School. These awards were established in 1935 as a memorial to Mrs. Katharine M. Gibbs, founder and first president of the school.

Each scholarship consists of full tuition ($935) for the secretarial training course, plus an additional cash award of $500, totaling $1,435. The winners may select any one of the four Gibbs schools for their training—Boston, New York, Montclair, or Providence.

Winners are chosen by the Scholarship Committee on the basis of college academic record, personal and character qualifications, financial need, and potentialities for success in business. Each college or university may recommend two candidates, and each candidate must have this official endorsement. Students who may be interested in competing for one of these Katharine Gibbs awards may obtain full information from Katharine Gibbs School, 230 Park Avenue, New York 17, N.Y.

Variety Show Dubbed Success; Directors Merit Congratulations

By David Greenberg

The annual Colorado College Variety Show played to a packed and enthusiastic audience, whose final applause left no doubt as to why it has become a Colorado College tradition. While the show was far too long, over three hours, and the quality of the individual acts varied greatly, no one could help being impressed by the spirit of all performers, in spite of their deficiencies.

The show opened with the Jazz Septet, who played arrangements of a couple of lighter jazz numbers. The group played well, in particular the rhythm section whose originality and taste lent a professional gloss to the group. The soloing of saxophonist Frank Weible, who did the arrangements, was also very effective.

The other jazz group on the program, the B. J. Young Combo, was somewhat limited by time. They did, however, play some good, hard jazz, punctuated by B. J. Young's metronomic left foot.

Folk singers were, as always, very popular; of particular note were the Graces, back for their third show, and the Couriers. The Couriers are a new group and judging by the performance, should have no trouble in finding a receptive audience. Their lively music and the obvious enjoyment they derived from it, was very pleasing to the audience, who gave them a well-deserved hand.

Barbara Cooley's performance of Chopin's scherzo was certainly the highlight of the more serious musical offerings. The Scherzo is a long and technically difficult piano piece which Miss Cooley played well, if at times a trifle too harshly in some of the more intricate passages. In toto, her performance was certainly a success.

Larry Johnson's tasteful piano arrangement of the Leonard Bernstein tune, Maria, from "West Side Story" was also a successful execution of a difficult task; namely, to do something original with this much-played and much-arranged tune.

Malegna, played by Judy Hooker and Kathy Maes on duopianos seemed to be the audience's favorite of the other musical numbers. Afterwards, Miss Maes, with some exceptionally slick and rhythmic backing off-stage, sang a spirited rendition of "I'm Always True to You Darling in My Fashion."

There were, unfortunately, two numbers on the program which this reviewer found lacking in taste and propriety. Andrea Miller's dancing of Swingopation was a poorly executed attempt at imitating some of the chorus tap-dancing routines, prevalent in many Broadway shows and certain nightclub acts. If Miss Miller wants to tap-dance, let her be more sedate about it, at least until she becomes a good deal more proficient.

Colleen Conklin, who comes from Hawaii, had an excellent opportunity to demonstrate the grace and natural rhythm found in the Hula dances of her native state. Instead, she chose to subject the audience to two commercial dances—one of which was downright vulgar—the other completely unauthentic. The Hula can be an extremely beautiful dance form, but not when vulgarly commercialized.

The program closed with what was certainly the highlight of all the dance numbers, Steam Heat. A clever and lively interpretation of the old standby, it was a nice way to close the entertainment.

Throughout the show, masters of ceremonies Jerry Agnew and Diane Cox provided sure and helpful introductions to all the acts, which were neither too cute nor too somber.

Congratulations are certainly in order to directors Woodson Tyree, Boots Stockton, Mike Irsfeld, and Don Bradbury, for having put together an evening of enjoyable entertainment.

Miss Susan Sedgley has been announced the winner of the 1963 Symposium Symbol contest. Miss Sedgley's black and white symbol was one of sixteen entries. It reflects the Symposium title, "The Contemporary Arts and the Citizen," very well and should be an attractive addition to the announcement pieces in the weeks ahead.

Miss Sedgley will receive a prize of fifteen dollars for her winning entry.

United Fund Donations Increase 50 Per Cent

Colorado College students, faculty, staff and administrators have contributed $6,044 to the current Pikes Peak United Fund Drive.

This is an increase of nearly 50 per cent over last year's total contribution of $4,131.

Professor Paul M. Jones of the department of economics and business administration said $960 came from student contributions, and the remainder from employees of the college. This was an increase of $100 in student contributions.

Professor Jones, who was in charge of the campus drive, said most employee contributions were made through payroll deductions.

Student contributions are proceeds from the annual variety show, and the all-student auction held in May.

Kennedy Family Dominating Politics and Gov't Positions

The Pecuniary Aspect of Kennedyism

By Robert Williams

With the recent election of Edward (Ted) Kennedy as senator from Massachusetts, the issue of a Kennedy "dynasty" once again been brought into prominence. Not since the beginning of the nineteenth century and the Adams family, when any one family dominated the national political picture much as the Kennedys do today.

As the political leader of the Kennedy clan, the President assumed a very hypocritical position with regard to his immediate relatives' occupancy of high government positions. In choosing his cabinet, President Kennedy picked out and selected in most cases the most competent and ablest men in the country to be his closest advisors. The result was outstanding individuals as MacNamara, Dillon, and others. The one exception to the rule was the appointment of his nephew, Bobby Kennedy, as Attorney General. Unquestionably, Bobby Kennedy was not the best man for the job, yet he received it. Recently the President lent support (out of the public eye) to the candidacy of his youngest brother, Ted, who is no doubt the most unequalled person to successfully seek the office of United States Senator in the last decade. By providing financial and advisors, the President insured the victory of the Kennedy family.

One might ask why the President would face concerning his family prominent government positions. The answer lies in Joseph P. Kennedy Sr., the father of the President, the Attorney General, and the Senator-Elect. It has been his philosophy that it is for one and one for all. It is a principle which he has emphatically imposed on his family, and they in turn have supported it. It was against their better judgment at times. In return for support and co-operation for their father, the Kennedy children have been so generously monetarily rewarded by their father that they have been able to buy any position that they wanted. When they to the "buying" of an election, I mean that no member of the Kennedy family could have been victorious in an election without colossal amounts of family money that have been invested.

It is not for me to judge whether the Kennedy principle is good or bad, but it is merely to observe that this is a new and unique tactic of the Kennedy family in seeking the prestige and power of political positions. It is interesting to note that although the Kennedys have been able to win political offices that they desired, money alone cannot ensure success in politics. This has been particularly evident during the last year when both Congress and the economy (two factors the Kennedys thought to be within their control) have failed to respond to the Kennedys' every desire. Evidently they have foiled the President.

Editor's Note —

In a review of Karl Wolfram's "The Kennedy Dynasty" (in the November 1961 issue of the "Colorado College Tiger") the paragraph should be changed to read: "also the word Eisenbach should be changed to read Eichen-

Dr. Mason Defines Joyce's Categories

A Colorado College scholar has defined five categories which were held to be the requirements for a perfect work of art by the expatriate Irish writer James Joyce.

These five categories are, according to Dr. Ellsworth G. Mason, librarian and lecturer in English: "It should be a comedy. It should be concerned with character, rather than narrative. It should work with material drawn from the artist's experience with life around him. It should contain in the author's emotions de-personalized. It should be written with conscious artistry."

Dr. Mason's definitions are contained in an article called "Joyce's Categories." The article was one of the several in a casebook on Joyce called "Portrait of an Artist," published by The Odyssey Press, Inc., of New York. It originally appeared in the summer of 1953 issue of "Sewanee Review."

"These categories of art which Joyce defined for himself at an early age thus can be described as the result of the attempt of a very cocky young man to establish the extreme limits of his ambition," Dr. Mason said.

Assemblies Committee

On Tuesday, November 20, at 11:00 in Perkins, the Assemblies Committee will present Rabbi Albert A. Gordon, who will speak on "Travels in Israel."

INTRAMURALS

The Sigma Chi pulled down the 1962 intramural touch football crown with a 25-2 victory over the previously unbeaten Phi Deltas in a game played November 8.

The Sigma Chi attack was double-barreled, hitting the Phi Deltas as hard on the ground as in the air, with the result that the Phi Deltas were unable to get their attack moving. Phi Delt quarterback, Jeff Sauer, was caught many a time behind the line of scrimmage without having a chance to maneuver.

The Phi Gamma Deltas were a little more fortunate than the Phi Deltas, in that they gained a forfeit over the Zetas.

The Kappa Sigmas overwhelmed the Betas with an all-around attack and went on to defeat them 20-6. This set the stage for a play-off game between the Phi Deltas and the Kappa Sigmas to determine second and third place for the season.

Tigers Outplay Plainsmen, 6-6

The Colorado College Tigers played their most impressive statistical game of the season last Saturday but managed only a 6-6 deadlock with Nebraska Wesleyan at Lincoln, Nebraska. CC tallied twelve first downs on 117 yards rushing and 204 yards passing. The Plainsmen were able to muster only two first downs and 67 yards on the ground. The Tiger defense was so outstanding that NWU didn't pick up its first down until only 2:46 remained in the third period.

Wesleyan's only TD came in the third period when Ron Nanner scooped up a Bengal fumble and rammed into the end zone with 43 seconds gone in the second half. Jerry Hecox's kick for the extra point bit the left upright and bounced away.

Colorado College came thundering back in the fourth period when the Black and Gold marched 80 yards to tally with a thirty-six yard pass from freshman quarterback Milt Franke to Cliff Rouse finding its mark. Steve Sabol's attempted extra point kick was wide to the right and the final score read CC 6, NWU 6.

Laurence Named Frosh Ice Coach

Normand Laurence, a 24-year-old senior and a veteran of the 1961-62 hockey team, has been appointed freshman hockey coach for the year. The former varsity goaltender took over freshman coaching duties last week and already has his 14-man squad practicing three nights a week at the Broadmoor World Arena. Laurence has high hopes for his freshman Tiger Cubs before the year is out.

"We have only practiced a few times," he says, "but it's already obvious that they are willing to work and eager to learn. We might lack experience, but showing the spirit these boys do in working together as they are, they should make an excellent team before Christmas."

The freshman season probably will not start until after the holidays, although Laurence hopes to match his freshmen in games against the Denver University freshmen before the year is out, and plans to take them on a road trip to Minnesota, where they will play the junior squad from Minnesota-Duluth and the MacAllister U. team. However, his squad will face the CC varsity in a freshmen benefit game on Nov. 24 at the Broadmoor World Arena.

Laurence was the leading goaltender on last year's Tiger ice varsity, playing in over 50 per cent of the games. He is sidelined this season because of an age limit rule in the Western Collegiate Hockey Association regulations. However, he brings to the freshman squad two years of varsity experience and a year of freshman hockey.

31 Players Turn Out, Brighten Ice Picture

On Thursday, November 1, 1962, thirty-one CC ice stalwarts laced their skates for the opening practice session of the '62 hockey season. Hockey coach Tony Frasca had been putting his potential ice squad through drills on Washburn Field two weeks before official practice had begun.

Among Coach Frasca's immediate problems was not that of a lack of a team. Fourteen seniors, 5 Juniors and 5 sophomores will be returning to the ice. However, Coach Frasca's problem consists of an over-abundance of freshman applicants. "They are all just about equal in ability," said Frasca, "and it's tough to choose one over the other."

Aside from reducing the number of potential hockey players, Coach Frasca believes that the overall future of CC hockey is bright. With a week of conditioning behind them, they appear to be unified, talented and experienced enough to present a much improved club.

The only hint of gloom which hung over the practice period was that big Bill Dixon, CC's first line center, received a foot injury. It was later revealed that the injury was not a serious one and Dixon will be out only for three weeks.

The CC Tigers open their season against McMaster's University on November 28, at the Broadmoor World Arena.

First Half Scoring Brings Soccer Win

On Sunday this week CC soccer fans saw one of the most brilliant displays of the game ever performed at the Washburn Field. It was a fast and thrilling game played between our Tigers and the Colorado School of Mines—the Ore-diggers.

Five minutes after the resumption of the game, the young Tigers settled down to real constructive play and registered their first goal through Abi, who played left inner. It was the result of a perfect pass from Sol, the center forward. Immediately our soccer star from Holland, Gerald, registered the second goal. Before the end of the first half of the game the score was 6-0 in favor of the CC Tigers. "Va" for Laos, Sol and Abi helped to increase the score to 6.

The second half of the game wasn't as exciting as the first one. One of the reasons was that our first line players had to give a chance to many of the inexperienced players at clawing the Ore-diggers.

No scores were added during the second half of the game, but the beautiful passes and positional play remained till the very end. The final score was 6-1 in our favor.

I would like to make special mention of the goal keeper, Steve Prough, for his excellent performance. This is true of all the first team guys: John Hertzel, Va, Sol, Gerald, Abi, Tony, Rosy, Ted, Mike, and Rudolf.

Slocum Intramural

There remains but one game left on a long but worthwhile schedule. First North found it rough in battling game Third South to 6-6 tie, while Second North, by Fourth North. Second West finished their schedule by trailing Fourth West 28-6 in fine effort. Next day Second West turned to battle a tough Phi North to a 12-6 win. On a catch by Brad Second North, Jaramillo and a run by Jaramillo the maroons barely managed to stave off a surging blue aggregate.

Third West got by Third North to end its season, while T South, led by Bob Bohac quarterbacked the golds to a 22-10 victory over Fourth North. The game of the week, however, was between Second South, front runner in league and the ever despoiled Socratic "7." Second South beat scoring on a fine kickoff return by Craig Welch but failed to win the point after. In ordinary fashion the Socratic "7," showing its wisdom and patience due to the mellowing of time can overcome adversity, bounced back to tie the score at 6-6, only to fail (not weakly) to make the crucial play after. The remainder of the game involved one of the finest defensive games thus far.

To end its season, First West slipped by Second North 6-0 formed a pass from John Peyton to Going, and the next day returned to get by Fourth West. The Socratic "7," with one more game to play against Third South, romped past First North, 18-8, assured passes from Dr. Hochman to that of Fred and two more tallies on program passes to Dr. Peterson. First Nas a mustered its only score on a paired from Bob James to John Russell.

CC Students View Thoughts On Importance of Symposium

By Bruce Colvin and Judy Dickieson

A great deal of talk in the last few weeks has concerned the nature of the Symposium, to be held the week beginning January 13, 1963. This week and the next, practically the last before the end of the first semester, are of tremendous importance in reference to their bearing upon Symposium week; these are the days in which we must ask ourselves as individuals what meaning this year's subject, the contemporary arts, holds for us.

From its earliest stages of planning, Symposium has been viewed through motivating forces to be placed first with the benefit and participation of the student body as a whole. Dr. Sondermann, as the inexhaustible head of the Symposium Steering Committee, has assured through his leadership to that democracy in assembling the program would prevail. The result of a week scheduled with events is enough in subject matter to engage anyone on campus, yet exhibiting overall unity that marks it as a major reflection of the part played by the arts in modern society. The gap between the individual and his public has lengthened over the past few decades; the Symposium is directed toward the public, the citizen, and the college student, in an effort to bring about a greater understanding of the arts.

Because student opinion is so important, ideas heard from the student body should be mirrored in an article such as this. The high quality of the Symposium participants is now rather widely recognized on campus. Students have realized that this is an opportunity to learn more about an area they are able to touch upon in their courses of study at CC. One student has expressed her interest in hearing Abraham Kaplan, who feels could tie all phases of the arts together in the course of his lectures. Other students are anxious to hear the thoughts of other Symposium participants. In short, many people have found that this year's topic has some meaning for them. Barbara Kozy, who is particularly interested in the musical aspects of the Symposium, feels that it will present an unprecedented opportunity to examine the paths of modern music, which she feels is important to everyone because music is an integral part of the world, in that it is present in all societies.

Stephanie Boyer finds importance in the Symposium in the fact that it will give students a chance to know for themselves the expression in the work of the men who will participate, and that this experience will be something which cannot gain through textbooks alone. She has added that the student's interaction with the men of the arts, who are often far removed from the public, will be greatly enriching, and that this community learning process could serve to promote a closer feeling between the student-teacher relationship; however, all of this, she expresses, will be possible only if the students take advantage of the presence of the Symposium participants, and express their own thoughts and questions.

A complaint heard rather often concerning the specific topic of this year's Symposium has involved just what benefit might be derived from an event of this sort, already granted that the assemblage of participants is first rate. More bluntly stated, what is the Symposium going to prove?

Several ideas on the value of this year's topic have been forwarded, among them, Myles Hopper: "The importance of the Symposium rests in the fact that at this time of the year we have an opportunity to spend a considerable amount of time on one attention. I do not feel that the importance lies in the particular men who will be here, nor in the subject matter, but in the fact that this is an attempt to fully examine one aspect of our life."

Abiodun Afonja feels that this year's topic is of particular importance because art is an expression of life; through a greater understanding of art, he believes that man can better know himself and further grasp the beauty around him. The fine arts have meaning to him, because he sees in them the universal values and possibilities that he also finds in science. To him, the arts are a language through which man can speak, and are therefore extremely rewarding to understand.

CC Sponsors Speech Tourney

More than 200 students from 40 high schools throughout Colorado are scheduled to compete in the 15th annual Colorado College Invitational High School Forensics Tournament which will include three rounds of debates and three individual events. Individual events are poetry reading, radio speaking and dramatic reading.

Sponsoring the annual event are the Colorado College debate club and the speech department. The day-long tourney gets under way at 9 a.m. tomorrow.

The twelve-member college debate club has helped organize the tournament. Members of the speech classes will serve as judges in all competitions.

Colorado College will present a trophy to the winning debate team and certificates to the top three winners in all events. Duplicate certificates will be sent to the high school represented by the event winners.

Serving as tournament director this year is Robin Rudolf of the college history department.

Professor Woodson Tyree of the speech department will be in charge of individual events and Professor J. Alan Johnson of the economics and business administration department will be in charge of debate competition.

Kramer Directs CC Racing Club

Motorists might glare in disgust at the weekend's snow, but a group of Colorado College students yelled with joy when the flakes came pouring down.

In fact, with the first snow there was a sudden flurry of activity on the CC campus as a recently formed Colorado College ski team prepared to take advantage of their first opportunity for unit practice.

Organized by the students themselves under the title of the Colorado College Racing Club and directed by Prof. Fritz Kramer, a talented and avid skier, the team plans to compete in many of the 29 ski meets held in the Rocky Mountains this winter.

The racing club recently became a member of the Southern Rocky Mountain Ski Association, which officially entitles them to compete in ski-race events. Although their actual schedule still is in the air, the club will field a team of five or six top skiers. The new club stands an excellent chance of making a top showing in area ski meets.

Even before the first snowfall in the Pikes Peak region, the CC Racing Club was a busy outfit. About 20 men (the club is divided into men's and women's divisions) turned out for pre-season conditioning. This took the form of dry land practice sessions, including wind sprints, dashes and calisthenics.

With Colorado's famous powder snow dropping from the heavens, their practice will turn to the ski slopes. If the schedule permits they plan to turn out at Ski Broadmoor as a unit and travel in a group to ski slopes further away during the weekends.

The Racing Club activities are under the direction of Professor Kramer, who says, "I'm an advisor, not a coach."

However, if the Austrian-born associate professor of geography at the independent college of arts and sciences isn't a coach—certainly could be. And his advice will go a long way toward shaving seconds from the club's racing time.

Born in Vienna, and skiing from the age of seven—"I started late," the unable professor says—Kramer has packed most ski experience under his parka than most people ever will. While working for degrees he taught skiing at Stowe, Vt., when it was little more than a bump on the New England landscape. Now it is one of the largest ski centers in the East.

Kramer also taught the art of the low boards at Stevens Pass, Wash., while doing undergraduate work at the University of Washington. Later he spent four years teaching geography at the University of Nevada and four years teaching skiing at the Reno Ski Bowl. Kramer also taught skiing on the famous Sun Valley, Idaho, slopes.

It is no stranger to Colorado. Entering the service in 1942, he was a member of the 10th Mountain Division and stationed at Camp Hale and Aspen through the winters of 1942-43. In his spare time, following his army career, he was a registered member of the National Ski Patrol, retiring two years ago after 21 years of ski patrol service.

Choir Presents Concert Sunday

By John Giannes

On Sunday, December 2, at 4:00 p.m., in Shove Chapel, the Colorado College Christmas Choir will present a concert of unusual sophistication and interest. The program will be dominated by a major work by Michael Praetorius and a short cantata by J. S. Bach. The choir will also sing two motets by Francis Poulenc, the 20th century French composer. These are difficult pieces of great musical intensity which contain some unusual rhythmic and chordal progressions. In contrast to these modern works, Sweet Was the Song the Virgin Sang, a simple and very beautiful old English carole will be the other offering on the program.

The Bach cantata to be performed will be sung in English and is entitled Unto the World This Happy Morn. This is Cantata No. 122 by Johann Sebastian Bach and was written for choir and soloists, accompanied by harpsichord and orchestra. The soloists will be: Genevieve Vaughn and Becky Stoner, sopranos; Jean Stoner, alto; George Carrique, tenor, and Ben Lyon, baritone. Solo instruments will be played by Anne Perry, harpsichord, and Richard Maag, cello. Of particular note is the baritone solo, which is a lengthy piece of unusual difficulty and beauty. The work ends on a magnificent choral song by the entire choir, this year of over 100 voices.

Michael Praetorius is an Italian composer of the early Baroque period whose music is just now becoming widely performed in this country. The Canticum Trium Puerorum, which the choir shall perform, was written in 1607 and is a hymn praising the creation and harmony of the universe. This will be one of the first performances of this work in this country. It is written for large double choir, small choir, organ, brass, and strings. The main body of the hymn is written for small choir with a refrain for the large double choir and instruments. This pattern is repeated through seven verses, each gaining in intensity until the piece ends on the great refrain with the entire ensemble at full volume. This will be the first time the choir has used a brass choir. It should add a great deal of excitement to the music and help to make this a thrilling musical experience for both the performers and the audience.

This concert, which is free and open to the public, will be presented only once this year and promises to be of greater ambition and magnitude than any ever before presented by the choir.

RESIDENTS OF SLOCUM HALL
Be sure to get a date and come to the dinner-dance in Taylor Dining Hall, Saturday evening at 5:30. The food is free, the dancing is free, and there will be free transportation to the hockey game with McMasters University. You can't find a better evening's entertainment!

A.I.D. Hires Students During Summer Months

Each year the Agency for International Development (A.I.D.) hires a number of young college students for the summer months. The number varies and is prompted by the agencies particular needs and available funds. No examination is required; preference is given to seniors and graduate students. Usually the agency looks for students with majors in economics, political science, public administration, and sometimes business administration. Students are hired at the GS-7 level or below (ranging from $4,110 per year to $5,640 per year, prorated on a monthly basis).

Students who are interested in applying should submit an Application for Federal Employment (Standard Form No. 57) to the AID sometime during the first of the year, but no later than the middle of February. It is suggested that an applicant accompany this form with a letter stating why he wants to work for A.I.D. or why he thinks A.I.D. would be interested in him. Selections are made from among the applications based on the requirements of the various jobs.

For more detailed information, please see Dr. Sondermann, Peabody 101.

E. G. Mason Named To Library Board

Colorado College Librarian Ellsworth C. Mason has been named to a five-man editorial board to direct a current college level book selection service for the Association of College and Research Libraries.

Mason and the four others appointed to the board will serve five year terms. They will advise the editor and be responsible for major editorial, management, and budgetary policy.

Financed through a $140,000 Ford Foundation grant, the service will issue a list of books every two weeks. Each of the books will be reviewed and their suitability for book budgets of varying sizes will be indicated.

The new service "is the most important bibliographical project ever launched by the Association of College and Research Libraries, the professional organization for libraries in colleges and universities," a spokesman said.

Serving with Mason on the board will be Amherst College Librarian Newton F. McKoon, Carleton College Librarian James L. Richards, Michigan University Associate Librarian Robert H. Muller, and L. M. Weins of the H. W. Wilson Company.

Mason recently was elected chairman of the newly organized Colorado Council for Library Development. The council, composed of representatives of library organizations and interested private citizens, will advise the State Library Department and State Education Department about programs for extending Colorado's library resources.

Foreseeing that at least one vacancy on the executive council will occur at the beginning of second semester, President Power has requested that the election committee set up dates for petitions and elections to fill said vacancies.

A pep rally is being planned for tomorrow afternoon due to the fact that three athletic contests, football, basketball, and hockey will occur. The rally is scheduled for one half hour before the football game.

The social co-ordinating committee met and had their pictures taken at noon Thursday.

Discussion of the college Standard, formulated by the Student Policy Committee, occupied the major portion of the meeting. As presented it reads, "Membership in the Colorado College community is a privilege, not a right. An atmosphere of freedom with responsibility is created through the recognition of a standard of conduct which extends to all areas of college life. It is expected that integrity and common sense will guide the actions of each member of the community, and that he will show both within and without the college respect for all aspects of morality including order, personal honor, and the rights of others." According to Mr. Power, this standard is A) a central reference point and a departure point and B) something for the various judicial bodies to refer to. There was considerable debate as to the merits of such a standard, and as the motion to approve it was tabled, the debate will be continued at next week's meeting.

The Student Guide Service constitution was approved. And as a result of ASCC's interlude with Dr. Kutsche, a Community Service Committee has been formed.

Rastall Center Board's (always enlightening) report was presented by its eminent chairman who announced that bowling star, Norm Nichols would be on hand Tuesday, November 27 to demonstrate techniques and instruct beginners. While on this subject Mr. Meis informed the council that a trophy for the as yet dateless bowling prowess contest between Rastall Center Board and ASCC has been purchased. In summing up Rastall's Thanksgiving activities, one might say that bridge was big, but Brigitte was bigger.

The ad hoc Symposium committee is now classifying its information as "Top Secret" (formerly it was just "Confidential"). The BIG NEWS will be disclosed at a (choko) press conference Monday, December 3. Movies will be taken, coffee will be served, and maybe we'll find out what's coming off.

The sophomore commissioners and Va starred on "Petitcoat Party," a rousing TV show. When not occupied with personal appearances, they are busy getting the bugs out of the Winter Carnival. There will be a meeting next week.

President Power announced after the meeting that a schedule of public meetings on the topic of the standard will be announced Monday. "Also," he said, "the central question of ASCC's power and responsibility, which is directly connected with the issue at hand, will be aired."

From the Chair

By MAX POWER—President ASCC

The Student Policy Committee Monday introduced to the ASCC Executive Council the proposed Colorado College Standard of Conduct. The wording of the standard can be found elsewhere in today's TIGER. Suffice it to say here that the standard is designed to serve a twofold purpose.

First, it will remind members of the Colorado College community, particularly prospective students and personnel, that they have a responsibility to the college community. Granted, most students and others realize this, but the fact is really never articulated. If we are to enforce this responsibility on the part of the community, it is only fair that this fact be expressly stated to each individual in the community.

Second, the standard is designed to provide guidelines for the various judicial bodies which must determine when students or other members of the college community have not fulfilled their responsibility to the community. Accusers and judges will have a common standard to which to refer their arguments and decisions.

This standard is not an attempt to define conduct specifically. Only through interpretation and precedent can terms such as morality, rights of others, personal honor and the like take on specific meanings for specific cases. Yet these terms do provide, in black and white, the concepts which are to be applied.

The adoption of such a standard follows naturally from the new judicial procedures added to the ASCC constitution last year. If ASCC is to legislate, as the proponents of the judicial amendments advocated—reflecting the student body's desire to have a large voice in setting its own standards of conduct—this is the place to start.

Once satisfaction with the detail of the standard is reached, it will be up to your representatives to accept the responsibility to vote as they think best, considering your views. It will be through this kind of action that student government will gain meaning, and that all of us as students will gain more influence in setting the rules governing the college community.

We hope that a series of meetings and debates will set the issues involved clearly before you, and allow you to express your views on the standard. Then ASCC can assume its new function, its new responsibility as a representative governing body.

Piedscalz Leads Religious Seminar

Beginning on January 22 and continuing for eight weeks, Professor Nicholas Piedscalz will lead a non-credit study seminar on "Existentialism and Religious Belief." The group will meet on Tuesday evenings from 8:30 to 9:30 p.m. in the Shove Chapel study room. Students interested in joining the seminar should contact Professor Piedscalz at his office, 307 JH. The Open Door Questions on Nuclear Power

By Assistant Director of Admissions Larimore Nicholl

I wish to present a series of basic, puzzling contradictions in question form, which you will be able to quickly and comfortably label "pacifist." I submit that the questions are no less puzzling and contradictory and no less worth serious consideration despite the tags you might wish to hang on them.

1. Can anyone keep a straight face while listening to the argument that the waging of nuclear warfare can preserve our way of life? (or any other way of life?) Does anyone feel safe from attack? Is there any true defense worth talking about, or is there simply offensive destruction almost without limit?

2. How does it follow that our government exercises force (in the form of military draft) to protect our freedom from force? And isn't it true that our nation employs a massive military establishment which can operate only under a dictatorial hierarchy of control in order to protect our freedom from dictatorship? And why is it that this country decorates and otherwise honors a man who kills or the battlefield persons he has never met and against whom he bears no personal grudge, and yet this same man can be imprisoned for life for killing only one person against whom he bears a serious and perhaps legitimate grudge?

3. How is it that religious people kill in order to protect their values which tell them not to kill?

4. Can the waging of nuclear war be defended under any generally-accepted standard of ethical behavior (or even unethical behavior) such as epicureanism, materialism, pragmatism, utilitarianism, assorted theological revelation, or any other? Can it even be defended in terms of greed or self-survival?

5. How can an institution of higher learning such as the US Air Force Academy (or other military academies) reconcile the teaching of the humanities, arts, the worth of human life and civilization while simultaneously teaching (and let's drop the euphemisms for once) the art of killing great masses of human beings in the most intelligent and efficient manner? Even more incriminating, how can an institution such as Colorado College and the other liberal arts colleges, generally considered even more committed to true and active altruism and humanitarianism reconcile this same paradox? Indeed, how can it be less great emphasis by requiring the science of killing as one of three particular courses demanded as a basic degree requirement selected from the entire curriculum?

6. How can this government and most others agree that a world-wide spread of pacifism would harm, regardless of whether many, relations of division of manpower and money into constructive enterprise, while these same governments simultaneously imprison and otherwise abuse the pacifists among their populations, regarding pacifists as threats against their national securities?

7. Why does this government point to the atrocities of other nations (no army of any nation is free of atrocity) and the imperialistic and bloody expansion of other nations while forgetting its own expansionism (no less bloody) it spread from a piece of colonial real estate on the Eastern Seaboard to straddle the continent with military bases in more than half the nations of the world, provoking wars with Spain, Nicaragua and others along the way?

8. How can a man voluntarily or involuntarily align himself with a massive and complex military national power or destruction and call his action "constructive?" Even if he concedes that a capacity for violence is inherent in all men, how can he fail to make a distinction between routine police control within a society against individual offenders and the gigantic military complexes frankly poised for genocide?

9. And why doesn't it provoke a wry smile when a military man describes himself as a navigator, intelligence expert, or missile development controller instead of describing himself as a part of today's young and intelligent aerospace team trained to kill? Is his responsibility for death any less great if he is a navigator?

Again, I submit that these questions are puzzling and contradictory. But they need answers, and they need them now. If and when you find yourself stumped by radio announcements ("Time on target is fifteen minutes, switch to Conelrad frequencies") and sirens, and you find yourself crouching in a cellar waiting for the ceiling to crush your rib-cage and compress you into a 250-foot-deep crater, if you are not turned into vapor instead, it is late. Too late for arm-chair political strategy, too late to join the Peace Corps or the American Friends Service Committee, too late to get into politics, too late to write your congressman, too late to support foreign aid and the United Nations and multi-lateral disarmament, too late to argue with the editor of the GAZETTE TELEGRAPH, even too late to hunt for the nearest supply of morphine, in case you are merely maimed. I wait for answers to these questions.

Student Finds Un-Named Plant

A Colorado College botany major thinks a blue-blossomed plant he discovered last summer near Mt. Rainier in Washington may never have been officially named.

If this is the case, it would be a significant event in the botany world where nearly everything that grows between the Atlantic and the Pacific has been properly classified and catalogued by a growing number of specialists.

David Wahlfeld of Edina, Minnesota, is spending his free time in the botany laboratory to identify the small plant.

Wahlfeld is identifying thirty-two plants he brought with him from the Mt. Rainier region of Washington where he spent the summer working with the U.S. Forestry Service.

Wahlfeld, who hopes to enter forestry work when he has completed his education, says the plant is not listed in Professor C. Leo Hitchcock's "Vascular Plants of the Pacific Northwest" or any other authoritative books on plants of the region.

The unidentified plant grows to a height of about five inches, has an average of three pairs of leaves and a long blue bloom at each pair of leaves.

Tuesday Assembly Discusses Conflicts Symposium Presents

By Terry Winograd

What are some of the basic conflicts which will be discussed during symposium week? This was the question answered for the students at the assembly Tuesday morning. After some introduction remarks by Dr. Sonderrmann, chairman of the Symposium Committee, representatives of several departments gave their opinions of the questions which will be discussed by what was termed a "visiting faculty."

Professor Reinitz told of a basic conflict in contemporary poetry. Some poets, as exemplified by T. S. Eliot, feel that poetry should present an experience rather than show the poet's emotion. It is not for the poet to attempt to reform society, but rather to place himself above it and observe human experience. Some selections from Eliot's "Waste Land" illustrated this point. Karl Shapiro will speak from a viewpoint in opposition to this detached objectivity in poetry.

He has written both criticisms of Eliot's position and original poetry expressing the opposite, humanistic feeling. Later, during the question period he defended this interpretation of Eliot's poetry against an opposing viewpoint expressed by a student and briefly explained some concepts of the modern novel. Some novelists portray society as it is while others show its weaknesses by dealing with the lower side of life. Phillip Roth is a writer of the first of these types and will speak on the contemporary author, his audience, and his product.

Dr. Albert Seay of the music department told of a more basic conflict in contemporary art—the relationship of the author to his audience. Some artists create for a small group of people who are capable of appreciating their work. Others state that the purpose of art is communication, and therefore it must have meaning for a larger audience. In the field of music we will hear proponents of both views. Milton Babbitt holds the former position and is a composer of mathematical music. Gunther Schuller, on the other hand, is an authority on the more popular field of jazz as well as being a composer in his own right.

The ideas of art critic Clement Greenberg were discussed by Dr. Arnest of the art department. He emphasized that Greenberg can speak on many aspects of contemporary life in addition to the visual arts. Less was said about the ideas of Raymond Auger, the designer of the painting machine, but a full account of his scientific and literary background was given.

The last speaker was Dr. McMillen of the drama department. He explained the role of Frank Whiting as an interpreter of drama rather than a creator or performer. In the field of drama, there is also a dispute between the more extreme elements and the conservatives. Some dramatists show their antagonism towards society and its problems, while others state that these problems are necessary for the continuation of society as we know it.

In conclusion, Dr. Sonderrmann expressed the hope that all Colorado College students will take advantage of this unique educational opportunity by reading the suggested material and participating in the many and varied activities of the 1963 Symposium.

HAPPY TALK

As we all know, conversation is terribly important on a date. When bulls in the conversation run longer than an hour or two, one's partner is inclined to grow legy—even sullen. But occasionally one finds it difficult to keep the talk going, especially when one is having a first date with one. What, then, does one do?

If one is wise, one follows the brilliant example of Harlow Thurlow.

Harlow Thurlow prepares. That is his simple secret. When Harlow is going to take out a new girl, he makes sure in advance that the conversation will not languish. Before the date, he goes to the library and reads all 24 volumes of the encyclopedia and transcribes their contents on his cuffs. Thus he makes sure that no matter what his date's interests are, he will have ample material to keep the conversation alive.

Take, for example, Harlow's first date with Priscilla de Gasser, a fine, strapping, blue-eyed broth of a girl, lavishly constructed and rosy as the dawn.

Harlow was, as always, prepared when he called for Priscilla, and, as always, he did not start to converse immediately. First he took her to dinner because, as everyone knows, it is useless to try to make conversation with an unfed codd. Her attention span is negligible. Also, her stomach rumbles so loud it is difficult to make yourself heard.

"Wash your Cuffs and be my Love!"

So he took her to a fine steak house where he stoked her with goblets of Black Angus and mounds of French fries and thickets of escarole and battalions of petit fours. Then, at last, dinner was over and the waiter brought two finger bowls.

"I hope you enjoyed your dinner, my dear," said Harlow, dipping into his finger bowl.

"Oh, it was grand-dandy!" said Priscilla. "Now let's go someplace for ribs."

"Later, perhaps," said Harlow. "But right now, I thought we might have a conversation."

"Oh, goody, goody, two-shoes!" cried Priscilla. "I been looking everywhere for a boy who can carry on an intelligent conversation."

"Your search is ended, madam," said Harlow, and pulled back his sleeves and looked at his cuffs to pick a liky topic to start the conversation.

"Oh, woe! Oh, luddack! Those cuffs on which Harlow had painstakingly transcribed so many facts—those cuffs on which he had noted such diverse and fascinating information—those cuffs, I say, were nothing now but a big, blue blur! For Harlow—poor Harlow!—splashing around in the finger bowl, had gotten his cuffs wet and the ink had run and not one word was legible! And Harlow—poor Harlow!—looked upon his cuffs and broke out in a night sweat and fell dumb.

"I must say," said Priscilla after several silent hours, "that you are a very dull fellow. I'm leaving."

With that she flounced away and poor Harlow was too crushed to protest. Sully he sat and sully lit a cigarette.

All of a sudden Priscilla came rushing back. "Was that," she asked, "a Marlboro you just lit?"

"Yes," said Harlow.

"Then you are not a dull fellow," she cried, and sprang into his lap. "You are bright! Anybody is bright to smoke such a perfect job of a cigarette as Marlboro which is just clock full of rummy flavor, which has a selectate filter which comes in a soft pack that is really soft, and a Flip-Top Box that really flips, and which can be bought wherever cigarettes are sold in all fifty states and Duluth . . . Harlow, tiger, wash your cuffs and be my love."

"Okay," said Harlow, and did, and was.

Cap and Gown Membership Comprised of Senior Women

By Ann Armstrong and Karen Bessenes

We would like to introduce Cap and Gown to you. This senior women's honorary society is composed of girls who are selected each year by the present members on the basis of service, scholarship and leadership in the Colorado College community. Cap and Gown was instituted on this campus four years ago in the possible expectation of applying to the National Mortar Board Society for membership as one of its local chapters.

The honorary members and advisors of this group are Miss Christine Moon, Miss Joan Shinn, Miss Lorena Berger, Mrs. Bernard Arnest and Mrs. Glenn Brooks. The Constitution of Cap and Gown provides for the selection of five to fifteen senior women. The active members this year are Ann Armstrong, Peigi Benham, Karen Bessenes, Julie Bohlke, Sece Boyce, Polly Franklin and Lani Markisen.

Although the group is interested in becoming affiliated with National Mortar Board, our main purpose is service to the college. Each month Cap and Gown invites several faculty members or members of the administration to join us in informal discussion during the evening meal. Among this year's service projects are arranging for hostesses for Sunday services at Shove Chapel, establishing a bulletin board with information of interest to senior women, a money making project, giving teas for sophomore and junior women of high academic standing and hostessing at the 1962 Symposium.

The members of Cap and Gown may be recognized by their black skirts and the original patch on their white blazers.

Elementary Teachers Taking Science Course

Thirty-one Pikes Peak elementary school teachers are spending their Saturday mornings working with Colorado College scientists in Olin Hall in a program designed to bring them to the forefront of current developments in major scientific fields.

They are now participating in the National Science Foundation In-Service Institute in General Science conducted at CC by Professor Richard G. Beidleman of the zoology department.

Saturday morning sessions are divided into classroom lectures, laboratory exercises, and field work for the teachers who represent 16 local elementary schools.

In addition to lectures on new developments in several major fields of science, the college professors demonstrate various methods for effectively presenting the material to elementary school pupils.

Dr. Beidleman said the course is designed:

--To provide elementary school teachers and supervisors of grades four through six with an up to date orientation in the scientific disciplines.

--To discuss ways in which scientific concepts and materials may be introduced into the elementary grades.

--To afford elementary school participants an opportunity to discuss science teaching problems with regional colleagues and college scientists.

In the one semester program the teachers study biology, meteorology, geology, astronomy, chemistry, and physics.

Award Offered by ALNA for Personal Book Collection

For the second year, the $1000 Amy Loveman National Award is being offered to a college senior who has collected an outstanding personal library. The award is sponsored by the Saturday Review and The Women's National Book Association.

Chairman of Campus Library Award Committees, after selecting a local winner, are asked to submit nominations for senior students for the national award. The deadline for nomination is April 30. The award will be made at the winner's commencement.

For the purposes of the Amy Loveman Award, a collection of not less than 35 books will be considered. The student must present an annotated bibliography of his present collection and provide comments on three relevant points: "How I would start building a home library, the next ten books I hope to add to my personal library and why, and my ideas for a complete home library.

Collections will be judged on the basis of intelligent interest, scope and imagination shown in creating the collection and knowledge of the books as revealed in the annotation. Collections of any type (excluding textbooks) are eligible whether centered in a subject or avocation, a single author or group of authors, or a general collection.

Inquiries regarding the 1963 award should be addressed to Amy Loveman National Award, Box 533, Times Square Post Office, New York 36, N.Y.

Alpha Phi: With Christmas in the air, the Alpha Phis are looking forward to their Christmas formal which will be held tonight at the Moors. Providing the music will be the Floyd Frame Band. Also, congratulations are in order for new president, Lynn Miller, and the other new officers.

Delta Gamma: Monday night the D.G.'s elected Biffie Bufum their new president. Other officers elected include Nancy Parker, first vice president; Traer Sunley, second vice president; Ellen Price, activities chairman; Judy Dykes, treasurer; Marla Bullock, secretary; Becky Dunbar, social chairman; Sue Caudill, scholarship chairman; and Sue Sommerville, rush chairman. Joan Schmitz is corresponding secretary, and Debbie West will be in charge of the new house.

Kappa Alpha Theta: The Thetas opened the Holiday season Sunday afternoon with a tree trimming party at the house. Monday night they held their annual Christmas party. It was a gala affair; refreshments were served, and the night was climaxed with the exchanging of gifts.

The Thetas have been looking forward to their winter formal which will be held jointly with the Alpha Phi tonight at the Moors.

Kappa Kappa Gamma: On coming back from Thanksgiving vacation, the Kappas found a busy but exciting week awaiting them. First on the agenda were the traditional Kappa-Faculty Christmas parties, held on Tuesday and Thursday nights. The parties were centered around a French theme and ended with the singing of traditional carols in both French and English. Tiny candy canes were given as favors.

The second important event planned by the Kappas is the annual Christmas formal. It will be held tomorrow night at the Pam Pam.

Phi Delta Theta: As work on their party room in the basement finally got under way last week, the Phi Deltas now look forward to having it finished by the first of the year. Plans include an unusual use of shingles on the walls, rheostated lighting, and a functionally designed corner, to round out the atmosphere of the room.

Friday night the Phis are having their annual Christmas dinner dance at the Colorado Springs Country Club.

Phi Gamma Delta: Despite the cloud of secrecy which has enveloped the activities of the Phi Gam house during the past semester, quite a lot has actually happened.

Gleeful new initiates are Larry Franks, Don Sprinkle, Carl Cabbiness, Tom Brindley, Jim Warden, and Rich Love. New officers are: Don Bradbury, president, and Gary Nelson, treasurer. Cadet Major Carl Cabbiness was recently named captain of this year's basketball team.

Tuesday November 20, the Figs and the Thetas held a party for Colorado Springs orphans.

Finally, two of the brothers would like to announce the formation of a new Falcon dealership.

Tiger Ice Squad Takes On Marlins

The Colorado College hockey squad takes on the McMaster Marlins from Hamilton, Ontario, Canada, tomorrow, December 1.

The Marlins sport a 25-3 record from last year and wound up as the Ontario Intercollegiate Athletic Association champs and winners of the Western Division of the Ontario-Quebec Athletic Association.

In the win department, CC has been a little lax, but according to Coach Tony Frasca, the Tigers are "offensively far stronger than we were last year. We may have a little trouble with defense—we're short on experience down ice—but I think we have the stuff to do the scoring with," Frasca said.

Game time is 8:15 p.m. at the Broadmoor World Arena. This is the only chance to see hockey before Christmas, so let's all get out and support the Tigers.

Cagers Drop Scrimmage To Fort Carson Squad

Coach Leon "Red" Eastlack's basketball five dropped a close 66 to 64 pre-season practice scrimmage contest to Fort Carson Army Base last Monday night at Cossitt Hall. The Tigers played a spirited game against a much taller Fort Carson squad.

CC was on top at the half 35 to 34 but the visitors stormed ahead in the closing minutes of the last half. This was a warm-up game for the Tigers who open their 1962-1963 basketball season this Saturday, December 1, against St. Joseph's on the Rio Grande at Cossitt Hall at 7:30 p.m.

CU Bowlers Revenge Earlier Loss to CC

On Sunday, November 25, before an enthusiastic crowd in the Rastall Games Area, the Colorado University Buffs returned the other end of a home and home engagement in much the same fashion as the CC keggers had done in the earlier contest at CU by defeating the Tiger bowlers 2670 pins to 2611.

The bowling of both teams was below par that was set in the earlier match but the CC team had a nine pin advantage going into the last game. The Tigers, however, lost their control somewhat and the Buffs coasted to a 59 pin victory. Colorado College did salvage the high series for the match with Bill Pelz coming through with a fine 573 series. Emmett Sullivan was high for CU with a 566 series.

The CC bowlers now have their eyes set on the rubber match which will take place between the two teams early next semester. The Tigers also have a match set with Pueblo Junior College before the semester adjourns.

CC Five Opens Year Against St. Joseph's

The CC basketball team opens its hoop guns against St. Joseph's College, Saturday at 7:30 p.m. in Cossitt Hall—and height is their only problem. At least four of the Dons tower at or above the 6 foot, 5 inch mark. They include a 6' 8" pivot, James Ogden, and three forwards, Calvin Powell, 6' 6"; Lee Andrew Thomas, 6' 5"; and Louis Gramillion, 6' 5". Against the St. Joseph's giants, CC's average height will be just a bit over six feet even.

On the other hand, Coach Eastlack said, "We have some pretty good shots, and overall, I think our aim is as good as it was in the past. We'll just have to do an extra rebounding job," Eastlack said.

Coach Eastlack hasn't settled definitely on his starting lineup, but he has a pretty good idea who will be first on the court. Carl Cabbiness will start as forward with either Steve Hildreth or Phil Hart at the other under-basket spot. Bob Heiny will be at center with the guards made up of a combination of either Gregg Smith, Bob Baker or Dave Herrington. Let's get out and support the team in what promises to be a very rewarding game.

Colorado College

CC Students, Faculty Important In Symposium

By Bruce Colvin

The program for Symposium is now complete, and the planning committees themselves may be astonished by the extremely wide scope offered by the event. The very nature of this year's Symposium seems to have made inevitable its own internal expansion, until the topic-nucleus has been further enriched by many distinguished local volunteer participants representing various phases of the arts.

The first day of Symposium Week will begin with a special worship service in Shove Chapel, titled "The Hungry Generation—A Conversation on Communications." The short play "Impromptu" by Ted Moss, author of the 1961 Pulitzer Prize play "All the Way Home," will be presented during the service, the director of the play will be Jack Booth, a professional actor and director concerned especially with contemporary drama. Mr. Booth is in Colorado at this time because he is writing a play for the one-hundredth anniversary of Congregational Churches here. Robert Caulderwood, who has been working in collaboration with Booth, will be joint director of music for the service with Donald Jenkins of the CC Department of Music. Caulderwood is a graduate in music of Occidental College. A speech choir will also be utilized, to be located in several places through the Chapel. Worship leaders will be Kenneth Burton and Nicholas Pielisalz, of the Colorado College faculty.

The folk music program will encompass several aspects of the art; in addition to the lecture and performance of the University of Colorado's John Greenway, it will feature Mrs. Valda Garner, Mr. R. L. Knight, and a folk singing group consisting of the Chatfields and the Graces. Valda Garner is a gospel singer frequently heard in churches in the Denver area, whose dark, powerful voice gained her an invitation to perform at the Seattle World's Fair. Mr. Knight, who now lives in Colorado Springs, is a professional banjoist and country-violinist. Knight is originally a Southerner, has appeared on various national country music programs, and has won the Colorado state fiddling contest. The folksinging of the Chatfields and the Graces has been extremely popular at CC, and the high quality of their performance needs little elaboration here. In summary, the folksinging program should be not only tremendously entertaining, but should give insight into several very important phases of folk music.

Two members of the Colorado College faculty, Max Lanner and Henry Margolin, will be presented in a concert of contemporary piano music by Carlton Garrow, of the CC Department of Music, and CU Professor-composer Cecil Effinger. This event will be interesting not only because of the actual performances by these two distinguished pianists, but also because both composers will be present to explain their works. In addition, Dr. Effinger will speak on the current position of Colorado composers.

The field of contemporary dance will be discussed and demonstrated by CC Professor of Dance, Norman Cornick, and his colleague, Esther Geoffrey. This discourse upon the relation of dance to communication and to principles of the fine arts in general should add a great deal to the overall concept of this year's Symposium topic. Another valuable view will be given by the conductor of the Colorado Springs Symphony Orchestra, Walter Eisenberg, in his talk: "The Magnificent Paradox: The Arts and the Artist in the Affluent Society."

A group of area writers will be present in discussions concerning problems in literary creativity and in reaching the public. Marshall Sprague of Colorado Springs will be one of the participants. As a feature writer for the New York Times, a reporter for the Paris Edition of the New York Herald Tribune, and as the author of numerous books, many of which are in Tutt Library, Sprague has achieved prominence as a writer. Miss Lenora Mattingly Weber, author of short stories appearing in, among others, McCall's magazine and Saturday Evening Post, will also take part in discussions on the writer. The third member of the group of area writers participating is Lillian de la Torre, Colorado Springs, who is the author of a number of novels, some of which are now on the Symposium shelf in Tutt Library.

The Jam session to be held during Symposium Week will center around a core of first rate professionals, headed by Johnny Smith. Musicians will include men from the Colorado Springs area as well as several Denver jazzmen whom guitarist Smith has invited. The event should prove to be informal, rich entertainment for anyone who attends, and at the same time an exciting session for those who are deeply interested in contemporary jazz.

A list of student participants would also be extensive. Student creativity will be shown through an art exhibit, music recitals, and poetry and prose readings. Sev-

Awards Presented At Dinner Dance

Amid a near overflow of athletic activity last Saturday, the Men's Residence Halls Association slipped in a very special dinner-dance and the response was terrific. Some eighty men from Slo-cum and Arthur House and their dates dined graciously in Taylor Hall. A candlelight buffet dinner was followed by an evening of dancing to the music of Chuck Gibson's orchestra. Guests of honor were Dr. and Mrs. Hochman and Dr. and Mrs. Reinitz.

Slocum Hall president, Dale Spall presented Don Oden who in turn presented the athletic and academic awards. The latter went to 2nd South for establishing the best overall academic record this semester. The football award went also to 2nd South, and the pushball award to 2nd West. Awards were also presented in golf, bowling, and cross-country. Second North edged out second South for the outstanding wing award by two tenths of a point.

As the TIGER passes into new hands next semester, there will occur certain changes in managerial as well as in editorial policy.

There will be an enforced deadline of 4 p.m. on Monday afternoon. Greek News, however, due to the fact that meetings are held on Monday nights, will be due by 10 a.m. Tuesday morning. It would be greatly appreciated if all articles—both staff and non-staff written—would be typed.

All those interested in working on the TIGER next semester please contact Harris Sherman, Dan Jaffe, or Caroline Creyke.

Kidner Resigns ASCC Position

Terry Kidner announced Monday that she will resign her post as ASCC Secretary at the end of this semester. Miss Kidner told the members of the ASCC Executive Council that she has met the requirements for graduation, and will not return to Colorado College for the Spring semester.

Miss Kidner, an English major from Alexandria, Virginia, was elected ASCC secretary in a runoff election last spring. Her duties as secretary included keeping minutes of ASCC Executive Council meetings, chairing the ASCC Communications Committee and assisting with the Executive Council's correspondence.

ASCC President Max Power regretfully acknowledged the resignation. "Terry has been a conscientious, tireless, wholly dependable secretary," he said. "She has given of her vitality and wit in directing our communications. We're going to miss Terry."

Power said that elections will be held to fill the vacancy created by Miss Kidner's resignation as soon as second semester begins. Candidates for the office of ASCC Secretary must present petitions signed by at least 50 members of the student body. Students may not sign more than one petition.

Candidates for secretary must, in addition, be members of the sophomore or junior classes, have completed at least 48 semester hours and have maintained at least a 2.00 grade average for the semester preceding the election.

Sophomore Commissioner Chuck White, chairman of the ASCC Election Committee, announced that candidates for the vacancy may begin circulating petitions on January 21, 1963. The petitions will be due Friday, January 25. Campaigning will begin Monday, January 28, and the election for ASCC Secretary will be held Tuesday, February 5.

Power announced that he would appoint Sue Hile, '64, to serve as ASCC Secretary until a successor to Miss Kidner is elected. The power to appoint an interim secretary is given the ASCC president by the constitution.

Miss Hile is secretary of Rastall Center Board, president of Bemis Hall, and Freshman Co-ordinator. "I know that Sue, who has been a frequent observer at ASCC meetings and a helper to Terry, will carry on the office very well," Power said.

Miss Hile has said that she will not seek election to the ASCC Secretary's chair.

CC Dancers Practicing For "Nutcracker Ballet"

At present, the Colorado College Dance Theater is busy practicing for the Christmas season presentation of the "Nutcracker Ballet." The ballet, based on the fairy tale by E. T. A. Hoffman, will be under the direction of Norman S. Cornick, assistant professor of dance at the college.

This presentation will mark the fourth performance of Tchaikovsky's famous ballet in Colorado Springs. In past years the performances have been so popular that the demand for tickets could not be filled.

New scenery and costumes will further enhance the ballet. Set designer is Larry Heller.

Tickets for the production which go on sale December 5, will be available at the main desk at Rastall Center, the Chinook Book Store, and the Wickerbill Gift Shop.

The Last Time Around

In this, the last issue of The Tiger before the Christmas vacation, the last Tiger of the semester, and also the last Tiger under the direction of the present editorial staff, I would like to wish the students and faculty of Colorado College a very merry holiday season.

I would also, at this time, like to give special thanks to all the members of the student body who have worked with me on the Tiger staff during the past semester. Recognition for work on a student newspaper too often goes only to the editor, and not to the real backbone of the paper—the reporters, typists, and layout personnel. But without these students, willing to give up part of their time for the rest of the college community, the Tiger, or any other student newspaper, would perish.

Finally, I would like to wish Dan Jaffe and Harris Sherman, the new editors of the Tiger, the best of luck. If the student body gives them as much co-operation as it has given me during my term of office, I am sure that each issue of the Tiger will be well worth reading. CEP, ret.

Students Plan Mexican Trip

March 23, 1963, the first day of spring vacation, will mark the beginning of a particularly special holiday for a number of Colorado College students. Having begun their trip to Mexico the day before, they will arrive in Juarez, Mexico, Saturday noon and will fly directly to Mexico City. During the first of three days in this picturesque city the students will visit the famous Floating Gardens of Xochimilco and the University of Mexico, and will attend a bullfight at the world's largest bullring, Plaza Mexico. An opportunity not had by many will be the chance to meet Sidney Franklin, the bullfighter from Brooklyn. The visitors will also see the Metropolitan Cathedral of Mexico and the National Palace with the celebrated Diego Rivera frescoes. Another morning will be spent visiting the ancient Pyramids of the Sun and Moon at San Juan Teotihuacan.

Three more days will be spent in the nearby towns, Guanajuato, San Miguel Allende, and Queretaro. Guanajuato, an old colonial city, is centered in a rich mining area and boasts many fine buildings. It was in this town that the struggle for Mexican independence was initiated. The students will see the artist colony at San Miguel Allende and will tour the town's famous Art Institute. In Queretaro, another colonial town, they will see native artisans creating jewelry from the semi-precious stones of the area.

Although not definite at this time, the group hopes to attend a Jal-lal game, several folk dances, and some outstanding restaurants. There will also be free evenings and free time on certain afternoons for unplanned recreation. Those interested in joining such an expedition should contact Miss Clayton. The eight day trip will cost two hundred dollars for air transportation, nine of eighteen meals, and all sight-seeing and hotel fees. A fifty dollar deposit will be required by February 1, 1963. Other requirements include a tourist card, a smallpox vaccination, and proof of United States citizenship. Those that do not speak Spanish will be glad to know that the trip is conducted in English.

Colorado residents make up more than half of the students receiving scholarship and financial assistance at CC. One hundred and seventy-seven Coloradoans are receiving scholarship, grants, and loans totaling $200,789.

Scholarships and financial assistance amounting to $354,084 were awarded to 323 students out of a full time undergraduate enrollment of 1,209.

One student out of four is receiving financial aid at CC. But Colorado students have the edge with aid going to 177 out of 428 state residents.

In terms of dollars and cents, Coloradoans receiving aid are averaging more than $1,000 each per year. This covers well over half of the total cost of tuition, board, and room and other expenses.

The total student aid program including scholarships, activity grants, loans, and jobs will amount to approximately $450,000 as additional awards and loans will be made before the close of the academic year.

Seventeen of the 41 Colorado freshmen awarded scholarships by the Boettcher Foundation of Denver are enrolled here, and 113 of the 371 freshmen enrolled are on at least partial scholarship.

Many students are recipients of scholarships from the Wharton Allen fund, the American Business Women's Association, the American Sanitary Products Company, the Alice Bemis Taylor Foundation, the General Henry H. Arnold Educational Fund, the Milo W. Bekins Foundation, the Otis A. and Margaret Barnes Scholarship Fund, the Centennial Foundation, the Continental Oil Company, the Carah Frances Hutchinson Cowles Scholarship Fund, the El Pomar Foundation, the Gates Foundation, the General Motors Corporation, the Murray Drug Company, the National Merit Foundation (Sears-Roebuck Foundation), the Presser Foundation, the Roof Memorial Foundation, the Sachs Foundation, the Society of Exploration Geo-rado Springs Woman's Educational Society.

Shove Chapel

Shove Chapel, Dec. 9, 1962

Sunday sermon, "Empty Words or Mighty Promises."

In one of his letters, St. Paul speaks of "The law of sin and death." He states that through what the New Testament calls faith, the Christian is freed from this law. The advent season in the Christian Church traditionally deals with these great themes of death, judgment and the second coming. But the contemporary man appears to find very little meaning in the conception of sin and avoids it as far as he is able to do, even as far as not mentioning death. The purpose of the service is to try to show how Paul's words and thoughts apply with meaning and relevance to our present condition and how the Christian faith gives us a motive for living and also to give hope in the midst of despair.

In place of the regular sermon, Professor Robert Adams, Kenneth Nicholas Fiedelical and Wilbur Wright will read "The Sermons" from W. H. Auden's Christmas Oratorio, For The Time Being.

ASCC Notes

It is with sad fingers that this writer must put into print the first item of business on the agenda for the final first semester meeting of the Associated Students of Colorado College. Secretary, Terry Kidner, will graduate this month. Election committee chairman, Chuck White, has set January 23 as the date when petitions for secretary may be picked up, and January 25 as the date they are due. The election will be held on February 5. President Power has appointed Sue Hile to serve as secretary during the interim period. (As she is also secretary of Rastall Center Board, Mr. Meis wonders with whom she will bowl.)

Applications for All-College Conference are due today.

With regards to the college Standard presented last week, ASCC has scheduled the WES Lounge on Tuesday and Wednesday, January 22 and 23. Conducted as an open ASCC meeting, the standard and the Executive Council's authority to approve such a standard will be discussed. Pending the occurrence of these discussions, the motion to approve the standard remains tabled.

The constitution for the Community Service Committee has been approved.

In answer to the Academic Committee's request for more specific information concerning their financial status, Pius XII College has sent a rather short and non-specific reply. Due mainly to this cloud of mystery in which they have seemingly chosen to veil themselves, the motion to grant them $40 was defeated.

The decorations in Rastall Center are due to the efforts of Rastall Center Board, Mr. Meis and Miss Karen McIlvain won the decorating contest—which by the way was judged by Mr. Robin Rudolf (who was not present to defend his judgment).

The Symposium ad hoc committee has let it be known that their plan of action at Delmonico's, where CC students will have the benefit of entertainment of "stellar superiority."

A general calendar of second semester events specifically pertaining to seniors has been handed out to members of said class. Also junior class president, Ed De-George, announced that the senior class will "turn it on next semester."

Survival kits (yea for the sophomores) will be distributed tomorrow. Mr. White has been put in charge of organizing the ASCC bowling team.

Counseling Center Helps Non-High School Grads Reach College Entrance

A service provided by Colorado College's Counseling Center is making it possible for countless men and women to enter college without having completed high school. The service consists of a series of five two-hour exams administered by the Counseling Center. Persons successfully completing the tests are awarded the equivalent of a high school diploma. They can then be considered as candidates for admission to college.

The Colorado College Counseling Center is the agency for administering the General Educational Development Tests. These examinations are open to all those persons of age twenty or over, who have lived in Colorado for a minimum of six months. The administration of the tests is one of the many services provided for by the center to the community and college students.

Mrs. Harry Davis, counselor at the college center explained that the person who ordinarily takes these examinations is a person who has dropped out of school to enter the military service, to go into defense work, to get married, or because of family obligations. Most of those who take the exams are young people who want to enter college. However, there are many older persons who are interested in job advancement and who find that a high school diploma is required for many of the new jobs opening up today.

Mrs. Davis, who holds a master's degree in personnel service from the University of Colorado, believes that more people would take these examinations if they knew they were available. Such exams include social sciences, English grammar, literature, natural sciences and mathematics.

Shove Presents Symposium Drama

On the first Sunday morning of Symposium Week there will be a special dramatic worship service in Shove Chapel at 10:00 a.m. The central part of this act of worship will be a short modern play, entitled "Impromptu." The author is Tad Mosel, author of the 1960 Pulitzer Prize play, "All the Way Home."

The story of the play concerns a group of actors gathered in an empty auditorium, on an empty platform, waiting for a stage manager to direct their activities, to create an "order" for them. The actors are—without a script—themselves "hungry," lost, lonely, and desolate, and unable to relate to one another. They yearn for a script to "act," a "play" to do, a context within which they can express their own personalities, and yet maintain personal distance from one another.

Because no one appears to "structure" their rehearsal, the start to do an "original" play and "play a story"—gradually their fears, conflicts, and ambivalence begin to emerge, their "hungry" for love, affection, and real interpersonal relationship through communication and contact slowly take precedence over defensive reaction tendencies, to one another—and to the members of the congregation to a renewed sense of the meaning of God in our lives.

It is hoped that there will be special music and also a special choir. The worship leaders will be Professors Nicholas Fiedelical and Kenneth Burton. The special music will be arranged by Mr. Robert Caulderwood. The play will be directed by Mr. Jack Booth who is an expert on the Church and drama and also a professional actor and play director. This should prove to be a very worthwhile dramatic and religious experience in keeping with the whole of Symposium Week. All members of the College community and others are urged to attend.

DECK THE HALLS

When you think of Christmas gifts you naturally think of Marlboro cigarettes, leading seller in flip-top box in all fifty states—and if we annex Wales, in all fifty-one—and if we annex Lapland—in all fifty-two. This talk about annexing Wales and Lapland is, incidentally, not just idle speculation. Great Britain wants to trade Wales to the United States for a desert. Tourists are always coming up to the Prime Minister or the Lord Privy Seal or like that and saying, "I'm not knocking your country, mind you. It's very quaint and picturesque, etc. what with Buckingham Palace and Bovril and Scotland Yard, etc., but where's your desert?" (Before I forget, let me point out that Scotland Yard, Britain's plainclothes police branch, was named after Wally Scotland and Fred Yard who invented plain clothes. The American plainclothes force is called the FBI after Frank B. Incheffill, who invented fingerprints. Before Mr. Incheffill's invention, everybody's fingers were absolutely glassy smooth. This, as you may imagine, played hob with the identification of newborn babies in hospitals. From 1791 until 1904 no American parent ever brought home the right baby from the hospital. This later became known as the Black Ton Explosion.)

But I dissent. England, I was saying, wants to trade Wales for a desert. Sweden wants to trade Lapland for Frank B. Incheffill. The reason is that Sweden to this day still don't have fingerprints. As a result, identification of babies in Swedish hospitals is so haphazard that Swedes flatly refuse to bring their babies home. There are, at present, nearly a half-billion unclaimed babies in Swedish hospitals—some of them well over eighty years old.

But I dissent. We were speaking of Christmas gifts which naturally put us in mind of Marlboro cigarettes. What could be more welcome at Christmas time than Marlboro's flavor, Marlboro's soft pack, Marlboro's flip-top box? What indeed would be more welcome at any time of year—winter or summer, rain or shine, night or day? Any time, any season, when you light a Marlboro you can always be certain that you will get the same mild, flavorful, completely comfortable smoke.

There are, of course, other things you can give for Christmas besides Marlboro cigarettes. If, for example, you are looking for something to give a music lover, let me call to your attention a revolutionary new development in phonographs—the Low-6 phonograph. The Low-6, product of years of patient research, has so little fidelity to the record you put on it that, for instance, you put "Stardust" on the turntable, "Melancholy Baby" will come out. This is an especially welcome gift for people who have grown tired of "Stardust".

Merry Christmas to all and to all a good night.

The makers of Marlboro cigarettes, who take pleasure in bringing you this column throughout the school year, wish to join old Max in extending greetings of the Season.

Two CC Graduates Conduct Research

A brother and sister who earned their bachelor's degrees in zoology at Colorado College now are conducting a zoological research a continent apart.

Miss Margaret Mathies, graduated magna cum laude in 1957, is doing pioneer research in immunology at Haverford College in Pennsylvania where she is an assistant professor in biology. She earned her Ph.D. degree at Western Reserve University.

The Colorado College graduate says her research is presently concerned with studying the relationship between two stages of protein antibodies which appear sequentially in the development of an immunity. She hopes that her findings will lead to a new insight into the mechanism of antibody formation.

Elected to Phi Beta Kappa in her junior year at Colorado College, Professor Mathies participated widely in student activities as an undergraduate and was a member of Kappa Gamma Gamma.

Her brother, Allen W. Mathies, Jr., is doing research at the Los Angeles County Hospital in California where he is a resident pediatrician. He received his bachelor's degree from Colorado College in 1952, and subsequently earned his master's degree and Ph.D. degrees at Columbia University. He earned his M. D. degree at the University of Vermont Medical School where he taught parasitic diseases.

A member of Phi Delta Theta fraternity at Colorado College, he was a special assistant at the request of his classmates at his own baccalaureate service.

Rudd Recipient of Doctorate From Colorado State College

Professor John Paul Rudd, associate professor at Colorado College received his doctorate in education Wednesday, December 5, at Colorado State College in Greeley, Colorado.

Prior to joining Colorado College in 1961, Dr. Rudd served as a high school teaching principal in Spring Lake, Texas, from 1935-36, and in Merkel, Texas, from 1936 to 1937; a high school teacher-coach in Brady, Texas, from 1937-1943. He served as superintendent of schools in Rule, Texas, from 1960 to 1963, as an elementary-secondary principal in Throckmorton, Texas, from 1953 to 1955, and as a guidance counselor in San Angelo, Texas, from 1955 to 1961.

Dr. Rudd earned his bachelor's degree from Hardin-Simmons University in 1935 and his masters degree from the same institution in 1945.

He is married to Nell Gene Randerson and has one son, John Randerson Rudd.

Mr. Charles Huskinson spoke to Alpha Kappa Psi on Tuesday, November 27. Mr. Huskinson, vice-president of Alpha Kappa Psi, spoke on the general background of the fraternity.

"Vitelloni" to Be Shown At Fine Arts Center

The Film Society's choice for December is an Italian production called "Vitelloni" or "The Young and the Innocent" to be shown on Friday, December 7th, at 8 p.m. in the Fine Arts Center.

A winner of the Silver Lion of St. Mark at the Venice Film Festival, this film was directed by Federico Fellini, the man who has made "La Dolce Vita" an American household word. (He also directed "La Strada.")

TIME magazine (practically a household word in Italy) said this about "Vitelloni"—"The year's best picture . . . a fine piece of work than 'La Strada' in every way. Technically, it is an elegant exercise in cinematic diction. Literally, it is a murderous satire curiously infused with tenderness for the thing it destroys . . . The numbness, the irony, the sharp observation of small-town life in all this has hardly been surpassed on the screen."

These films are open to the public. Admission at the door. Reduced rate for CC students.

Education Society Met December 6

The board of Managers of the Woman's Educational Society of Colorado College met at 10 a.m. Thursday in Rastall Center.

Presiding at the Thursday board meeting was Mrs. Carroll Malone, president of the 73-year old society.

Also serving as officers of the society this year are Mrs. W. Lewis Abbott, first vice president; Mrs. James Jacob, second vice president; Mrs. F. F. Wing, third vice president; Mrs. R. W. Davis, recording secretary; Mrs. Fred Wehrle, corresponding secretary; and Mrs. Charles E. Carey, treasurer.

The WES, organized in 1889 to assist girls attending The Colorado College, has raised $10,750 for the construction of the Douthett, Cornick Dance Studio and the remodeling of the girls' gymnasium at Colorado College.

The new dance studio was dedicated by members of the society at their annual meeting last November in a special ceremony following the annual luncheon and meeting.

THE BELL TELEPHONE COMPANIES SALUTE: JIM TRUHER, JR.

Jim Truher, Jr. (B.S.C.E., 1957), is a Senior Engineer with Pacific Telephone in Los Angeles. Jim and his staff of 10 are charged with planning and engineering special transmission services for business and military customers.

Roth Assumes Eminent Position With First Novel "Letting Go"

By David Greenberg

Phillip Roth has assumed a position of eminence, in what unfortunately has come to be called, "America's new breed of writers," whose chief characteristics are strong academic ties and a willingness to write about their own religious community, be it Negro or Jewish. Roth was originally marked as a writer to watch, when his first book, a collection of short-stories entitled Goodbye, Columbus, appeared in 1959. The next year it was the recipient of the National Book award for Fiction.

The main story in Goodbye Columbus deals with a young man growing up in a middle-class Jewish community. In Letting Go, however, young men have grown up, become college professors at the University of Chicago and received their diplomas as certified Jewish intellectuals, who ought to be political radicals fighting a brilliant and determined battle against poverty and fathers living on Central Park West. The battle is the letting go, the total commitment the people around one, their lives and their futures.

Gabe Wallach, the novel's hero has, to his own uneasy discomfort, missed a good part of the standard mold. He is wealthy, educated at Harvard and wrote his doctoral thesis on the very "unrevolutionary" Henry James. In fact, he bears some remarkable similarities to many of James' "unheroic" heroes. Gabe Wallach can't let go, or become involved with people; he calls himself "indecisive." This is the theme of the novel, Wallach's struggle to let go and act. His final moment when he does act, is an attempt to get the mother of a baby to sign the adoption papers that a Paul and Libby Herz have adopted.

Paul Herz, the novel's other protagonist, is Gabe Wallach's opposite, a man totally caught up in his complex and troubled personal life. Herz, a Jew, is married to a Catholic girl, Libby, and both their families have been unwilling and unable to accept the inter-marriage. In order to survive, Herz has had to live in rooming houses, force his wife into an abortion and scrape for every last penny. Yet, despite its trying aspects, its many uncomfortable moments, Roth is saying that this full life, this headlong plunge into human existence is a kind of spiritual salvation and the most satisfying way to live.

In spite of its noble intent and pages of brilliantly written dialogue, the book is not really a complete success. Gabe Wallach's personality is too well-reasoned, too well-articulated to be believable. His final and desperate moment of action, seems more of a flight from reason, than a plunge into life. That vague and indistinct line between offering token help to others, and committing oneself to their future, is too vague and indistinct to be real. Herz, who is totally committed to life, seems overwhelmed by the sheer task of surviving. His misery is too great for any inward satisfaction.

There is a dry and disappointing quality to the end of the book—a sense that the man in the rumpled Brooks Brother's suit, has been too foolish and ridiculous. Wallach's final letter to Libby Herz, on which the book closes, has the distinct air of a desolate man surrounded by his failures, clinging to one hollow moment in a barren past.

Certainly for a first novel, however, Letting Go more than lives up to any reasonable expectations and Roth has shown a willingness to grapple with mature themes on an adult level. Unlike a J. D. Salinger, he has gone beyond the problems of a prep school adolescent.

One of Roth's greatest talents is the ability to capture people in some short lively dialogue, for which he has an excellent ear. This is very evident where Herz is talking with two old men, one of whom is complaining that his son never sends him any money and he is going to write to the senate about this. His friend says:

"Then a letter to the senate. What kind of a son is this who we put secrets in his hands, should guide and steer our country, and has no respect for his father" . . . (later) Korgold plucked at Levy's sleeve. "Maybe we should enclose a snapshot. Let him see what conditions I live in."

Other scenes ("poor Adlai Stevenson had conceded defeat in measured eighteenth-century sentences.") show an acute awareness of the social and economic milieu in which the novel is laid, and Roth grew up. This strong sense of the community of the writer's past, coupled with flashes of virtuoso dialogue give a quality faintly reminiscent of Saul Bellow to the novel.

Letting Go is far too long and much of it reads like the Saturday Evening Post. Within it, however, it is possible to discern the talent of a writer who might conceivably become great.

Colorado College should be very honored and pleased to have Phillip Roth as a guest for its Symposium.

eral drama students will give performances. "The Zoo Story" by Edward Albee, will be presented, directed by William McMillen of the Drama Department. The actors for the production will be John Giannes and James Fox. Adrienne Zech and Carleton Chard will work with Dr. Frank Whiting, of the University of Minnesota, in a demonstration of dramatic techniques.

Finally, the Colorado College faculty will play an important part in Symposium Week. It is only logical that we utilize the vast amount of knowledge present in this body of professors. A list of participants includes: Van Shaw, Sociology and Anthropology Department; William and Jean McMillen, Drama Department; Robert Adams, Lawrence Berke, and Thomas Mauch, English Department; Glenn Brooks, Political Science Department; Woodson Tyree, Speech and Drama Department; Ellen Clayton and Herving Madruga, Romance Language Department; Michael Phillips, Art Department; Darnell Becker, Department of Philosophy; Gilbert Johns, Psychology Department; and Wilber Wright, Physics Department. Also participating will be Fred Bartlett, Director of the Colorado Springs Fine Arts Center and Bernard Arnest, Director of the Fine Arts Center School. Both will give gallery talks on the exhibition to be presented at the Fine Arts Center during Symposium Week, "Recent Painting U.S.A.: The Figure."

Literacy Is Weapon Against Communism

The struggle between the free world and the communists is being waged by dedicated men and women in the primitive tribes of remote jungles. Their weapons consist of home-made alphabet cards and primers. The object of all this is to teach these people to read their own language.

David B. Wilkinson, a graduate student at the Colorado College, who spent several months earlier this year among the Lacandon Indians in the rain forests of southern Mexico, feels that a teacher training program will have to be developed if we are to win this war.

"Until 1955, the Bible was the most translated book," Wilkinson says in his master's thesis. "In 1955, the writings of Lenin took first place."

A former Colorado Springs high school teacher, Wilkinson has been working on a master of arts degree in education at CC. His thesis is entitled, "Techniques and Problems Involved in Teaching Aboriginal Illiterates to Read Their Own Language."

He said the purpose of the study was to discover what problems are encountered in teaching aboriginal illiterates to read their own language and what techniques are

College Health Program Discussed by Dean Reid

Juan Reid, dean of men at Colorado College, discussed the ideal small college health program at the Southwest regional meeting of the American College Health Association in Stillwater, Oklahoma, December 3.

"In order to hold their position against the tidal wave of public education, small private liberal arts colleges must offer educational opportunities and personal services that are not always available in larger tax supported institutions," Dean Reid said.

"And not the least of these is health service and the health center that it houses," Dean Reid told educators and physicians attending the southwest regional meeting of the American College Health Association.

Reid, who has been dean of men since 1954, and who was a former coach and athletic director at Colorado College, based his talk on research he has been conducting during the past year on the small private college health center program under a grant from Educational Facilities Laboratories, Inc.

"Good health services and facilities should not be limited to high cost colleges and to tax supported institutions," Dean Reid said.

"In the small private liberal arts college intercollegiate athletics is likely to be an integral part of the total college program and the participants are likely to be student athletes who are not segregated from the rest of the student body," he told the group. "As a result, the small college health service must be prepared to take care of the treatment and care of the injuries incurred in intercollegiate athletics, a responsibility that is normally assumed by the athletic departments in the large state supported institutions," he said.

"In the small private liberal arts college efficiency in operation and maintenance is a necessity," the Colorado College dean of men said. "In other words the watchword is maximum service with minimum staff. This can only be accomplished with central control and modern equipment."

Dean Reid said it is important to note that "the parents of students attending private liberal arts colleges expect a great deal of attention to be given the students."

"This applies to matters of health," he said. "The health director in effect acts in place of the family physician and accepts the responsibility of keeping the parents advised of the students condition in the more serious cases, whether in the infirmary or in a local hospital.

"The objectives of a small college health service should not be different than that of a large university service — specifically to maintain a state of optimum health — both physical and mental — among the student body," he said. "Although the scope of the service will vary a great deal it is hoped that it will cover preventive medical practices, and health education as well as medical treatment and care. The service should be an integral part of the total college program and not a peripheral service."

He said the small private college has a number of advantages in carrying out such a program. They are:

1. Close relationship between faculty, staff and students should carry over into the health consultations. The result would minimize the loss of time from studies, and make possible early identification of illnesses.

2. Student sees the same nurse and doctor, rather than a different one with each contact. Service similar to that provided by family physician.

3. Another advantage is that the small college health center can capture some of the warmth of the home.

"One factor that remains constant, whether it be in a large university or a small college, is that student health programs are likely to be the same." Respiratory infections will predominate, followed by athletic injuries and emotional disturbances.

"Most health centers are adequately prepared to meet the first two, but good psychiatric or clinical psychology care is not always readily available," the Colorado College dean said. "Many small colleges have the services of a clinical psychologist who is a member of the teaching faculty."

Spelling Mistakes Bother Students

New York City College students may be more scintillating than the rest of us, but chances are they can't spell it.

Quizzed on a list of 12 words chosen from "The 100 Words Easiest to Misspell" in the October Readers Digest, not one of a random sample of 69 New York City students on four campuses made a perfect score. Average for the group was eight wrong, four right. Highest score, a co-ed majoring in Spanish in graduate school at Columbia University, got four wrong of the twelve.

Although scintillate is one of the "100 Easiest" words, it is not among the 12 chosen for the test. Test words include "drunkennes," "embarrassment," "fricassee," "perseverance," "irresistible," "indispensable," "sacrilegious," "genealogy," "reconciler," "apocryphal" and "esophagus." Words misspelled by the highest score included "fricassee," "irresistible," "indispensable" and "desiccate."

Only six of the New York students quizzed knew how to spell "fricassee." Most, however, err by doubling the "c," or not doubling the "g".

Are the New Yorkers ashamed of their poor showing?

Apparently not. Although most think their teachers do "grade down" for poor spelling on papers, especially in English, only a few think that their spelling ability will be important to their success later on in life.

Says a New York University junior, majoring in Business Law: "The ability to spell will not have much bearing upon success unless one is a secretary or does a lot of correspondence."

Says a Hunter College English major: "Good spelling might aid something, but I don't think it will make you a success in life. Most people who are successful don't have to write words out. A secretary can do that. In lesser positions, spelling is definitely more important. Colleges are more interested in your ideas and what you can produce."

A Barnard College sophomore justifying her own nine-wrong score remarks, "It's always comforting to remember that Winston Churchill can't spell either."

There is even some evidence that the New Yorkers think bad spelling signals an imaginative mind. A New York University freshman majoring in fine art puts it this way, "People who are good spellers are people with me-tho-dical minds. Usually creative people are poor spellers. Imagine if a person were not good with details like spelling."

A City College freshman studying Engineering observes, "My brother is working for his doctorate degree. He is a shining success but he doesn't know how to spell." This student, however, qualifies his comments later in the interview. He explains, "You can be a good speller and have plenty of imagination, or you can be a good speller and have no imagination."

Another City College student, a sophomore studying Electrical Engineering seems to sum up the majority view when he says, "Poor spelling is not necessarily associated with a plodding mind, but the kids who are the best spellers do seem to be that sort of person."

Most of the students questioned doubt that a Quiz selected from "The 100 Words Easiest to Misspell" is a fair gauge of the spelling ability. A Columbia University graduate student in English explains, "Those are the kind of words I always look up."

In introducing the list, Reader's Digest editors themselves explain: "Unless you are a statistical abnormality, it is unlikely that your score higher than 50 per cent of this test."

"If I had it to do over again, would I take Army R.O.T.C.?"

My wife and I are in Panama at the moment. She likes it. You know, Officers' Club, dances—that sort of thing. I like it, too. But whether I stay in the Army or not, the question is: Would I take Army R.O.T.C. if I had it to do over again? Yes, I certainly would. In spades, I didn't realize how lucky I was. At the time I figured: Okay, so I'll get my degree—get an Army commission, too, and pick up some extra money along the way! I wasn't the leadership type, I thought. I was wrong. Boy, was I wrong! Looking back on it, I wouldn't trade the leadership training I got for anything! Take my word for it, leaders are made—not born! Whether I stay in the Army or not, nobody can take away what I've learned. And let's face it, where can anybody my age step out of college and walk into a standard of living this good? Look, if you have already invested two years in college ROTC, take it from me: Stick it out! It'll be one of the smartest things you ever did. I say so."

Delta Gamma: Saturday night the D.G. and Gamma Phi held their Christmas Dance at Bernard's. Sunday the senior D.G.s treated the Alumnae and the rest of the chapter to a Christmas party. December 9, the D.G.s and the Phi Deltis will go caroling. The chapter wishes to extend best wishes to President Nettie Cheley on her engagement to Bud Short.

Gamma Phi Beta: A traditional birthday gathering honoring all of the sisters who had birthdays in the months of July to December was held by the Gamma Phi. The birthday sweets were made by house mother Mom Cunningham and were delicious. The Gamma Phi-D.G. Formal provided a welcome break from coffee, books, and no dance. Finally, the chapter celebrated Christmas with a dinner and tree trimming party at the house.

Kappa Kappa Gamma: The Kappas ended the semester with their traditional Faculty Christmas parties, highlighted by the singing of favorite carols and a lively game of charades in which members of the faculty were required to act out Christmas themes. Saturday night the Kappa Christmas Formal was held at the Pam Pann.

Newly elected officers for the coming semester, chosen at the last meeting are: Suky Arentz, president; Melinda Wells, vice president; Leslie Pearce, secretary; Lucy Christy, treasurer; Judy Stampfli, second vice-president; Chris Archangeli, pledge trainer; Linda Dunkin, scholarship chairman; Glennie Elsie, membership chairman; Mary Ann Hubble, social chairman; and SueBee Fertig, public relations.

Kappa Sigmas: Last Wednesday night the eminent entomologist Dr. Sascha Burland delivered a stimulating lecture on "The Effect of an Early Hoarfrost on the Larvae of the Canadian Bagworm." Special guests of the chapter included the grounds crew and their wives who also enjoyed Dr. Burland's talk and avidly participated in the 45 minute question and answer period which ensued after the lecture.

The Kappa Sigmas are expected to reach their social climax this Saturday night at their traditional Yule Log Pull Party. The infamous mistletoe room will unfortunately not be in existence because of a distasteful and somewhat embarrassing incident which brought an abrupt halt to last year's Christmas cheer. In preparation for the joyous occasion, the brotherhood will spend the past week decorating the house with tinsel, holly, multicolored balls, and other such yuletide garnishments. The essence of Frankincense and Myrrh wafts through the halls and rosy cheeks can be seen in every window.

Phi Gamma Delta: Five seniors from the Phi Gam house have played their last season of football for the CC Tigers this semester. They are: Wayne Deutscher, fullback; Harry Boyd, tackle; Benny Melton, tackle; and two of the team's tri-captains, Vince Greco, halfback, and John Trujillo, guard. In addition, one Phi senior played his last game for the CC soccer team this season. He is All-European star Gerard Jansen-Venneboer.

The brothers serenaded Pat Hoener in recognition of her getting pinned to brother Lee Muller. The pledge class completed the house's Christmas decorations this week in anticipation of the coming holiday season. They would also like to congratulate brother Butch Weymouth on the birth of a baby boy.

WORK IS NEARING COMPLETION AT 1102 WOOD AVE. ON THE NEW DELTA GAMMA CHAPTER HOUSE. The sorority was displaced from its former location at 42 w. Cache la Poudre when the building was razed to make room for the new sports center.

Of frame and masonry construction, the new house will have 3,000 square feet of space. On the first floor will be a foyer, powder room, large living room, and housemother's apartment. The lower floor, which will open onto a ground level patio, will have a dining, chapter room, kitchen and storage. The exterior will be of contemporary design with an Oriental theme.

The house, costing $45,000, is scheduled for completion by Christmas. Harry M. Pierceall is the architect and Bickley Construction is doing the work on the project. The house is being built under the direction of an Alumnae House Corporation.

MINES QUARTERBACK IS CAUGHT FROM BEHIND while trying to turn right end in CC-Colo. Mines game last Saturday. CC lost 7-0.

Orediggers Win Tough Contest

The Colorado College football team completed their 1962 football campaign last Saturday at Washburn Field by dropping a tough 7 to 0 contest to the Colorado School of Mines. The 67th meeting between the two schools had been originally scheduled for November 17 but because of 6-8 inches of snow the game was postponed to December 1. The loss left the Tigers in the cellar with an 0-4 record and an overall 1-7 season mark. Mines' victory gave them a share of second place with a 2-2 league standing.

The Tigers' defense was outstanding as they consistently kept the Miners bottled up and forced them to punt on six occasions. The Orediggers were unable to push into CC territory until midway through the second period when Earl Jaynes recovered a Black and Gold fumble on the Bengals 32 yard line. The CC eleven was stalled on several drives in the first half inside the Miners' 30 yard line as Coach Carle's eleven just couldn't seem to keep the offense clicking.

Colorado College's only scoring bid came early in the third quarter when the Tigers marched from their own 25 yard line downfield to Mines' 20 from where Steve Sabol's field goal attempt strayed to the left of the uprights. The Oredigger's scoring march started in the opening minutes of the final quarter. A personal foul penalty and an offside infraction moved the pigskin to the CC 47, and from there the Miners pushed across the goal line in nine plays with quarterback Grant Owen carrying the final two. Hal Capchaw booted the extra point to give Colorado Mines a 7-0 margin.

Senior halfback Vince Greco rushed for 90 yards in his last appearance at Colorado College. Bob Broyles was the Tigers' second leading ground gainer with 39 yards.

Coach Jerry Carle and his coaching staff should be congratulated on a fine season effort which saw CC barely miss in upsetting Adams State 21-20 and Saturdays close 7 to 0 losing effort to Mines.

CC Hoopsters Just Miss Win

The Colorado College 1962-63 basketball campaign got underway last Saturday night at Cossitt Hall as a Trier second half comeback fell short, and St. Josephs of Albuquerque took home a 67-66 victory. CC was down 45-33 at intermission but barely missed defeating their visitors in the final thirty seconds of play.

Senior guard Gregg Smith poured in 23 points to take game honors. Smith hit 10 of the 16 goal attempts and sparked the Bengals comeback with 16 points in the second half. Bob Baker, a transfer student from Mesa Junior College, sank 12 points. Also figuring in the scoring were Carl Cabbiness with 9, Phil Hart with 9, Pete Susemihl with 6, Ed Loosli with 3, Bob Heiny with 2, and Bill Peiz with 2.

The Tigers outshot St. Josephs from the floor by hitting 47% of their field goal attempts. The visiting five hooped only 25 two-pointers while hitting 33% from the field. The foul line proved to be the deciding factor as CC tallied on 10 of 15 and St. Josephs dropped in 17 of 25 for their winning one point margin.

Pucksters Finally Break the Ice!

ALEX YANKOVICH SWEEPS IN FOR THE GOAL as Roger Simon watches McMaster goalie Cannon on the ice during CC's 6-3 win Saturday night.

Tigers Prove Win No Fluke By Beating McMasters Twice

The CC hockey team, obviously tired of a twenty-four game league losing streak and bound and determined to break it, scored a 9-6 win over McMasters University of Ontario, Canada on Wednesday, Nov. 28 at the Broadmoor World Arena. To round the week out, the Tigers, evidently enjoying the fishyry, proved the win was no fluke by topping the Marlins 6-3 last Saturday, Dec. 1.

The Bengals jumped to a 4 goal lead in the first period of their first game. Chris Batley tallied the opening goal in 1:19 of the first period, and Jim Frolisch followed 38 seconds later with a second one. When Art Bergland scored with a 30 footer about midpoint of the period, the CC fans sensed a win. Jeff Sauer scored about a minute and half later and the fans were yelling for an upset. But before the first stanza ended, McMasters had clipped the Tiger lead to 2 points.

Bergland added two points in the opening minutes of the second period to bring the score to 6-2. McMasters again closed the lead with two markers, but Warren Fordyce added one more for the Tigers before the period ended with the score reading 7-4.

Don Stouffer upped the lead with a goal in the opening minutes of the third stanza, but once again, the Marlins shaved the lead to 8-6 with two markers. Ken Cairns added the final insurance point with 18:18 gone in the final period to ice a very big game in for the Bengals. Bergland paced the CC icers with three goals and two assists.

In the game last Saturday, the first period seemed to portend a dull and dreary night for the Tigers. With less than a minute played, Jim McLellan tallied the first goal for the Marlins. While the Bengals couldn't seem to get started, McMasters scored twice more during the first period.

There was a twelve minute delay shortly after the second period began, while the McMasters goalie, Jim Cannon, had his right thigh stitched for a skate cut. When play resumed, the Tigers erupted and spent most of the rest of the period around the McMaster's goal. Chris Batley again found the net first on a solo trip for the Tigers with about eight minutes gone. Ken Cairns notched the second goal about ten minutes into the second period. Roger Simon brought the score to a tie, 3-3, with a tally from 20 feet. By this time the crowd was on its feet and was sent into an uproar when Batley marked the fourth goal for the Tigers seconds later. L'ondemonium broke loose when Alex Yankovitch notched the fifth goal with two minutes left in the period. An indication of CC dominance in the period is twenty-three saves made by Marlin goalie Cannon compared with seven saves by Tiger goalie Warwick.

The final stanza was rather anticlimactic with CC deploying good defense and John Sinus adding the final goal for CC to post a 6-3 triumph.

The CC icers' next home games are with Michigan State on January 5 and 8 and with Denver University on January 12.

Ellis Develops Teaching Method For Middle English Literature

A new approach to teaching Middle English literature has been developed by Colorado College Prof. Amanda M. Ellis.

Miss Ellis, writer in residence at the college, outlines the new method in an article written for the December issue of the magazine, The Critic, official publication of the College English Association.

She developed the college's Middle English course. The new product is a course for juniors and seniors called Medieval Man, His Life and Thought.

It is, she says, "a depth course," requiring an unusual amount of background reading.

Students enrolled in the course are expected to read five social histories of the middle ages, excerpts from works on various phases of medieval life and culture, and the important literary works of the period.

Among the college courses that have badly needed revision for years is that in Middle English literature," Miss Ellis writes, "For years, many of us taught Middle English in the original, where the main stress was on language. True, the student emerged with an understanding of Middle English language he had, however, a decidedly muddled, not to say inadequate, idea of the literature of the period.

"Then came the vogue for Middle English in translation," she said. "The justification was that now students could read more widely. Included in their courses, usually were 'Beowulf' and other Anglo-Saxon poetry and prose as well as Middle English from the eleventh to fifteenth centuries; included, too, was early Irish and Welsh literature, some literature from France, Italy, Spain and Germany. Some colleges still read Chaucer in the original, others adopt one of many translations."

Miss Ellis notes that previously little attention was given to the art, architecture, music and sculpture of the period. "All these, I contend, are essential, if the literature is to come to life," Miss Ellis said.

The author of 15 books and 61 articles, Professor Ellis received her bachelor of arts degree from Colorado College, Phi Beta Kappa, and earned her master of arts degree at the University of Iowa. Among her works are a text book, "Literature of England," a novel, "Elizabeth the Woman," a nationally televised play, "The Death Waltz," and numerous books on the West. She is well known for her continental literature as well as 20th century drama.

Long active in professional activities, Miss Ellis has served as vice president of the National Council of Teachers of English.

In addition she has been chairman of a committee on Teaching English as a Second Language, and headed a special committee appointed by New York Gov. Nelson Rockefeller when he was coordinator of Inter-American Affairs.

Professor Attends Annual Institute

Professor Fred A. Sondermann, associate dean at Colorado College, participated in the annual meeting of the Institute of World Affairs in Pasadena, California, held Sunday, December 2, through Wednesday, December 5.

The institute devoted its 39th annual session to "Commitment to Freedom."

Dean Sondermann, who has taught political science at Colorado College for the past nine years, presided at a luncheon and at a board meeting of the International Studies Association, and acted as chairman of a panel discussion on Space Exploration. He was named president of the International Studies Association last spring.

Dr. Sondermann also is director of the summer session at Colorado College. Among his responsibilities are the development of new programs, the winter symposium and the college public lectures program.

The Colorado College political scientist is the co-author of one book, The Theory and Practice of International Relations, and author of numerous articles in professional journals.

Since earning his Ph.D. degree at Yale University, he has specialized in international relations, American foreign policy, and modern dictatorships. He received his bachelor of arts degree from Butler University and his master of arts degree at Indiana University.

Since joining the faculty at Colorado College, the new director of special studies spent one year at Stanford University as a Ford Foundation Fellow studying aspects of social psychology and anthropology.

Marlboro Country

In all 50 states, the big switch is to Marlboro

Remember 1955, when Marlboro came to town? Suddenly, the U.S. had a flavor cigarette with a filter on the end. Sales grew in every town, in every state. Today the whole place is Marlboro country—land of the filter cigarette with the unfiltered taste. Behind this popularity is the famous Richmond recipe of ripe tobaccos (the finest grown), and the pure white Selectate Filter. Pack or box, you get a lot to like.

Brooks Writes Article on Governors' Futures Administrators Discuss Typical Health Center

Despite the numerous obituaries written about the death of governors as potential political candidates, major state-houses still are more likely to be steppingstones than political tombstones, says CC political science Professor Glenn Brooks. But, warns Dr. Brooks, the political future of the governors will be nil unless they readjust their partisan weapon to meet the new challenge of television politics and the growing importance of international events." Writing in the current issue of The John Hopkins Magazine, Dr. Brooks noted that the outcome of the 1960 national elections seemed to confirm that governors were political trouble. "For the second time in history an incumbent governor was elected president," said Dr. Brooks. "For the first time since 1908, no governor ran as a candidate for President or Vice-president on a major party ticket. With the single exception of Nelson Rockefeller, no governor of either party received serious consideration for the 1960 nominations."

"The columnists rushed to their penwriters to confirm a new and fundamental fact of presidential politics," he observed.

"On closer examination, however, the revolution is not nearly as thoroughgoing as some might hasten to conclude," he wrote. "Nor is the threat to governors as great as it seemed in the turbulence of 1960."

Professor Brooks, who earned his Ph.D. degree at Johns Hopkins University and taught there and the University of Texas before joining the CC faculty in 1960, said the issue still is far from being settled. It contains three basic elements, he said. They are:

"First, the old, loosely federated political system is under heavy pressure of centralization with a consequent rise in the political status of senators and other national figures.

"Second, the states and their leaders, the governors, are still highly potent in the area of national politics.

"Third, the federal style of politics is likely to persist, in modified form, for some time to come. How long and in what form it will persist depends heavily on the ability of the governors to adapt to new conditions in the political environment."

The Colorado College professor is the author of one book, When Governors Convene, and staff author of The Campus and the State. His knowledge of day to day politics has been enriched by a staff assignment on capitol hill.

"Before we lay the governors to rest—and along with them the federal pattern of American politics—we should recognize signs that the governors have adapted to their hostile environment rather well," he says. "Rockefeller, for example, is in a considerably stronger position as governor of New York than he would have been as senator from the same state. Even if all of the national arguments point to senators as logical presidential choices, the politicians, and to some extent the public, still think that the governors are strong contenders. Until people have stopped thinking this way—and there is little indication in 1962 that they have—the governors remain in a challenging position."

"Nor will a governor's lack of congressional experience necessarily disqualify him from presidential consideration," Professor Brooks writes. "Fundists assumed that a senator's familiarity with the complexities of Capitol Hill would be a decisive advantage in public policy leadership. Yet the Kennedy legislative programs have not rougher sledding in Congress than the programs of any President in recent years, and all of this congressional know-how has proven to be of only mildest assistance."

"From here on, at any rate, influential politicians are not likely to be swayed by the contention that senators will naturally be effective in their relations with Congress," he continued. "It may be that the Congress will become doubly wary when a senator goes to the White House, and will be determined not to be bullied by one of its own kind."

"In any event, governors can win presidential nominations in the future, although they will not succeed for the same old reasons," he said. "They will, of course, offer administrative experience as an asset, but the modern president is first a policy-maker and secondarily an administrator. If governors in the past were chosen because they were politically uncommitted on vital issues, the modern governor is much more likely to make his position known on national problems while he is still in the statehouse. The national

Modern presidential nominees require a long build-up in advance, and the governor who wants the nomination will not be able, as he was in the past, to sit on the sidelines until the last minute before the convention," the college professor said. "He must start his campaign early and keep his name before the public. This places the governors of the small states at a disadvantage, but then they have never enjoyed much favor as nominees. Instead, the parties have turned to governors of the largest states for their candidates. The governors of these states have massive resources for publicity and are prepared to use them in competition with senators and other hopefuls."

The health center at a typical liberal arts college should offer students a "type of medical service comparable to that provided by the family physician," say a group of college administrators in a report prepared for Educational Facilities Laboratories, Inc.

The report, drafted by Colorado College Dean of Men, J. Juan Reid, said the small college health center also should:

—Be more than just a place to get one's throat swabbed or pick up a free aspirin.

—Adopt the philosophy that its primary function is directed toward the individual.

The report is the result of a nine-month long study, financed through a $10,000 grant from Educational Facilities Laboratories.

Medical officers and administrators from Colorado College, Knox College, Wittenberg University, and members of the architectural firm of Caudill, Rowlett and Scott, participated in the study, coordinated by Dean Reid.

"The principal objective of a college health service, regardless of the size and type of the institution, should be to maintain a state of optimum health, both physical and mental, among the student body. The scope of the service may vary a great deal, but it should be broad enough to include preventive medical practices and health education, as well as medical treatment and care. The health service should be an integral part of the total college program, requiring the cooperation of all segments of the college community."

"The private liberal arts college is in an advantageous position to meet these fundamental objectives of a college health service," the report continued. "The close relationship that normally exists between the faculty, staff and students in a small college should carry over into the health service. This reciprocal relationship permits identification of illnesses and disturbances, encourages conferences with faculty and staff, minimizes the student's loss of time from his studies, and can speed up his recovery and ultimate return to the classroom."

"Another advantage the liberal arts college has in planning a health center is the opportunity of capturing some of the warmth of the home atmosphere, in contrast to the institutional look that cannot always be avoided in a large university health center."

"Student health presents problems, both medical and psychological, that are not common to the general medical practice," the report said. "Three types of disorders that seem to predominate are: (1) respiratory infections, (2) athletic injuries, and (3) emotional disturbances."

"The primary purpose of any college health service is to keep students in college with a minimum loss of time from their academic work and class schedules," the writer noted.

Serving on the study committee were:

From Colorado College: Dr. Roger Whitney, medical advisor; J. J. Reid, dean of men, and Christine S. Moon, dean of women.

From Knox College: Dr. James Weiler, director of student health service; and Wilbur F. Pultsberry, dean of students.

From Wittenberg University: Louis Fitch, business manager.

From Caudill, Rowlett and Scott: William W. Caudill and Ralph C. Carroll.

"Ach, wie schön dass wir Amerikaner hier haben und mit ihnen zusammen arbeiten."

JOBS WORLD WIDE

"There are thousands of individual opportunities for jobs, study and travel abroad, summer (1-3 months) or longer," according to M. Galtier, Princeton Research Corporation. PRG has recently completed a SPECIAL report which describes more than 30 organizations offering opportunities to work, study or travel world-wide.

ISTC—THE INTERNATIONAL STUDENT TRAVEL CENTER, Incorporated, was one of the organizations reviewed.

"The ISTC—together with SITA (founded in 1933 as the STUDENTS INTERNATIONAL TRAVEL ASSOCIATION), and ISIS (The International Student Information Service—Switzerland) appears to have the most complete and reasonably-priced American educational job, study and travel program currently offered," M. Galtier said.

"The goal of the INTERNATIONAL STUDENT TRAVEL CENTER is to provide stimulating work and travel experience programs abroad."

"ISTC is the U.S. Representative for ISIS. ISIS guarantees employment for students (age 18-35) and teachers (no age limit) desiring to work abroad two weeks or longer. ISIS also coordinates transfers for ISTC members. ISTC has selected SITA to make all land arrangements for its 1963 JOBS SEMINAR Programs in Paris and London. All programs include paying jobs, orientation seminar and tour. A typical seminar ranges in cost from $130 (without transportation) to $789 (including round-trip jet transportation from NYC to Paris or London). Only $20 is required for ISTC membership. Travel grants to $500 are available for ISTC members."

"SITA, except for two large travel-banking establishments (Cook's and American Express), is by far the largest, most extensive, and the most experienced travel organization in the world. More than 25,000 persons from 50 states and 40 foreign lands have participated on SITA trips. . . 90% of them on the recommendation of previous tour members."

"Available jobs include sales, farm, resort-hotel (life guards, waiters, etc.), factory, construction, hospital, child care, modeling, camp counseling and others. They pay the standard wage of the country in which they are located. Wages range from board and room only in a Spanish work camp to $190 a month in a West German factory."

"While most of the positions available in 1963 for unskilled work with minimal or no language qualifications are in Europe, ISIS will endeavor to place requests for work world-wide (more than 50 countries in Asia, Africa, The Middle East, Latin America, etc.)."

As an example, M. Galtier mentioned the recent experience of Thomas W. Houghton, Mathematics Major, Princeton University '65, who worked in a German factory this summer. Mr. Houghton is one of many students ISTC has arranged programs for. Tom said, "The opportunity to meet and know people, and their invaluable spirit of cooperation, was wonderful. With the money I earned in six weeks I was able to support myself eight weeks. I made contacts that I will enjoy the rest of my life. The whole program cost me less than most people pay for round-trip transportation to Paris. It was a rewarding experience for me, and I only hope that others will have the same opportunity."

The new 1963 ISTC JOBS SEMINAR brochure can be obtained by sending 20¢ to: THE INTERNATIONAL STUDENT TRAVEL CENTER, 39 Cortlandt St., NY 7, NY.

New Educational Method Underway in Copenhagen

The prime objective of New Experimental College which opened its founding year this fall in Copenhagen is to take strides which will catalyze an evolution in education. The first small steps have been taken. The more than twenty persons, students as well as faculty, who were invited to participate in founding the college, have met and are underway. This founding body, drawn from four countries, has a student-faculty ratio of one to one.

During the first semester primary emphasis and energy have been directed toward activities fundamental to the development of the college. Out of these have already been initiated numerous undertakings in creating the college community, in formulating its organizational structure, and in commencing the first curriculum. Both students and faculty are engaged in organizational enterprises and community concerns, from deliberation and policy-making stages to actual execution. Some activities necessary in these areas are considered and accounted for as employment which goes towards the students' tuition.

Faculty have initially assumed the major responsibility in the area of curriculum. Each of them is offering and conducting the course(s) which best gives him the opportunity to experiment with and explore his own pre-dilections and notions. Courses are then participated in by both faculty and students in order that the entire body can develop a broader and more realistic basis for future development.

At present, three core courses and a variety of additional regular courses are offered and in session. In practice, the core courses are continuous in nature having points of reference and association with all areas of college activity, still classes are also held in these courses. Among these a course in Creativity is given by Mogens Vincent, manufacturer and prolific inventor. Mr. Vincent's field is the whole realm of human experience with emphasis upon the discovery, development, and activation of those elements which contribute to the creative process in man. In Applied Liberal Arts, Aage Rosendal Nielsen seeks to organize and unite the theory and practice of economics, poetry, and education. College planning, administration, and development is the class medium through which these related arts can be discovered and applied by the students. Wallace MacDonald's course in a New World Renaissance is designed to promote the students' awareness of a modern-day renaissance as both pending and potential. It deals with philosophical and scientific bases for such an event, points to evidences for the validity of this metaphysics, and finally engages a praxis in its objectives.

Classes are also held in the areas of Abnormal Psychology (David Silber), Relativity (F. Glinski), Literature (James Bowers), Danish (A. Nielsen), Russian (G. Muller), and Film-making (S. Lund Sorensen). Guest lectures in Cybernetics, Geography, and Dialectical Materialism are also scheduled and in process.

The first six weeks of exploratory dialogue and activity have experimentally crystallized the desirability of: A period of incubation for both faculty and students which will give both a chance to become acquainted with the college prior to their assuming long-range responsibilities; Open and constant communication between faculty and student members; A cyclical program insuring both continuity and emergence. So oriented, the founding body is in the process of developing an experimental program for the February semester.

On a functional level, the new program divides the semester into three phases, each phase consisting of a five week structured program followed by a week of evaluation. The semester will commence with a presentation of the program as a whole, its basic characteristics and rationale. Then, in the first five weeks students and faculty will put the program into operation. In the sixth evaluative week, all scheduled activity including classes will be suspended. At this time the entire college program may be reviewed and evaluated, and change enacted for which there is consensus. Students may also elect to engage in individual or group activities, study, or field trips. In the second and third phases the cycle is repeated, and in these respective evaluative weeks work is begun on program development for the next semester and bases for Certificates of Accomplishment are realized and compiled.

On the level of faculty and curriculum development, the new program also initiates an internship for new faculty members. During this period of not less than one semester, the new member will be non-committally but actively exposed to the process of world-teaching in an experimental, student-faculty administered community. Operationally, he will conduct his own course(s) which will be offered to both students and faculty and will himself attend at least two other courses.

This basic interaction is designed to create the immediate background and impetus through which communications between fields and specialists can develop and out of which an eventual integrated or world-course curriculum can evolve. In addition, the new faculty member will advise two or more students in their independent studies, assist in some area of college administration, and participate together with his family in the college's International Institute in Human Relations.

Foreign Student Gives Views On United States and Thailand

by Brecharr Hemmplarh

I have always thought that America is a great country. It is my personal choice that I have come to this country. I have scarcely been here for two and a half months. The fact that I have seen much of this country is made with much exaggeration indeed. I am, therefore, aware that what I am going to say may only be my first impression which often is unreliable in correctness; or, in other words, it is my conclusion at a glance. Perhaps I must confess that, before I left home for the U. S., I had some very vague ideas about this country. I had expected that people here eat bread and drink milk and coffee in the same way people in the Far East have rice and tea. I thought I would see Americans as tall as the 16th President of America; my expectancy has only been partially fulfilled; or more truly, it has become a disappointment, for, though I have seen many tall "guys" around here, there are many who are not much taller than "that little man" as I have often been referred to.

I had expected to see the Rocky Mountains; this I have seen. In fact, Pikes Peak has become a rather familiar and easily accessible sight to me. I have only to turn my head towards my window to catch a glimpse of the Peak, majestically crowned with snow at this time of the year. I had expected to see snow; this too I have seen and also played with.

But there are many things that, had I not come to the U. S., I would never have known. I have to adjust myself with respect to the English language as it is spoken here. I have to familiarize myself with words like phony, nuts, and a host of others. In my recent conversation with a student here whom I greatly admire, I mentioned the word "Old Boys" which was not immediately understood, but is synonymous to "alumni." The former is of course further complicated if one tries to find a synonym for the word "alumnae" —perhaps the proper equivalent is "Old Girls!"

The word "football" here has always been a great puzzle to me. It always makes me think of the game which is played with a spherical ball, and in which the players, other than the goal-keeper, use their feet almost exclusively; instead of this, here I see a game played with an olive-shaped ball and players in which scarcely use their feet, except for running and perhaps casually stepping on the belly of others.

Another thing I have noticed is the friendliness of the people here. I sometimes feel that I have said too many hello's and hi's and how-do-you-do's in response to many similar greetings.

As I am from Thailand, it is not at all surprising to me that many people have poured upon me questions about my country. Through chats and informal discussions, I have come to know a great deal of what other people think of Thailand. I have discovered that the word Thailand itself presents some difficulty to most people with respect to its correct pronunciation. It seems natural to say the first two letters of the word, namely, TH, as it is in words like THEME or THEORY. But the TH in the word THAILAND, objectionable though it may seem to phonetic experts, is pronounced as the T in the TEA.

Many people have the notion that Thailand is a very poor country. I have been asked on many occasions whether it was true as they had always thought that people in my country do not have enough food to eat. It is true that we do not eat bread as much as we do rice; we have been receiving American aid; we do not have many automobiles; we do not have any skyscrapers like the Empire State Building; we do not have the machine that produces a coke when a dime is dropped into it and the crank is turned. But as far as I can remember, there has hardly been any case of starvation in my country. Thailand is one of the world's great exporters of rice. Though the living standard of the Thais cannot, in any way, be compared to that of this country, Thailand, nevertheless, is one of the comparatively prosperous countries of the Far East.

It is rather amazing that my country is little known to the people here. I have the impression that people associate Thailand with temples, canals, ancient palaces, the Thai classical dance, and perhaps Thai silk; these are typical things embedded in the minds of those who have visited Bangkok as tourists. Others may have only heard of Thailand through a Broadway play called The King and I or through a book called Anna and the King on which the play was based. Still others think of Thailand where one can find snakes and elephants roaming about the streets; except for the last three years, I have lived in Bangkok since my birth, but have failed to detect any such wild but would otherwise be exciting scene, except when I go to the Suan Sa-nuk, a zoo in Bangkok. The other day, I mentioned to someone that we have TV in Bangkok; I found, however, that the existence of TV did not sound convincing to some people, for they would immediately imagine that we put TV antennae on the top of temples—a thing that we would never dream of doing.

That Thailand is little known

may be accounted for by two factors. One perhaps is the lack of emphasis on the study of geography in schools here. The other is the significance of Thailand has as compared to that of Russia. Admittedly Thailand is not so important as Russia in her role in world affairs; certainly Moscow is better known than Bangkok. Should the Communists ever make a sudden attack on Thailand, the case that it is not likely in the foreseeable future, she would perhaps be better known.

It is a comforting thought that every year there is an appreciable number of tourists, mostly Americans, who come to Bangkok and other places in the Orient. Through guided tours, usually sponsored by tourist organizations, they see kinds of fascinating Oriental charms! This satisfies, in some explicable way, their sense of curiosity.

I wonder, however, how many people going to Singapore or Malaya would see more than the Merdeka Highway, the Jade Hill, the Rafael's Place, the Chin Alley, and perhaps some remnants of ancient architecture; or how many people going to India would more than the Taj Mahal or town of Benares; or how many people visiting Hawaii would more than the International Maui Camera Show and the Wailea Beach. Many tourists stopping in Hong Kong may have heard of the tragic exodus of refugees from Communist China to the British Colony. They may have expressed only their regret, yet nothing about the deplorable situation. Many would be so attracted by the so-called fascination of the Orient that they would hardly stop to wonder why in Malaya and Singapore, where the majority of people are Malays, Indians, Chinese, or in Hawaii where so many different races mingle, racial marshals are not necessary. The segregation in the South is tiffable or not, can never be reprehensible to foreigners.

I am glad that I have been able to have many interesting things to see and have come to this country not as a tourist, though certainly I am very much like to see some of the Indians and cowboys. (I have some drugstore cowboys!) I have said at the beginning, America is a great country, but the greater part of her still remains in a sense, unknown to me.

JAN 1 1963
Symposium Week is Test
For College and Students

By Fred A. Sondermann

The 1963 Symposium is almost upon us, and on behalf of all my colleagues among the students and faculty who have helped with the preparations and arrangements for this event, I welcome all members of the Colorado College community to its many and varied functions. Needless to say, those of us involved in planning the Symposium hope that we have put together a valuable and meaningful program. In the nature of things, one can never predict with absolute precision ahead of time how any given event will work out, or what the total impact of the program will be. All I can say, with confidence, is that the program has coherence and integrity. It deals with the important topic and focuses on an area of contemporary life with which very many of us, myself included, are not sufficiently acquainted. I, for one, look forward to being instructed during Symposium week and to come out of it with a far better understanding and appreciation than I have now of what contemporary art is all about and what it can mean to me. This is the entire purpose of the program. A college should be a true community of learning. Here is our chance to demonstrate that our own College can live up to that difficult role.

When we planned the Symposium, the first question was whether a College of our size and in our location could mount a major effort of this type; whether we could attract to our campus major figures in the American artistic and intellectual world. That question has been answered: the response from potential participants was astoundingly good, not to say enthusiastic. In fact, many were keenly disappointed that they could not be included. The second question was whether our facilities and our procedures would bear up under a program of this type, which is really unprecedented in scope for our campus. Here I am hopeful. I do know that 5 or 6 years ago, it would have seemed a far more difficult task to organize a series of events of this type than it does now. On the whole, I think we can look forward to a week which will run relatively smoothly, without major hitches or inconveniences.

Thirdly and finally, I feel that the Symposium is also an experiment with respect to the maturity of our students. We regard the Symposium as one of the great opportunities to experience what "liberal arts" means—the kind of education for which students have chosen Colorado College. If one considers the diploma at the end of four years merely as a record of forced achievement, or an amassment of grades, then the Symposium is not meaningful. For all other purposes which we usually associate with the term liberal education, it is meaningful in the extreme. American students often complain of being "regimented"—of being pushed, spoon-fed, checked too often and too closely. There is no regimentation during Symposium Week. It remains to be seen how well and wisely we manage to use the freedom which it gives us. We talk a great deal of such freedom, which must always involve freedom from compulsion to do this or that. But freedom from, however important it is, must be supplemented by our own definition of freedom for—by the demonstration that one knows how to use one's freedom of choice.

I hope that all of you—of us—will have one of the best and most memorable weeks in our careers at Colorado College.

Fred Sondermann,
Symposium Director

Professors Receive Grants from CC In Various Fields

Grants made available through funds provided by CC have been made to five of its professors. The recipients are Professor Lester A. Michel, chairman of the chemistry department; Lawrence I. Berkove of the English department; Professor Donald L. Herbert of the Physics department; James H. Emerson of the zoology department; and Neale Reinitz of the English department.

Professor Michel will use his grant to cover parts and construction costs for adapting existing pressure apparatus for measuring vapor pressures of organic liquids at an extremely low range.

Dr. Berkove will study the manuscripts of Ambrose Bierce in the libraries of San Francisco, which house the largest and most important collections of the famed American humorist's papers.

Professor Herbert will begin his project by designing a set of experiments to observe non-linear optical phenomena.

Professor Emerson is studying the breeding biology and winter populations of Prairie Falcons in the central Rocky Mountain region.

Professor Reinitz will be studying microfilm copies of the papers and drawings of James Gillray, an Eighteenth Century British cartoonist and the collaboration between Gillray and the circle behind the Anti-Jacobin, a British weekly of 1797-8 which was dedicated to attacking the ideals of the French Revolution, the policies of its alleged admirers, and the practices of the French Directory.

Power Wins Rhodes

CC POLITICAL SCIENCE MAJOR MAX POWER is congratulated on winning the Rhodes Scholarship to study at Oxford University in England. Show here from left are: Prof. Glenn Brooks, who has been Power's political science advisor; Power; Colorado College President Louis T. Benetz; and G. A. Cheney, Colorado Springs manager of Sears Roebuck, who was the principal speaker at a special luncheon for Power. During his four years at Colorado College, Power had been the recipient of a Sears Roebuck National Merit Scholarship.

Finishing a brilliant and active four years at Colorado College, senior Max Power has been awarded the Rhodes scholarship to study for two or more years at Oxford University in England. Max was one of thirty-two seniors in the United States, two from Colorado, who were chosen for excellent academic records and extracurricular activities. The Rhodes scholarship has usually been given to superior athlete-students. Joe Romig, Colorado University's All-American guard and Colorado's other Rhodes winner is typical in this respect. However, as Max has said, his sports endeavors are confined to ping-pong.

Max's academic accomplishments more than compensate for any lack of participation in the athletic field. He has been on the Dean's List since he entered CC as a National Merit scholar. At the end of his sophomore year he earned the two-year Perkins Prize for having the highest grades among the men students.

His activity in campus organizations is equally impressive. He has held the presidency of the debate club, the college division of the "Colorado Young Republicans" League, and Tau Kappa Alpha, honorary speech fraternity, in addition to being editor of the Tiger since 1961. He is a member of Blue Key and Honor Council, and is serving this year as president of the Associated Students of Colorado College. Max has brought clarity, superb organization, and an admirable grasp of what is often muddle and confusion into student political and committee work, maintaining all the while the highest academic standards.

Currently a political science major, Max will be studying philosophy, politics and economics at Oxford. He plans to enter law school or continue in the political science field with work toward a doctorate in the United States when he has completed his studies at Oxford.

Ormes Writes Book On Railroads in Colo.

Colorado College English professor Robert M. Ormes has written a new book on the romance of mountain railroading in Colorado. The book is scheduled for publication in June by Denver publisher Alan Swallow.

Professor Ormes has researched the four-hundred page still unprinted work by digging into old corporation files in the statehouse in Denver and tramping all over the state of Colorado tracing old rail tracks across the mountains.

The resulting work places heavy emphasis on the geography of railroading and will include dozens of maps and illustrations of the more than five hundred railroads in Colorado.

Professor Ormes, who earned his bachelor and master of arts degrees at Colorado College, has been on the faculty since 1950 and is also the author of Guide to Colorado Mountains and Pikes Peak Atlas.

The Third Annual Symposium at Colorado College has been expanded into a full week of the academic calendar. It is the first Symposium to occupy our entire time, taking the place of regular classes, laboratories, and other academic activities. We believe it should be a useful exercise for students and faculty to spend a week together with distinguished guests invited for their special competence, talking together about some matters of our society. Often we wish for more time to do this kind of informal mutual education; we complain of the pressure of the academic schedule and sigh for freedom in order to share ideas and experiences together in more leisurely fashion. The 1963 Symposium will give us that opportunity.

The topic, "The Contemporary Arts and the Citizen," could hardly offer a wider range for intellectual and cultural ideas, as well as for the presentation of the best in various art forms.

On the basis of our 1963 Symposium we will hope to plan continuing events of this nature each year.

It is our hope also that many fellow citizens of our own community will come and join us in the spirit of informal adult education for which a college like ours should be a continual source of refreshment.

President

Purpose and Policy

With a new editorial board and staff, the Tiger wishes to state its purposes and editorial policies for the coming semester.

The Tiger is the official news medium of the Colorado College campus and students should use it as such. But in addition to reporting on campus activities and events, the Tiger will be an organ of opinion and discussion. There are several events and issues (i.e. the Symposium) within the Colorado College community that need expression. Also are countless numbers of questions beyond the CC campus in our community, our nation, and our world that are an integral part of our lives. A discussion and evaluation of such ideas, events, and issues should be an essential and active part of a student's education.

The Tiger encourages any student who has the desire and ability to contribute to a college weekly to join its staff. Reporters, columnists, typists, layout assistants, copy readers, a political cartoonist, and advertising assistants are asked to participate in the CC weekly publication. Those students interested in the technical operations of the Tiger should see Caroline Creyke (Managing Editor) or Mary Jo Wagner (Copy Editor). Others interested in writing and reporting should contact Sue Caudill (News Editor), Jim Fox, or John Giannes (co-Feature Editors).

Certain editorial policies must be stated:

- 1) The editorial column is reserved for only members of the Tiger editorial board.
- 2) A new column has been initiated entitled "Opinion." This column is open to any student, faculty member, or administrative member who feels need to express an opinion in an editorial form. The column will appear on the editorial page at the discretion of the editorial board. The "Opinion" does not necessarily reflect the opinion of the editorial board.
- 3) "From the Chair" is a column reserved for the President of ASCC or any member of that governing body who wishes to express an opinion. This view does not necessarily have to represent the majority opinion of the governing body.
- 4) "Letters to the Editor" on any subject are welcome. However, the editorial board has the right to withhold letters on grounds of taste and space. All letters must be signed, although the name of the author may be withheld on request.
- 5) All news, feature, and special articles must be submitted before 4 P.M. on Monday. Exceptions will only be accepted if discussed prior to the deadline with the editors.

Anyone who has been connected with the Symposium has had to be impressed by the immense effort that it entailed to organize and carry out the diverse details that are always present in an operation of such size. It would be easy enough now to congratulate Dr. Sonderman and all the members of his talented committee for a job well done; however, there is only one meaningful way to show our appreciation—and that is to show up in large numbers at the various programs.

In other schools the student body is usually trapped on campus when there is a function such as the Symposium to be held, for they are usually scheduled during the regular semester. When this happens there is an inevitable clash between academic necessity and intellectual interest in the special event. This problem has been avoided by our new semester system, but there still remains another clash for many: The call of the slopes. But before you give in to this urge look again at the Symposium program and consider Marshall Sprague's statement that, "It (the Symposium) is the most important thing in the cultural field that has ever happened here."

Remember that a program which takes so much time and effort cannot be continued without support. If it does succeed this year it is likely that the Symposium will take on an ever growing prestige, making it possible to bring the most stimulating people in many fields to our campus. If it does not succeed, however, it is likely that we will have isolated ourselves by our own actions from one outlet of contact to the living intellectual community.

Poet-Critic Featured

By Jim Searboro

Featured in the literary section of this week's symposium is Karl Shapiro, renowned as both a contemporary poet and critic. The author of numerous volumes of poetry and the recipient of half a dozen national poetry prizes, Mr. Shapiro is regarded as one of the nation's foremost literary figures.

Mr. Shapiro has adroitly managed to combine a public and private career. His emergence as a prominent figure in both areas can be traced to his student-days at the University of Virginia. There he reached his first real, if rather inconspicuous, crisis. His academic standing had fallen, largely because of his private literary interests, and he decided to leave the University to study on his own. During this period he wrote many long poems and plays in verse, most of which he destroyed. A few short poems survived this incubation and were published in a volume entitled Poems.

Following a period of odd-jobs, Shapiro received a scholarship to Johns Hopkins and studied there for two years; then, lacking the funds to continue, he worked in a library until he was drafted in March, 1941. It was during the war that the poet's first successful creative outburst occurred. Between 1941 and 1945 he published four books: Person, Place and Thing; V-Letter and Other Poems; The Place of Love and Essay on Rime. This last work marks Shapiro's entrance into the ranks of poet-critic and theorist. As he himself has said about the book: "It is a critique of modern poetry, written in blank verse . . . By and large, the essay is a comment on the pretentiousness of modern poetry vis-a-vis its myth-making, its self-consciousness about history and culture, and its technique of symbolism and metaphysics. The book was widely acclaimed on the whole, but it aroused the enmity of the literary avant-garde—as, in fact, it was calculated to do."

In 1947, after living a year in Connecticut, Mr. Shapiro was appointed to the Library of Congress as Consultant in Poetry. The following year he joined the staff at Johns Hopkins as a lecturer. Trial of a Poet was published in 1947 and continued a dialogue about the plight of the poet who comes into conflict with society. In 1950 Mr. Shapiro edited Poetry. A Magazine of Verse in Chicago and taught creative classes at Loyola University and later at the University of Iowa. In 1952 he lectured in Austria at the Salzburg Seminar in American Studies. In 1953 he delivered a series of lectures at the University of Nebraska which were published as a book entitled Beyond Criticism. In Mr. Shapiro's words: "These lectures elaborate the thesis of Essay on Rime and fix as the two chief schools of modernism which seem to me deleterious: Myth and Historic Poets, the one using poetry to substitute religion and the other its social propaganda in opposition to this I posit 'human' poetry, or poetry which is the fullest expression of personality."

Mr. Shapiro does not lack favorable comments about his poetry. In 1941, when a group of his poems appeared in New Directions' Five Young American Poets, he was hailed as one of the most interesting of the younger American poets. Louise Bogan predicted at that time that "His work will become a sort of touchstone for his generation." Conrad Aiken said of

V-Letter: "Shapiro thinks with his feelings, thinks with his imagination, and the result is a curious and delightful poetic analysis or criticism of the given theme." Stephen Spender, while detecting in his verse "elements of crudeness and insensibility which make him vulnerable to the purist approach," nevertheless concluded that "he is a poet of rare intellectual strength, who has an exceptional power of being able to think of a poem as a single idea." In reviewing Poems, 1950-1953, Babette Deutsch commented: "His interest in his immediate surroundings, together with his verbal facility, set him apart from those of his fellows who stand in the street damning a disjointed world, and apart, too, from those spinning word-webs in an ivory corner of a prefabricated tower. Yet he is actually conscious of the predicament of the poet in our time, and has written about it repeatedly."

Early in 1955 Shapiro went to the University of California at Berkeley on a teaching assignment, still retaining his title as editor of Poetry. Since 1956 he has been a professor of English at the University of Nebraska and editor of Prairie Schooner, a quality magazine. His job as editor of the "little magazine" is primary to help young creative writers. The poet defines a "little magazine" as "a deficit publication with a circulation too small to explain its existence; what it prints has no public appeal although most of the finest modern authors have been brought to light by this unique medium of publications."

The public may not need the "little magazine," Shapiro says, but "the writers and publishers do. The little magazine is a means, not an end. It still is virtually the only vehicle for introducing new writing. It is still the only workshop where literary standards are shaped. Modern Literature would be inconceivable without it."

Mr. Shapiro's discussion of his poetry is highly recommended. He is likely to mentioned poetic theory and hopeful comment upon himself and his contemporaries. He should prove to be a campaigner and a highly opinionated one. For example he entirely rejects the poetry of T.S. Eliot and Ezra Pound. He claims that Henry Miller is the greatest living novelist. He denounces what he calls the "inhibited sexuality" of James Joyce on the grounds that it is hamstrung by "moral tension. For all those interested in what should be a controversial discussion, Shapiro deserves top-billing. Recommended readings are: volume of later poetry, Essay on Rime and the poet's major contribution to modern criticism, In Defense of Ignorance.

Author's Characters Not Unified by Goal Or Common Purpose

By James Fox

"Even the most fastidious dresser sometimes puts on a pair of blue undershorts with a brown jacket—the Duke of Windsor himself has no doubt been guilty of such a lapse—but not Stanley."

James Yaffe comments ironically on the fastidious dressing habits of Stanley Margolies, the title character of his most recent book Mister Margolies, which may be obtained from the symposium collection in Tutt Library. Stanley, a late middle aged executive in Fishbel's Fine Footwear, is a member of Yaffe's society of upper-middle-class urban American Jews, who, in Yaffe's words, "are unified by no symbolic thread, no common theme or purpose, no particular goal or theory—by nothing, in fact, but my desire to write about people as I see them."

In his lecture on "The Contemporary Novelist and His Audience" on Wednesday morning at 10:30, Mr. Yaffe may explain why he feels that this desire "is the only legitimate concern of a writer who is really serious about his work."

The young novelist, a native of Chicago, was educated at Fieldston School and Yale University where he earned a bachelor of arts degree in literature in 1948.

Mr. Yaffe, 35, launched his literary career at the age of 15 when he sold a detective short story to Ellery Queen's Mystery Magazine and has been writing regularly since 1949 for such magazines as Esquire, Atlantic Monthly, Ladies Home Journal and Commentary. His television plays have been produced on the U.S. Steel Hour, Studio One, The Elgin Hour, and Frontiers of Faith.

This Symposium participant is a bachelor in New York City whose favorite recreation is music—especially opera. Reading detective stories is his "favorite harmless habit." Why not when you are published Mickey Spillane at 15?

Plight of Modern Man Presented in "Zoo Story"

By Norman Colbert

On Saturday, January 19, at 7:30 P.M., Symposium Week will be concluded by the production of Edward Albee's "The Zoo Story" in Perkins Hall. The director, William McMillen, and the players, James Fox and John Giannes, deserve our applause in advance for daring to present such a progressive play, the first of Mr. Albee, whose subsequent work—notably the plays, "The American Dream" and "Who's Afraid of Virginia Woolf?"—has made him America's most promising young playwright.

Its premiere took place, oddly enough, at the Schiller Theater Werkstatt in Berlin, September 28, 1959, due to the reluctance of producers in New York to gamble on a short play by a little-known author. Because of its success there, it received American production in January of the following year, off Broadway, at the Provincetown Playhouse and was acclaimed as the most provocative play of the season.

Being a play in one scene with a cast of two, its plot is necessarily uncomplicated: Jerry, the outcast, strikes up conversation with Peter, bourgeois conformist, and provokes him into committing an act of violence. But no matter how uninvolved the action, "The Zoo Story" is not a simple play, for its theme, the absurdity of the condition of man, perhaps the dominate literary theme of our century, is highly complex.

The use of the term "absurd" may be misleading. Commonly used today to signify the laughably illogical or the ridiculous, it was originally a musical term meaning "out of harmony." However "absurdity" in context of the modern theatre is greater than either of these: as Ionesco defined the term in an essay of Kafka, "Absurd is that which is devoid of purpose . . . Cut off from his religious, metaphysical, and transcendental roots, man is lost; all his actions become senseless, absurd, useless."

The painful awareness of this, the plight of modern man, is Jerry's distinguishing trait, or rather, it is Jerry. Obsessed by the necessity of learning to communicate somehow with something, but unable to establish a satisfactory relationship even with a dog, he visits the zoo "to find out more about the way people exist with animals, and the way animals exist with each other, and with people too." He is not, however, emotionally stable enough to bear what he discovers there and feels compelled to seek out Peter, who is more mature but less aware, and to impart to him his new knowledge. It is possible that the outcome of this interaction of two incomplete sensibilities is their combination to produce one total mind.

Martin Esslin, who discusses Albee in The Theatre of the Absurd, considers the play marred by a rather melodramatic climax followed by a sentimental conclusion. There is some of truth in this observation, and much theoretical expertise will be required of Messrs. McMillen, Fox, and Giannes to prevent Saturday night's audience from leaving the theatre similarly displeased. The trio is however highly capable (Mr. McMillen heading the Drama Department, Fox leading the student-run Experimental Theatre, and Giannes being distinguished through his outstanding work in many productions), and we trust that they will succeed in avoiding this hazard.

Quartet Features Variety of Music

By Barbara Morgan

The members of the Claremont Quartet are all musicians with considerable experience and proficiency in chamber music, who consider the Quartet to be the group of musicians with which they are most compatible in producing a fine ensemble. Each of the four members of the quartet has followed a professional career of both solo and ensemble playing and has chosen to concentrate on the playing of string quartets.

Marc Gottlieb, first violinist, was born in Leipzig, Germany, and was a student of Louis Persinger at the Juilliard School of Music. He began his career as a soloist, performing at Pines Hall, Town Hall, and McMillen Theater. He played with the Deagan and Baroque String Quartets before the Claremont Quartet was organized. Mr. Gottlieb is also a composer and an enthusiast of progressive jazz.

Vladimir Weisman, second violinist, is a native of New York City and studied with Rafael Bronstein and Naoum Blinder. He made his debut as a soloist in Town Hall at the age of sixteen. His professional career has included orchestral playing with the Indianapolis and St. Louis Symphonies.

William Schoen, violist, was born in Czechoslovakia and was raised in Cleveland, Ohio. Mr. Schoen is a graduate of Eastman School of Music. He was first violist of the CBS Symphony and has played with the Allergo Chamber Ensemble and several string quartets.

Irving Klein, cellist, is a native of Cleveland, Ohio. He studied with Frank Miller under a New York Philharmonic scholarship and with Emanuel Feuermann. Mr. Klein's professional experience includes orchestral playing with the Pittsburgh and CBS Symphonies and chamber music with various groups.

Mr. Schoen and Mr. Klein played together as high school students in a prize-winning quartet, in the Stokowski Youth Orchestra, and again later in the Novelle and Hollander Quartets. Mr. Gottlieb and Mr. Weisman were classmates in elementary and high school in New York City and also played together while they were students. After following separate professional careers the four chanced to play together at an informal musicale, discovered their affinity as an ensemble, and formed the Claremont Quartet.

The Claremont Quartet has developed a very broad repertoire, including many contemporary works as well as the traditional works of the classic and romantic periods. The quartet has premiered many string quartets, including works of Shostakovich, Aurelio de la Vega, Mel Powell, and Gustavo Becerra. The group states that they attempt to perform each work with an understanding of the historical, emotional, and intellectual contexts of the work and the composer. Each player studies the life of the composer, events at the time of writing, and the historical and social background of the period in addition to the music itself.

The Claremont Quartet has been recorded for Music Guild Records, Lyricord, and the American Society.

Renaissance Music Popular States Seay in Guide Lines

Colorado College music Prof. Albert Seay, who says Renaissance choral works are becoming increasingly popular, has laid down a series of guide lines for choral directors faced with the tough problem of editing works from this period.

Writing in the December issue of The Colorado Music Educator, Professor Seay notes that "there are many problems of performance that seem to forbid too much exploration and, for the most part, we are content to stick to the tried and true repertoire, the handful of works that has always appeared on choral programs and which has often been recorded by professional organizations."

For the average choral group, there is little music written before 1450 or so that is possible for them, he said and noted that the high school director would do well to restrict his attention to works coming after this date, with particular attention to those of the great period between 1500 and 1600.

Professor Seay, a leading musicologist, recently returned from Italy where he spent a year doing research under a Guggenheim Fellowship for a new book on the history of Italian music theory in the 14th and 15th centuries.

The musicologist, who holds a Ph.D. from Yale University, joined the faculty at Colorado College in 1953. During the 1956-57 academic year he was a Fulbright scholar in Italy.

In his outline of criteria for preparing a modern edition of Renaissance works, he pointed out that the clarity of notation is extremely important.

"Music of this era was generally written in note values other than those normally seen today," he said, "Certain of the editors of the nineteenth century do nothing about this and reprint the exact values as they originally appeared. This has led to the inclusion of measures containing three whole notes, suggesting both that they should be performed quite slowly and also causing problems in the reading of unfamiliar groups of values."

"A second point to observe is the presence or not of an acceptable translation, for, whether we like it or not, we must normally perform works in English: this English must be understandable, literate and vocally and rhythmically equal to the music which goes with it. These should be some attempt made on the part of the translator to reproduce the original rhythmic values of the various syllables, without distortion of the musical feel of the words. There can be no reduction or addition to the number of syllables in the lines of the original: the basic text having, say, 10 syllables in its line,

Sprague To Come

Marshall Sprague, leading chronicler of Colorado's colorful past will interrupt work on a book he began five years ago in order to participate in the CC Symposium.

Along with novelist, James Yaffe; mystery writer, Lillian de la Torre; and history Professor William Hochman, Sprague will participate in a discussion on "The Contemporary Novelist and His Audience" at 10:30 Wed., January 16 in the Tutt Atrium.

Talking about the forthcoming symposium, Sprague said, "I think it is a very stimulating thing for the life of the town to have these people coming in to talk about current developments in the arts. It is the most important thing in the cultural field that has ever happened here."

A former newspaperman, Sprague roomed the world looking for stories for the New York Sunday Times, the Paris edition of the New York Herald Tribune and the North China Star before he settled in Colorado Springs in 1941. In the years since, he has been writing books and magazine articles. Among his books are The Business of Getting Well, Money Mountain, the story of Cripple Creek gold; Massacre, the tragedy at White River; and Newport in the Rockies, the life and good times of Colorado Springs.

His current work, The Great Gates, scheduled to be published by Little Brown and Company next year is the history of the 700 major mountain passes in the Rockies from New Mexico to Alberta, Canada.

The book, which is the only one of its kind ever to be written, will be illustrated with maps, photographs, and drawings, some of them dating back more than 100 years.

The translation too should have the same number, with the same rhythmic significance.

"Finally, one should note what kind of suggestions are given to the performer, particularly those of tempo and dynamics, for these are only suggestions, after all; the original source only implies the speed and the dynamics are always a personal additions, to be used or modified at the discretion of the conductor and his knowledge of the performance practice of the period."

Although Inaccurate Greenberg Unassailable

By Bernard Arnest

After the war I was living in New York City, and it was there that I read Partisan Review for the first time. Partisan Review was the best critical, cultural and literary magazine of the period and in it (among many other wonderful things such as Camus' "The Myth of Sisyphe") I found essays on art by Clement Greenberg. These were, and are still, tremendously informed, imaginative, and clearly written. But the unaffected, precise style and the rich substance were impressive—but any one who wishes to read the works for himself Greenberg's new book. What want to describe are later experiences with one of his essays and with him.

Around 1950 Greenberg published in Partisan Review, a comment on the work of Jean Dubuffet, a French painter who had become a suspicious success. But at that time Dubuffet was fairly new and un-recognized. Greenberg began his article saying that Dubuffet was probably the most important living painter. Then he proceeded to give his reasons for believing it. This was too much and, enraged, set out to write a rebuttal.

Like any one bent on verbal combat with a paper enemy began by probing with a sharp pencil for the weak spots in his lines. First, underlinings. He had there a short, marginal, trenchant, trenchant, hit-and-run. Then still full of righteous energy I outlined my attack. But when began to draft the final form my argument I also began to realize that somehow Greenberg was unassailable. Although he was wrong about Dubuffet he thought and wrote so well and thoroughly that I could not shake his reasoning. I called the whole thing of Greenberg never knew that, without even trying, he had won a war—or at least a skirmish.

A year or two later I met him and learned that he not only acute mind but a generous spirit. That story is too long for telling here but I have reason to believe that Clement Greenberg is incapable of holding a hard opinion of anyone he personally knows. He finds it difficult even to be critical of critics. I also learned that he no longer held the opinion that I had no longer held. Dubuffet that I had so vainly tried to counter. But, in any case I had given up trying to refute Greenberg.

Schuller Sways Music

By Bruce Colvin

In his Downbeat "Out of My Head" column, the frenetic George Crater once printed a probing set of jazz-related interrogatories . . . his answer to the Gallup Poll and "Twenty Questions." Included in this multiple-choice questionnaire were such notable problems as:

1. Julian Adler weighs approximately (a) 2 Paul Desmonds (b) 1 Stan Getz and a Victor Fieldman (c) 1/2 a Jimmy Rushing
2. Symphony Sid is (a) a brand of pegged pants (b) a street-corner violinist (c) a new ice cream pop
3. Ina Ray Hutton is famous for (a) a party she threw in 1947 (b) her recipe for rice pudding and noodles (c) not playing better with a Selmer
4. Gunter Schuller is a (a) horn player (b) brand of shotgun (c) dress designed of the 1920's
5. Of the three, I think the best drummer is (a) Jackie Cooper (b) Garry Moore (c) Mickey Rooney

The correct answers for these excerpts are, of course obvious. For example . . . statistics prove that also sax man Julian "Cannonball" Adler currently outweighs any of the three combinations (a, b, or c). And, needless to say, question number five depends upon one's particular taste in peculiar drummers (although I've heard that Wally Cox cuts them all). But why . . . in reference to number four . . . who (or what) is Gunter Schuller?

According to The New Yorker (traditionally a bit more serious than Mr. Crater), Gunter Schuller is a nonagonal form. And the nonagonal form is this very special case happens to be an energetic young man who has achieved at least nine latitudes of prominence in the field of contemporary music. Animated and fluent in verbal communication, Schuller has proven his first talent in musical communication and has undertaken with equal verve the various other interconnected activities that have been intermittently popping into his already very busy life: at thirty-seven, Schuller's imagination is freshly projecting new bypaths for his enterprise, and the total bulk of the ventures seems only to further stimulate his vigor and enthusiasm.

The multiple faces of the Schuller nonagon are well sculptured by his activities as French horn artist, lecturer, composer of classical and Third Stream works, editor of the Modern Jazz Quartet's music publishing firm, conductor, teacher of music composition and horn, author, radio music commentator, and music critic.

The son of a violinist with the New York Philharmonic Orchestra, Schuller's earliest years revolved around music; at sixteen he was a professional musician, playing French horn with the Ballet Theatre Orchestra. One year later he joined the Cincinnati Symphony and had gained a reputation as a talented composer before he reached twenty, when he left Cincinnati to begin a fourteen year stay with the Metropolitan Opera Orchestra. While still in Cincinnati he heard Duke Ellington for the first time, and stimulated by this experience he began developing what is now a remarkable knowledge of jazz. In 1959 he resigned from his first chair position in the French horn section of the Metropolitan Opera Orchestra to devote all of his time to the numerous expanding phases of his career, focusing especially on composition, writing, and teaching.

Schuller's ability to speak with ease and authority on the musical forms of both jazz and classical works has made him a rare and valuable figure, as teacher and composer alike. Ever since Bix Beiderbecke's preoccupation with the music of Debussy, jazz has owed at least a bit to particular nonjazz forms. Today, the accomplishments of such men as Bill Evans and Dave Brubeck reflect an influence of classical composers, and the current avant-garde movement in jazz (referring especially to the activities of Charlie Mingus, Cecil Taylor, Ornette Coleman, George Russell, Eric Dolphy, and Don Ellis) is partially built upon melodic techniques having roots in advancements made by contemporary classical music. Ornette Coleman is one of a number of serious young jazzmen who have studied advanced music theory with Gunter Schuller, and Schuller's influence as a teacher has been further exerted through his membership in the faculty of the School of Jazz in Lenox, Massachusetts (directed by the Modern Jazz Quartet's John Lewis) in the late 1950's.

As early as the mid-fifties, Schuller began composing works combining characteristics of contemporary classical music and jazz, efforts that would now be immediately pinned with the label "Third Stream." As Schuller and other major proponents of Third Stream music would be the first to point out, these composition . . . the current experiments blending jazz and classical techniques . . . have no relationship whatsoever, in either purpose or actual form, to the abortive "swinging symphonies" of Paul Whiteman and his misguided constituents, to George Gershwin, or to the current routine (that so many jazzmen have fallen to) of pairing soloist with a large, syrupy string section. Perhaps, when viewing the past, the Ebony Concerto that Igor Stravinsky wrote for Woody Herman in 1946 comes closest to the Third Streamers' aims, but even this was much less than a total success in the eyes of either jazz or classical camp. Today's Third Stream experiments are founded upon a deeper understanding of the essence of classical and jazz forms. Schuller's classical compositions, which include pieces for a variety of chamber groups as well as orchestral works, have been internationally recognized, and through these his fluency in expressing himself in the contemporary classical idiom has been quite effectively demonstrated. In Third Stream composition, Schuller is attempting to utilize the more complex compositional techniques of Western classical music in conjunction with the spontaneity and rhythmic vitality of jazz improvisation. Of the several challenging problems raised by this approach, the most demanding is the necessity for the composer and performer to create with each other's musical personality in mind. The performance is consequently the sum of what is very much a combined effort. Schuller has often worked closely in his Third Stream ventures, as in other fields, with the leader of the Modern Jazz Quartet, John Lewis.

As was briefly indicated earlier in this article, Schuller's influence and activity is hardly confined only to composition and teaching (as if these two were mean accomplishments). As director and musical consultant of the 1961 Monterey Jazz Festival, he guided one of the very few of such events that rose above the category of jazz circus; Monterey was in fact an artistic success, with a great deal of credit due to the leadership of Schuller. In late 1961 he spent several weeks dashing about Europe searching for foreign talent for the first International Jazz Festival, held in Washington, D.C.; this was only a secondary task for his trip, for he first attended the world premiere of one of his latest classical compositions, given at the Donaueschingen Festival in Germany. Schuller was commissioned by the 1962 International Jazz Festival to compose a work in conjunction with a narrative by jazz writer Nat Hentoff; presented under the title "Journey to Jazz," this is one of a growing number of Schuller's work especially commissioned by individual institutions (the Donaueschingen composition also fits in this category). In December of 1962 he appeared in a concert sponsored by and held at the University of Chicago, presenting a program featuring compositions illustrating the fusion of classical music with certain distinct, supposedly alien elements. Schuller was the conductor of the ensemble, a role that he has frequently filled for a number of years. As a writer, he can claim a number of magazine articles and essays appearing in several books, and has recently completed two books of his own: one a large, ambitious analysis of the foundations of jazz, and the other a book on French horn theory. Schuller has also been active as a music critic of both classical forms and jazz.

These reflections on the activities of Gunter Schuller are far from any all-encompassing view; rather than apologize for the aspects that this may have failed to cover, it seems more natural for me simply to gape at the speed with which he moves through the scope of his accomplishments . . . this makes him rather difficult to trace.

Babbitt Leader in Serial Music With Organization of Non-Pitch

By Joe Wilcox

Milton Babbitt is among the few American composers who became identified with the serial movement before World War II. He is a representative of that branch of serialism which interests itself in total organization of non-pitch, as well as pitch, elements of music. This approach requires strict pre-compositional definition of all the basic sets of elements to be used and of the operations under which they are to be transformed. Babbitt's theoretical writings have been influential in recent explorations of the possibilities of serial techniques.

Presently Professor of Music at Princeton and a member of the Committee of Direction of the Electronic Music Center of Columbia and Princeton Universities, Babbitt has also taught at Tanglewood and at the Salzburg Seminar in American Studies (1952). He is a winner of the Joseph Burns Prize (1942), the New York Critics' Circle Citation (1949), Award of the National Institute of Arts and Letters (1959), a Guggenheim Fellowship (1960-61), and a Ford Foundation Commission (1962).

Babbitt's compositions have received little enough performance in the United States, South America, and Europe and among his works now available on record are

'Du,' 'Composition for 12 Instruments,' 'Composition for Viola and Piano,' and 'Composition for Four Instruments.'

Whiting Brings Elements Of Integrity to Drama

By Jean McMillin

You are a man with a dream. As director of the theatre department in a large university you have cherished the hope of producing, on the university stage, your version of Shakespeare's King Lear. Now the dream verges on reality. On the basis of prior friendship and mutual admiration a professor from a distant university has been persuaded to accept a post in your department as guest lecturer for a nine month term, in order to play the leading role. He arrives on campus with his wife and five children, only to discover that, due to a post-war housing shortage, no accommodation is available for his family. Faced with the annihilation of your dream you take him into your own home. The only problem is that you also have a wife and five children and so, for a period of nine months, a house built for seven absorbs a "family" of fourteen, ten of them youngsters under twelve years of age.

Dr. Frank Whiting's solution to the above dilemma has become legend on the campus at the University of Minnesota, but I can vouch for it—because I was there when it happened! It is perhaps a tribute to the Mormon background of both families that they emerged from the ordeal with friendship unscathed.

The dream of producing King Lear was, however, only a part of a larger dedication—that of recapturing for drama a respected place in the academic curriculum as a purveyor of historical, political, philosophical, social and artistic implications of a given period and as a common meeting ground for the interrelationship of the various subjects of a college program.

The concept of drama as a poor professional schoolchild, or as a form of literature for classroom consumption only, is to Dr. Whiting the rankiest form of heresy. He believes that the written script is to the final production as the architect's blueprint is to the completed edifice; and anyone who has ever witnessed a play directed by "Doc" Whiting will return to the printed page and re-read it with awe, remembering the activity, the life and the meaning conjured out of it by the director who works with knowledge, integrity and comprehension. From the deep well-springs of his understanding for humanity he brings his characters to life in the environment of their time, transporting us in turn from the great symphonic ecstasy of the Greek classicists through the bawdy, poetic outpourings of the Elizabethans, the simpering euphemisms of the comedy of manners, the shallows of the romanticists, the psychological turmoil of the impressionists, to the starkness of the realists. In each period the literature, history, philosophy, religion, art, drama, dance and music blend with the political and sociological factors, to provide us with a focal point for the interdependence of the various fields of learning.

In his brief tenure of twelve years as director of the university theatre, Dr. Whiting has done more, perhaps, than any other leader in his field to probe the academic and cultural implications of educational drama. A fine new theatre rising on the university campus presents skillfully directed plays to enthusiastic audiences. During the summer months a renovated Mississippi showboat attracts thousands of tourists to university-directed productions. A touring group which once confined itself to the state of Minnesota now ranges as far afield as South America and Europe. Viewers of the recent telecast on the prospective National Cultural Center in Washington, D.C., may have caught a glimpse of the Whiting-directed Rip Van Winkle rising with rusted gun from his bed of leaves.

As playwright, author, designer, director and teacher, "Doc" brings to each the elements of a personality inquisitive and acquisitive, combining technical skill and artistic integrity with the unique capacity for engendering enthusiasm, devotion and a desire for knowledge in the students who graduate under his direction.

Facilities for Showing Films Are Inadequate for College

Bill Pence has said that he believes that the films and the facilities for showing films in Colorado Springs are inadequate for the city and particularly for the college. Lieutenant Pence is well qualified, by experience and education, to make such a criticism. He is a graduate of the Carnegie Institute of Technology with a BS degree in graphic arts and theatre management. While in college, Bill Pence founded and for three years was president of the college's Film Art Society (now the largest collegiate film club in the country), he was president and producer of the Scotch 'n Soda Club, called by Variety, "America's top collegiate musical," and was editor of the campus newspaper.

Lieutenant Pence has managed theatres since high school and following graduation from college he founded Film Arts Enterprises, Inc., a corporation which owned and operated a chain of theatres in Pennsylvania and West Virginia and which distributed "art films" to college town theatres in the East. He is currently photographic officer with Ent Air Force Base and in his spare time books, buys, and schedules films for several film societies on the east coast. On January 17, at 3:30 p. m. Bill Pence will speak on "Trends in Contemporary Cinema."

Week Has Choice Films

The films for Symposium this year are diversified films which have won wide acclaim and recognition. "The Roots" is an episodic Mexican film made in 1952. It has attracted great deal of attention and interest as one of the finest short films to be made in the 50's. The film, "Have I Told You Lately That I Love You?" has been made by a group of UCLA grad students and concerns the lack of communication between human beings. There are two players, a man and his wife, and the time involved is a day in their lives in which they do not speak to each other though they may be in the same room or even at the same table.

Tony Richardson, of "Saturday Night and Sunday Morning" fame, is involved in the direction of "Mama Don't Allow." Those who have seen and appreciated "Saturday Night and Sunday Morning" will notice some similarity in technique and style in this interesting short.

"Moonbirds" is a cartoon short in which the directors have recorded an unheard dialogue between children 2 and 4 years old and set this to animated cartoon characters. Another humorous short "Pow Wow" involves camera tricks with the Minnesota Marching Band.

"Kali Nihta Socrates" (which is Greek, and means Good Night Socrates) is a film which critic Richard Christiansen says "contains so much vitality that it fairly bursts from the screen." Although concerned with the death of a Chicago neighborhood and containing many scenes of ugliness in the city this film is filled with beauty and tenderness. It was made by two 22 year old Northwestern Graduate Students who used their exceptional creative talent and insight to capture first prize in the Midwest Film Festival and first place in the narrative short division in the Venice Film Festival. Except for off screen variation, the film is non-verbal, although various sounds of life are used to great effect, along with a lovely musical score, throughout the 35 minute film. The story tells what happens when a family of three receive an eviction notice during the 40 days of Lent. The eviction notice is a part of the urban renewal displacement program on the traditionally old world, close-knit "Greek towns" of Chicago's West Side.

As an added attraction, the film committee may have a short concerning Jean Tinguely and his painting machine. Tinguely is famous for his "self-destroying" machines, one of which almost destroyed The Museum of Modern Art as well. This should prove to be a valuable and interesting sequel to the speeches and demonstrations by Raymond Auger.

The major film attraction for the week will be the French film "Last Year at Marienbad," which is directed by Alain Resnais. "Last Year at Marienbad" is one of the most important films of recent years. It is important in that it is the culmination and the epitome of a series of films in which the story is not the most important element. In this kind of film, the director deliberately chooses a weak and often fantastical story, with which he takes liberties in order to express his interpretation of life.

The film tells the story (which the viewer may not understand the first time) of a man, X, who fell in love with A in a luxury hotel last year in Marienbad. She is assumed to be married to M, whom she does not love but whom she fears to leave because of her own security and because of a basic distrust and wariness of freedom. When X returns to Marienbad after one year to claim her, she at first denies any memory of an affair with him last year, but finally, under his persuasion, she agrees to leave M and he life formal security with X, and he into a life of freedom with her "forever."

The direction of the film is perfection itself, the photography and sets are magnificent, and the acting is superb, particularly on the part of Delphine Seyrig, who has great facial expression and movement especially when she augments her sparse dialogue. Alain Resnais earned fame as a "genius" with his beautiful film "Hiroshima mon Amour."

On Thursday, January 17, there will be a critique and discussion led by Mr. Elmer Peterson and including Mr. Johns and Mr. Shearn from the Psychology Department. Mr. Adams from the English Department, Bill Pence who will speak on "Trends in Contemporary Cinema," and possibly Richard Christiansen, Chicago Film Critic.

Smith Given Prominence In Ross Guitar Memoirs

By Thomas Ross

When I was growing up, we used to call it "single-string" guitar; the guitar-player in a dance-band would occasionally take a solo, using his pick on a single string and thus playing an improvised melody. But this didn't happen very often. In the first place, bands seldom had a guitar-player; to be sure, when he was there, there were four men in the rhythm section: bass, piano, drums, and the fellow who strummed (rarely picked) the "box." It was nice to have him around, since he might be asked to keep the drummer from speeding tempos, but that was about all and people usually couldn't afford this extra man.

On some of the old records from the 20's people like Eddie Lang sometimes took solos on their amplified guitars, but this was in the little studios where you could hold the big horn up to its instrument in order to catch the audible sound. Django Reinhardt could be heard too but I'm afraid that we thought of him as a real jazz crazy gypsy without the usual number of fingers who played with you turn with Stephen Grappelli who we knew wasn't a real jazz instrument as Joe Venuti and demonstrated convincingly.

We were wrong of course about these musicians but we thought that jazz was played by bands with four saxes three trumpets, two trombones, and four rhythm. This was the make-up of Benny Goodman's band, and when improvisation was made, it was performed on the clarinet, the tenor saxophone, or the trumpet, with only rare exceptions.

We were wrong about this too. Paradoxically, it was Benny Goodman who brought the guitar into its own. There is an old all-star record from about 1937 on which his rhythm guitarist, Carmen Mastretta, played a stirring solo, but about 1939 he brought in a young Negro guitarist who amplified his instrument electronically and played with Goodman's small group, the sextet. Charlie Christian was his name, and he played the instrument—on the "single-string"—as if it had been made for jazz: the guitar sounded like a trumpet or a clarinet or a tenor saxophone when Charlie took a chorus of improvisation.

Charlie Christian knew a lot about harmony, as most guitar-players are forced to do; he experimented with the relationship between his melodies and the basic harmonies of the (usually banal) jazz tunes and created something startling and arresting. But as one looks back now, it is apparent that Charlie was not a true master of his instrument, though he blazed a path in improvisation which is still being followed by progressive jazz players.

We had to wait until after the war to hear what the guitar could really do in a jazz group. There was a young NBC musician with the name of Nat King Cole (Alabama and Maine where he played in cowboy outfits, complete with the big hat and boots) who began to be heard and to record. It was in 1952, I believe, that he made some records with Stan Getz, the tenor saxophone player who had recently left Woody Herman's band and who had a soaring reputation, and he recorded with Goodman on an uneven date which was

Curator of Taylor Museum Studies Difficult Problems In "Qualitative Anthropology"

By Paul Kutsche

Anthropologists, like most scholars, tend to investigate what is easiest to discover. At the turn of the century we made up trait lists and described the weave of a blanket or the plaiting of a reed wall. More recently we ask our informants what they call their mother's mother's brother's daughter's sons, and manipulate the answers by occult mathematical processes.

George Mills is something of an eccentric in his field by consistently investigating the difficult. In the quantitative subculture of science he does "Qualitative Anthropology" (the title of one of his papers), and goes his own way to study problems which he thinks are worth studying. His "Navaho Art and Culture" (1959) is an extensive consideration of the aesthetic impulse among the Navaho and its relation to other patterns of Navaho life, based on field work while Mills was a student of Clyde Kluckhohn's at Harvard. It is one of a small handful of serious contributions which anthropologists have made to the cultural study of art.

It is easy nowadays to accuse such a man of being unscientific (without necessarily defining one's terms very closely). Mills has borne the attack with humor, and refutes it tacitly by the rigor of his scholarship. Even the casual reader of his "Lucifer and the Crucifer" (1966) must be struck by his meticulous separation of evidence on the Penitentes of the Southwest according to reliability, and the care with which he examines the collection of santos and bultos which he is trying to understand.

He is now engaged in an even more rigorous, and pioneering, attempt to relate particular plastic art styles of the Huon Gulf area of New Guinea to elements in the social organization of the artists. A preliminary report of this research was received with great interest at the American Anthropological Association convention in November.

He is himself an artist, and has laid himself on the block of criticism with a book of aphorisms published a year ago under the title "Go I Know Not Where, Bring Back I Know Not What." Rumor has it that at lunchtime he shuts his office door and composes Japanese haiku with only a sandwich for company; these products have not yet been aired.

Mills was an undergraduate at Dartmouth and got his Ph.D. in social relations at Harvard. He has worked at the Colorado Springs Fine Arts Center since 1949, and at present is its Associate Director as well as Curator of the Taylor Museum.

Colorado College has had some, but all too little, benefit of him as a part-time lecturer since 1957, and during the current academic year he is developing his qualitative ideas in courses in anthropology.

No American in his discipline is so well qualified as he to "Look at Art."

Amanda Ellis to Hold Seminar On Fictional, Scholarly Writing

By Art Peters

On Wednesday, January 16, Miss Amanda Ellis, associate professor of English and writer in residence at Colorado College, will hold a seminar on both fictional and scholarly writing. Miss Ellis, author of the best-selling novel, Elizabeth the Woman, has written 15 books and 62 articles. The most recent article, a discussion of medieval literature, appeared in The College English Association Critic. As a result of this article several colleges are remodeling their medieval literature courses after the one Miss Ellis teaches. She has also sold a television play, Death Waltz, to the program Alcoa Presents. At the present, after a dozen years of research, she is writing a biography of Dorothy Wordsworth.

In her lecture Miss Ellis will discuss the problems facing a writer. She says that a writer's first problem is to decide whether to write a scholarly book or a fictional one. The work can be sound and scholarly yet so written to have popular appeal. Once this decision is made the writer can proceed. However, the published scholar's approach is very different in the text books and the popular field. These differences range from publicity to the amount paid.

Miss Ellis uses this example: When a popular book is published, the author will know in advance what the critics are going to say. Galley sheets and dummy copies are sent to certain critics. These critics can almost prophecy which books will succeed. Also the publisher will try to sell paperback and film rights before publication. If the book is selling well, the publisher will fly the author to New York for radio and television shows. Finally, certain clothing and jewelry designers will approach the writers and ask if he is interested in advertising their products.

The textbook writer faces a different situation. After publication, his book is sent to colleagues throughout the country. Royalties and prices will be much less for the textbook writer than for the popular one. Television and drama writing also present an entire new set of problems. In marketing the work, an agent is an absolute necessity for the protection of copyrights; as plays will have contracts running from eight to nine pages in length including much of the difficult legal terminology. The securing of the agent is important. Some are legitimate and honest, while others are unreliable and will read, but do little to sell a play.

Appearing with Miss Ellis will be Mrs. Lenore Mattingly Weber from Denver. Mrs. Weber is a good writer of short stories and articles for such magazines as the Saturday Evening Post. Miss Ellis suggests that the reader sample the introduction to her Representative Short Stories before the seminar and compare the style with one of her Western books and Elizabeth the Woman. Also, Horace and Dryden, which is actually a monograph, should be studied. This work utilizes a scholarly thesis type approach. All of these books are in the College Library.

By Howard L. Smith

Representation vs non-representation. Concrete vs abstract. During the past few decades arguments have arisen and revolved around the nature of such opposite poles in art. Certainly artists who may be classified as realists can work next to their abstract-expressionist brothers and do so without calling them names. As to who is "right" in pursuing the direction he chooses, nobody can say; the artist who represents the world we live in by painting recognizable images or the person who creates works which make no reference to objects or forms existing all around us in life. The fact that a painting contains no recognizable subject matter, which most people eagerly search for, does not mean that it has no value as a work of art. As many abstract-expressionists feel about their work, their subjects are the paintings themselves, nothing more, nothing less.

Abstract-expressionism was by far the most important and vital form of American art during the '40s and '50s. With the late Jackson Pollock spearheading the movement, art produced in America during this period achieved world-wide prominence. Everybody looked to the United States and particularly to the "New York School" (an ambiguous term applied to the group in which Pollock was working) for leadership, if such a word can be used here. Nevertheless, during the middle '50s, the fervent pace of action-painting slackened. At about the same time, a number of artists on the West Coast reintroduced the human image to their work. Preceding the "return" on the part of a few years was the extremely influential "woman" series by Willem de Kooning. Painting hideous females, his terrifying canvases were loaded with anguish and fury. Certainly if there has been a "return" to the figure it must be attributed to a large extent to the influence exerted by de Kooning and several artists on the West Coast.

Yesterday marked the opening of a major art exhibit at the Fine Arts Center, in conjunction with Colorado College's 1963 Symposium. The exhibit, entitled "Recent Painting USA: The Figure," has been considered by many to mark the real beginning of a large-scale return by painting to the concentration on the human image. Such opinions can probably be accounted for by the fact that there was a prodigious number of almost 9,500 entries submitted to the show which were judged and selected by a jury featuring many of the most important personages at the Museum of Modern Art. When the selection was finally completed, a total of 74 paintings by as many different artists were put on view at the Museum of Modern Art in New York during the summer of 1962. It is this very show which we now have with us here.

To say that this show indicates the "inevitable return of the figure" as some critics have said would be most presumptuous on our part. It should be quite obvious to most people that the "figure" never completely left painting anyway. While abstract-expressionism may still be considered our most important form of art today, certainly artists have never painted in that vein and have always concentrated on representational art. And perhaps when speaking of abstract-expressionist painting, too much emphasis has been placed on its negation of the figure by critics. For in the process of drawing conclusions about this type of art, the mistake has been made of assuming that in it humanism has gone out of painting along with the human-image. Nothing could be more untrue.

The "return of the figure" seems to have been given a helpful push by many critics. Because of this the possibility arises that perhaps much of the new figure painting being done today is only a matter of slight changes being made in form in otherwise completely abstract-expressionist paintings. This seems to be the indication in a few cases, judging from some of the works we have in this "Recent Painting" show. These changes in form have wrongly been used to justify the existence of various new types of figure painting we are presented with today. With this thought looming in our minds we have to be disappointed by some of the work in the show—it appears to be only watered-down abstract-expressionism.

The painting of the figure, in order to be a true work of art, must rise above the simple level of imitation. Implications must abound in the work. They do in many of the paintings in this exhibit concerned with the figure. Whether excellent works of art are present in the show, is another question altogether.

Certainly the names of many of the artists represented are impressive enough—Harold Altman, Leon Golub, Elmer Bischoff, James McGarrell, Nathan Oliveira, and many others. In the show, Man is portrayed by these various artists in many distinctly different ways. He is vain; he is cryptic, vehement and sad. Happy as well as forlorn, and in many cases, introspective. He is presented in several aspects—many of them most interesting. For this reason, as well as the curiosity which most of us should have about the future of American painting, this exhibit should not be overlooked by anyone.

Music Professors To Present Works

Performing the two compositions at 4 p. m. Monday, Jan. 14, in Perkins Hall will be Dr. Max Lanner, professor and chairman of the Colorado College music department, and Henry Margolinski, instructor in piano.

Professor Lanner will play Professor Gerner's piano solo, "Sonata Breve," a work in four movements. This is the first performance of the sonata by Professor Gerner, who is returning from sabbatical leave in Japan to participate in the Symposium.

Professor Effinger's "Concerto for Piano and Chamber Orchestra, Opus 44," will be performed by Professor Lanner, with orchestral parts played by Mr. Margolinski on a second piano.

Professor Gerner, who joined the faculty of the independent college of arts and sciences here in 1954 is the composer of numerous works performed here and in New York. He earned his bachelor's degree at Northwestern University and his master's of music degree at Boston University.

Inventor of the Musicwriter, Professor Effinger taught music at Colorado College from 1945 to 1948. He is the composer of more than 60 major works.

Raymond Auger

Machine Duplicates Artistic Creativity

The history of Raymond Auger and his painting machine is a fascinating story of development and experiment. The machine began with Auger's first interest in neuron analogies, artificial nerve networks, which he would use to control a musculature system comparable in many ways to biological counterparts. He thought to use the device as a substitute for human beings in various hazardous or dull occupations and developed a manipulator with the dexterity of a human arm. Work on the device began in 1955 and development was completed in 1959. During the last phases of the machine's development it was programmed to perform a variety of tasks: to play with the children's blocks, to cook simple foods, and finally to draw letters on a blackboard. When it finally was programmed to paint it was more as a test of accuracy and repeatability than as an attempt to produce art, but it was observed that much of what the machine did, largely as a result of random elements introduced into the paintings being made, had generally accepted esthetic value. When the machine's "artistic" capabilities became known, an attempt was made to increase its free will and many of its paintings were sold at a modest price.

A short time later Mr. Auger attempted to exploit the other side of the machine's work in gallery in Greenview Village where it attracted a good deal of attention and interest, however the profit involved was not sufficient to justify the machine's time, so it was returned to the laboratory.

Raymond Auger is a young man, born in 1929, and a graduate of Columbia University, where he first majored in psychology and then reverted to mechanical engineering. He has travelled extensively in the Soviet Union and has written a book, The Relay Guide, published in 1960. He was Assistant Editor of the magazine Control Engineer between 1954 and 1956 and during the years 1956-60 was technical editor of Automatic Control Magazine.

German Department Employs Advanced Language Program For Eight Week Summer Session

An approach to teaching languages—usually employed only at the graduate level or used in certain federal government agencies—will be put into practice this summer by the Colorado College German department.

CC will establish next June Das Deutsch Haus, or German House, as a center where students enrolled in either of the three German language courses will live during the eight-week summer session.

"All members of the German summer school will live, attend classes, and take their meals together," explained Summer School Director Fred A. Sondermann.

The faculty members teaching German courses during the summer will take their meals with the students.

Dr. Sondermann said exchange students from Germany also will live in Das Deutsche Haus and will participate in all student activities.

The small German community will be equipped with a language laboratory and a German library. Residing in the house with the students will be a native German activities director.

Students participating in the program—offered on the freshman, sophomore and junior levels—may earn eight semester hours of credit. Six credits will be obtained for classroom work, and two for Das Deutsche Haus activities.

Each class will be limited to 15 students, Dr. Sondermann said.

Students enrolled in the elementary course will meet two and a half hours a day, five days a week. The course will cover grammar, reading, pronunciation, oral practice, and composition.

The sophomore level course, also meeting for 12½ hours a week, will be an introduction to German literature. German composition and oral practice will be offered for students having two years of German.

Teaching the courses will be two regular Colorado College faculty members, Dr. Edward Diller, assistant professor of German, and Mrs. Hertha T. Feyock, instructor in German.

Dr. Barnes Developing Existentialist Ethics

By Glenn Gray

Hazel Barnes is a thinker of a very different style. A professor of classics at Colorado University she teaches mainly in the philosophy department. She lectures and writes on French existentialism, even making a series of half-hour programs for National Educational Television on the subject. She has translated Jean Paul Sartre's major work into English, Being and Nothingness, and has just published her most recent work, a lengthy book on Humanistic Existentialism, called The Literature of Possibility, in which she treats the literary and philosophical work of Camus, Simone de Beauvoir, and Sartre.

Miss Barnes calls herself an Existentialist and is, like the Existentialist, preoccupied with the individual's complete freedom to make his own life. "We are wholly free and totally responsible," she challenges the various determinisms, social, economic and psychological that are prevalent today. Her present preoccupation is with developing an existentialist ethics which will help overcome the feelings of futility and "lostness" that afflict so many today.

Art Needed in Philosophy Believes UCLA Professor

By Jane Cauvel

Abraham Kaplan, professor of philosophy at UCLA, comes to participate in the Colorado College Symposium on Wesleyan University where he is presently a Fellow in the Center for Advanced Studies. Kaplan describes himself as a "positivist by training, a pragmatist by inclination." His inclination towards pragmatism may be partially due to the pragmatists concern for esthetics. In agreement with Dewey, Kaplan believes that the best way to judge a philosophy is to look at its esthetics for it is in art that we find the highest good. He writes that a "philosophy that has no room in it for art cannot really provide room for anything else — art is the last for which the first was made. Properly conceived, technology, politics, and morals are handmaidens of art, aiming at the extension of esthetic quality throughout experience, and in the experience of all men." The philosopher who ignores art isolates himself from one of the richest and most meaningful areas of his discipline.

A lecture given by Kaplan at the University of Colorado was published this fall in the Colorado Quarterly under the title, "What Does Art Express?" In this article he develops an esthetic theory by method he calls the "Goldilocks strategy." That is, he rejects the theory of art as self expression as being "too hot" and of art as the product of culture as "too cold," while his own theory of art as expression is "just right."

Kaplan's "just right" esthetic theory suggests that a work of art expresses something which may be conveyed or embodied somehow in language. Artistic expression differs from other kinds of expression by its stylization and use of artistic symbols. An artist must have a conscious purpose in mind, be skillful in mastering his medium and be cognizant of his social and cultural conventions. Without knowledge of these conventions, the artist would be unable to convey his meaning to the public and without mastery of his medium, he could not formulate or express this meaning.

Each work of art is unique, according to Kaplan, and its meaning cannot be translated into any other work. The meaning of a work may be revealed through a series of paraphrases but the complete meaning cannot be dissociated from its vehicle. "What a work of art expresses is just what the work of art is."

The importance of art lies in its affirmation of the meaning and value of human experience. It creates culture as well as manifests it. With these ideas of Kaplan's in mind, it will be interesting to hear his explanation of the creative role of the artist and what the role of art are untranslatable works of art are untranslatable. His ideas on these subjects should come out in the discussion with Clement Greenberg on "The Artist, the Critic and the Public." Kaplan's general theory of art as expression should be clearer after his explanation of the nature of "Truth in Art." This lecture will be analyzed on Friday morning by Professors Ellen Claydon and Darnell Rucker who will probe for weak spots in his theory of art.

Kaplan has a reputation for a clear and witty style of speaking and writing; this has made him a popular campus speaker throughout California and in other parts of the country. His wit is revealed in a story he frequently tells on himself. One day after driving up to the gas pumps of a service station, the attendant cried out with surprise, "Say, you look like Jesus Christ!" Kaplan replied in a flash, and fill it up with water."

Greenway Becomes Authority On Folksongs and Folklore

John Greenway, born in Liverpool, England, has become a widely recognized authority on American folksongs and folklore. Dr. Greenway has had an interesting, thorough, and diverse education. He holds his AB, MA, and Ph.D. in English from the University of Pennsylvania. His doctorate there was on American Folksongs of Social and Economic Protest. He also has an M.A. in Anthropology from the University of Colorado and is director of the University's Summer institute in Anthropology. He has taught at such schools as the University of Pennsylvania and Rutgers University, was a visiting professor at U.C.L.A., and a visiting fellow at Yale. He has also lectured extensively in this country and in Australia. John Greenway is the author of seven books, numerous articles and book reviews, and has made 10 phonograph recordings.

EFFINGER

Professor Cecil Effinger's concerto for piano and Chamber Orchestra, Opus 44, will be performed by Professor Lancer. Effinger is a graduate of CC, inventor of the Music Typewriter, and composer of more than 60 major works. At 4:00 p. m. Monday, Effinger will present a survey of the present status of Colorado composers.

Seay to Present Foundation Of Modern Electronic Music

By Polly Franklin

Among those faculty members contributing to the Symposium is Dr. Albert Seay, a distinguished musicologist, professor in the Colorado College Department of Music, and General Editor of the Colorado College Music Press. At the first of the week Dr. Seay will present a comprehensive view of trends in modern music, and at a later time he will discuss "New Forms of Musical Expression" with Cunther Schuller and Milton Babbitt.

Dr. Seay graduated in 1937 from Murray State Teachers College in Louisiana with both his Bachelor of Arts and his Bachelor of Music degrees. In 1939 he received a Master of Music degree at Louisiana State University. After having taught music in a Louisiana high school for three years, Dr. Seay entered into the army during the Second World War. Four years later he began teaching again. This time at Southwest Louisiana Institute. In 1949 Albert Seay entered Yale University, where he received his Doctor of Philosophy degree in music history, after having completed his three-volume thesis on a theoretical treatise written by Ugoino di Orvieto in 1440. Dr. Seay became a faculty member at The Colorado College in 1953. Since that time he has received two fellowships in order to continue his research in the history of theory, primarily the work of the fifteenth century. In 1956 and 1957 he was a Fulbright scholar in Italy, and last year he again did research in Italy at a Guggenheim Fellow.

Dr. Seay, chairman of the Rocky Mountain division of the American Musicology Society, is the author of numerous articles published in American and European music magazines. He has also transcribed and edited a large amount of musical literature. Not only has he transcribed over 150 French chansons of the sixteenth century, but also he has edited much thirteenth century music for recordings in France. He translated and edited The Art of Counterpoint by Johannes Tinctoris (c.1435-1511). He has also recently edited an eighteenth century opera by Cammarosa entitled "The Turkish Lovers," which will be recorded soon and also performed on television in France this coming spring.

As a foremost musicologist, Dr. Seay is naturally interested in the most recent trends in contemporary music. Not being directly involved in composition of this music, he is capable of objectively viewing what is happening in the world of electronic music. The primary objective of his lecture of this electronic music will be to present the foundation of modern music, explaining the two varieties of electronic machines in use today and indicating what these machines are able to do that regular instruments cannot do.

Thus, Dr. Seay's lecture at 11 a. m., January 14, in Perkins Hall will provide the foundation upon which Milton Babbitt will later depend. Those interested in the developments in contemporary music should not miss this lecture by Dr. Seay on "New Musical Experiences and the Electronic World."

EISENBERG

At 4 p. m. Friday, Walter Eisenberg, conductor of the Colorado Springs Symphony Orchestra, will discuss "The Magnificent Paradox! The Arts and the Artist in the Affluent Society." A graduate of the Juilliard School of Music, Mr. Eisenberg served for six years as a concertmaster and assistant conductor of the Denver Symphony Orchestra. He has taught at Denver University and has made many appearances as a violinist, either as a soloist or as a member of string quartets.

Foreign Student Writes Impressions of America After Life in Holland

A Colorado College foreign exchange student who says it is difficult for Europeans to distinguish between executives and workers in America, is writing his impressions of life in the United States for six newspapers in his native Holland.

Gerhard Jansen-Venneboer is spending a year at the independent college of arts and sciences here as an exchange student from the Netherlands College for Representation Abroad, Haarlem, Holland.

The Colorado College exchange student to the college in Holland this year is Dennis E. Faulk, a junior from Pueblo, Colo. This marks the seventh year the two colleges have cooperated in a student exchange program.

The 21-year-old Dutch student said he was amazed to find that the Rocky Mountain West really is as colorful as it often is depicted.

I used to think cowboys existed only in the cinema," he said.

"But," he said, "the thing that strikes most Europeans when they first come to this country is the fact you can't find work among middle-class executives."

"Here everyone drives new cars, own their own homes and even dress alike," Jansen-Venneboer said.

He is writing articles about western ghost towns, college life in the United States, the American attitude toward sports, and the Colorado gold camps.

"I hope to visit an Indian reservation and talk with the people there for a feature," he said. He is planning to take his Christmas vacation in Florida, and thinks he may gather material for a story on the race problem.

Jansen-Venneboer received his journalistic training by writing sports stories and serving as a campus stinger for Dutch newspapers while in college.

His stories about life in the United States are going to such newspapers as the Tweentsch Dagblad in Enschede, De Gelderlander in Mijmegen, the Hengelsch Dagblad, the Zuiphen Dagblad, the Deventer Dagblad, and the Graafschapade in Doetinchem.

At Colorado College, the young journalist is studying US history, economics, business administration and Spanish.

After he has fulfilled his military obligations in Holland, he hopes to go to South America to work for a Dutch farm there.

College Music Press Announces 3 Chansons

The Colorado College Music Press recently announced publication of its 16th work—Three Chansons by 16th century French composer Claude Goudimel.

The three works are contained in a handsome, eight-page publication which sells for 25 cents.

Student editor of the Three Chansons is Michael D. Grace, Grace, working under the supervision of Professor Seay, transcribed and translated the three chansons, originally published in Paris by Pierre Attaingnant in 1550. He obtained a microfilm copy of the only known print of the works from the British Museum.

Morath Speaks Tuesday On Folk Music of City

By Chuck White

The present day spokesman for ragtime music, Max Morath, will appear on Tuesday afternoon, January 15 at 4:45 in Perkins Hall. Mr. Morath's programs are always entertaining and accompanied by his intimate knowledge of ragtime music are interesting as well. He will talk about "Classic Ragtime: The Folk Music of the City." Morath is easy going in his analysis and his audiences are always at ease but never fail to learn something about a type of music with not many of us are very familiar.

Morath is a native of Colorado Springs and graduated from Colorado College in 1948 with a bachelor of arts degree in English. After working as a radio announcer in Colorado Springs and as an actor with a stock company in Phoenix, Ariz., he started playing ragtime at the Imperial Hotel in Cripple Creek, Colo. The educational television station in Denver noticed him there and signed him to do a nationally televised series. The first series was called "The Ragtime Era" and his present one is "Turn of the Century." In these series he traces the development of ragtime from the 1890's through World War I. He does the research for these shows and combines the playing of the tunes with a discussion of the historical development of ragtime.

Presently he is traveling widely in the college and night club circuit.

His program here promises to be one of the high spots of the Symposium.

College Receives Grant Of Science Foundation For Summer Institute

Colorado College has received a grant of $90,200 from the National Science Foundation for its 1963 Summer Science Institute.

Professor Richard G. Beidleman, director of the NSF program said the eight-week summer institute would be open to 70 high school science teachers. He said most of those who apply for admission will have had at least five years of teaching experience.

Professor Beidleman said 436 high school science teachers have participated in the program since it was launched at Colorado College in 1956. They represented 33 states, and England and the Philippine Republic.

The Summer Science Institute for teachers is one of three summer institutes offered by the college under NSF sponsorship. The other two are an institute in field biology at Aspen and an institute for high school juniors and seniors in the general science symposium will have an opportunity to work in the laboratory on research projects alongside Colorado college scientists.

Dr. Beidleman said all applications would have to be on the regular NSF forms and postmarked not later than February 15. "Last year we had more than 20 applicants for every available institute position," he said.

Institute participants will be able to earn 10 semester credit hours each summer session. The institute is so designed that a teacher, if selected for the sequential program, earns a master's degree on completion of three summers of work.

SIMONS

Dr. George Simons, CC mathematics professor, has recently had published by the McGraw-Hill Book Co., Inc., of New York, his graduate level textbook Introduction to Topology and Modern Analysis.

Simon's book steers a middle course between books so elementary in approach that the student must relearn the subject later, and books so advanced that he first must learn the subject from another source.

Pucksters Catch Fire

SENIOR, ART BERGLUND heads in for another goal in recent CC victory.

CC Icers Post 5-1 Mark; Place Second in Tourney

Colorado College returned to its home ice to take on tough Michigan State University after a successful trip East. On the Eastern story, the CC icers won three and lost a hard fought game to Harvard University, which netted their second place in the ninth annual Christmas Hockey Tournament held in Boston. In the first game of the Hockey Tourney, CC edged Boston University 5-4 on a goal scored by Art Berglund after 42 seconds of a sudden death overtime period. In the course of the game, CC blew 2-0 and 4-3 leads before the regulation game ended in a tie. Jeff Sauer scored the first goal and Ken Cairns scored the first of his two goals to give CC its early lead. Then BU had a scoring burst which gave them a 3-2 lead until Ken Cairns scored the equalizer early in the third period. Don Stouffer scored his first goal of the evening to give CC its 4-3 lead which was overcome late in the final period, setting up the sudden death situation. In the course of the game, Art Warwick had 25 saves and in Coach Tony Frasca's words was "great, just fantastic".

After the initial victory, CC beat Northeastern University 5-3. At the end of the first period, the score was tied at 2 all, but CC quickly gained dominance over the out-manned Northeasterners and never trailed after pulling away to a 4-2 lead in the second period. Ken Cairns, Wayne McAlpine, Jeff Sauer, Warren Fordyce, and John Simus all tallied goals in an impressive display of offensive balance. Pete Doyle, CC goalie in this game, needed a scant 8 saves to protect the CC lead, a good indication of excellent defensive play.

Moving into the final round of the Tournament, CC was defeated for the first time this season as Harvard's Bill Le Marche scored a fluke goal in overtime. The score was 3-2, as CC's Art Warwick came up with 34 saves in a losing effort as CC took second place in the Boston Hockey Classic. Boston University took third place, as Northeastern University finished a winless fourth. Colorado College placed Bill Dixon and Art Warwick on the all-tournament team.

After losing its first game of the season, Colorado College came back with a big win over top-ranked Boston College, 8-4. Captain Don Stouffer led the scoring with two goals and three assists. CC jumped into an early 5-1 lead over the strong Eastern Hockey team, and then staved off a furious Boston College rally as the Tigers went on to win. John Simus scored twice for CC as Ken Cairns, Art Berglund, Warren Fordyce, and Bill Dixon each got single goals.

After Boston College rallied to make the score 5-4, Warren Fordyce scored a goal early in the third period, and Ken Cairns scored shortly after this to destroy the Boston College hopes.

Counting two previous wins over McMasters University, the CC record going into the Michigan State game stood at 5 wins and 1 loss.

Two CC Seniors Commissioned Second Lieutenants in Army

Two Colorado College seniors have been commissioned second lieutenants in the US Army and will report for active duty in February.

They are Spencer J. Cook of Rochester, N.Y., and Crofton H. Diack of Portland, Ore.

Cook, who earned his bachelor of arts degree in English, is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Spencer Cook of 1698 Creek St., Rochester. He will report to Ft. Benning, Ga., for the Infantry Officers' Basic Course.

Diack, who has taken his degree in history, will report to Ft. Eustis, Va., where he will attend the Transportation Corps Basic Officers' Course. He is the son of Dr. and Mrs. S. L. Diack of 2745 SW Summit Dr., Portland.

Berglund Leads CC to Victory

Art Berglund has been a big man in leading CC to its impressive 7-1 overall record going into the DU series. The twenty-two year old education major from Fort Frances, Ontario, is the assistant captain of the fired-up Tigers. So far this season he has scored the winning goal in three important contests, and has 2 hat tricks to his credit. He attributes much of his success on the ice to excellent play from line-mates Don Stouffer and Warren Fordyce.

Berglund stated that the biggest win for the team to date was the opening upset over McMasters U. which snapped a 34-game losing streak. According to him, the team gained the necessary confidence from this win to post an excellent pre-season record. Commenting that the WCHA is better balanced than last year, he went on to state that North Dakota and Minnesota are the tough teams in the league, but that CC is still very much in the running.

Senior Berglund plans to be a hockey coach after he graduates, and has already acquired valuable experience as a coach and referee in the local Young American Hockey League. He is also a valuable member of the college golf team.

Tiger Cagers Fall to Mines In RMC Opener

Tiger hopes for a successful basketball season waned over dinner as Coach Red Eastlack's cagers went down to their sixth straight defeat, bowing to Colorado School of Mines 52-44 in Cositt Gymnasium Tuesday night.

The CC cagers opened magnificently to establish a quick 10-4 lead in the first few minutes, but inaccurate shooting stalled the drive and gave Mines a 30-20 lead at halftime. Another fast start in the second half cut the visitors' margin to 5 points, but the Golden team managed to hold the lead, taking the game by eight.

Giegg Smith and Phil Hart played their customary key roles for the Tigers, as Smith dumped 14 points, while Hart was close behind with 13.

The conference game was CC's first and came after a poor showing in the Grinnell Holiday Basketball Tournament, where the Tigers placed a dismal fourth. Eastlack's five met a tough Knox College team in the opener of the tournament and bowed 84-67. The same evening Chicago University dropped host Grinnell 65-49 to earn the right to meet Knox for the championship, while CC was slated to clash with Grinnell for the third place spot.

In the consolation battle the Tigers held their hosts to a slim lead through the first half, but Grinnell turned suddenly ungracious and soared to a 62-52 win, bouncing CC to fourth in the tourney.

Eastlack has been playing under a handicap since the second game of the season, with team captain Carl Cabiness and Ed Loosi both ruled scholastically ineligible, and upcoming league play seems to indicate that the handicap could easily prove a fatal one.

CC Nips MSU; Paces WCHA

Senior Art Berglund slammed the winning tally for CC after 60 minutes of a sudden death overtime period Saturday night at the Broadmoor World Arena before 2,500 fans as Coach Tony Frasca rejuvenated Tigers took a thrill from Michigan State University 8-7.

The win against Michigan State broke a disastrous 29-game losing streak the Tigers had been riding up in Western Collegiate Hockey Association play.

Michigan State routed to a quick 2-0 lead in the early minutes of the game, but All-American Michigan State goalie John Chandik gave a taste of things to come with 15 seconds remaining when senior Don Stouffer, assisted by Warren Fordyce, slammed one past the tight Michigan State defense.

In the second period CC boarded Chandik with 25 shots, 10 of which were tallies. McGill, Berglund, and Cairns accounted for four goals in the brilliant rally. Then it was sophomore Don Simon's turn to shine as he squeezed in two goals within minutes of each other, both assisted by Wayne McAlpine. When the buzzer sounded, CC had pulled ahead, 7-4.

The final period opened poorly as Michigan State pumped in goals to tie it up 7 all, the final goal coming as State's Art Thorpe got past CC goalie Art Warwick with a rebound shot at 15:40, send the tilt into a 10-minute sudden death overtime period. Tension had just begun to build when Berglund took a long pass from John Simus and skate through All American Chandik to cut off the Michigan State rally, gaining his second "hat trick" the season and a crucial conference victory.

Tuesday night, Jan. 8, the Tigers pulled a repeat performance, edging the Spartans 8-7 for the second time.

After two shaky periods in which the Tigers displayed none of the spark that had led to previous victories, the team tallied 11 goals in the final period to clinch the game.

With less than a minute to play Michigan State, trailing 7-6, pulled their goalie in favor of a sub forward. The strategy backfired badly as senior Art Berglund fired an unassisted punch into the open net to put the game out of the Spartans' reach and put CC temporarily on top in conference play.

Quartet Asserts Cause

By Barbara Morgan

The Claremont Quartet offered a unique contribution to they provided both lively discussion of contemporary music of the subject matter of the discussion in the performance proved to be exceptional both in their playing and in their interest in the issues in music beyond the practical problems of performance.

The program of contemporary music which was presented Tuesday evening by the Claremont Quartet showed them to be perfectly at ease with the atonal, serial music of Gunther Schuller, Mel Powell, and Anton von Webern. Their control of all aspects of the notes, including dynamics and tone color which are especially important to serial music, was exact and revealed their understanding of the demands of the music. Their performance of the more traditional Debussy quartet was also excellent. The Wednesday night concert consisted of quartets by Haydn and Schumann and a repetition of Schuller's quartet. The Quartet proved to be as competent with these classical and romantic works as they were with the modern music. All of their playing was characterized by intensity and enthusiasm and by an exactness and attention to detail which emphasized the significance of each note. This, in combination with good ensemble with exact coordination of attack, rhythm, and nuance resulted in a rare performance both nights. Those who attended the open rehearsal of the Quartet on Wednesday morning realized the amount of detailed work which goes into their playing.

In their Wednesday morning discussion the members of the Quartet directed their attention toward contemporary serial music, the movement which began with Arnold Schonberg at the beginning of the twentieth century. It was generally agreed by all, except Mr. Klein, that contemporary music does not eliminate emotional response to music as it has been accused of doing, but produces a different sort of emotion than previous music. One gets the same sort of excitement from the manipulation of notes in a tone row as a mathematician get in discovering a proof.

Mr. Weissman expressed a concern that contemporary music is unique in that it is very self-conscious and constantly questions its own validity. He felt that this was unhealthy and was resulting in inhibitions which hurt the products of contemporary composers. He stated that the validity of music of any period cannot be determined until the period has passed and should not be the concern of the composer. Mr. Gerner of the music department expressed the concern that the 12 tone technique may be becoming an end in itself in this overconcern with doing things right.

The question was raised of whether it is necessary to have an intimate knowledge of contemporary music in order to appreciate it. It was felt by the Quartet that this music does not differ from any other in that study of any art increases enjoyment of it and in that every innovation in music was thought to sound strange until it had been heard a great deal. The members of the Quartet seem to feel that a great deal of the responsibility lies with the public to make themselves familiar with the music that is being produced today. The members of the Quartet, with their enthusiasm and optimism, made convincing ambassadors for the cause of contemporary music.

Proposed Standard

Membership in the Colorado College community is a privilege, not a right. An atmosphere of freedom with responsibility is created through the recognition of a standard of conduct which extends to all areas of college life.

It is expected that integrity and common sense will guide the actions of each member of the college community and that he will show both within the college respect for all aspects of morality including order, personal honor, and the rights of others.

There will be no convocation on Tuesday, January 29, 1962.

Colorado College, like many other small liberal arts schools, has suffered from what may be called for lack of a better clinical term amorphous individuality. This is a serious disease, for though it is crippling to creativity the patient feels himself in perfect health. A warning sign for this disease is an uncritical student body or an administration wedded to the idea that if we are no worse than other schools we are good enough.

In the last few years, however, there have been many signs that this malady has begun to die here. The improvement in faculty and plant has indicated a reversal in mood, and last week marked an even more significant break with this tradition. The Symposium which many had feared would be a week of large generalities and small audiences proved a complete success. But before we pat ourselves on the back, let us remember that the Symposium must only be a beginning, a beginning of an increased intellectual thrust throughout the school.

What must never be forgotten is that there is no inevitability in the forward motion of a school. If we ignore the impetus of this symposium and if we succumb to quick answers and easy solutions we will have failed. The pleasure that was had at the symposium should be a goad to all of us to find other means to go beyond the strictures of the mere academic. But if we fail in this, the symposium that seemed to announce the beginning of an important germination of creativity to the college, will prove in reality to be merely a still birth.

LETTERS to the EDITOR

Gentlemen:

The only hat I own is a rather disreputable model, but I do want to take it off—in public—to the entire Colorado College community which rose so magnificently to the challenges and opportunities of our 1963 Symposium on "The Contemporary Arts and the City." This turned out to be an educational experience which worked—and worked largely because of the response it received on the part of everyone: students, faculty and staff (and, of course, our friends in the community and area).

I can't begin to list the names of all the people who were helpful in preparing for, arranging, and overseeing the execution of the Symposium. At the risk of seeming conceited by quoting from myself, I can only repeat what I said at the opening of the Symposium, namely that from the Buildings and Grounds Department to Rastall Center; from the Public Information Office to the Bookstore; from ASCO and the Rastall Board to the TIGER staff; from the Food Service to the Residence Halls; from the academic departments to the Library—everyone helped. Most of all, I am grateful to the members of the Symposium Steering Committee, the chairmen and members of various committees, and the students who volunteered to serve as hosts to our visitors and who thereby gave those visitors a very high opinion of the Colorado College student body. And last but by no means least, I am of course very grateful that such a large proportion of our students rose to the intellectual challenge of the week by participating actively in so many events. It justifies the faith we had in the maturity of the Colorado College student.

Symposium Week was an occasion when the college rose to its full potential; when it demonstrated what all of us knew a school of our type could do and be. I am happy that I found myself in a place where I could pound the typewriter (literally) and crank the mimeograph machine (figuratively) in order to help in the process, but the real credit belongs to the College itself—which is to say, to the people who compose the Colorado College community.

—Fred A. Sondermann

Dear Editors:

Our hats go off to Dr. Sondermann's crisp programming and month's of pure sweat in establishing Symposium 1963. Overflowing crowds throughout the week were a beautiful commentary on the intellectual drive of the students on this campus.

Dear Editors,

I want to thank you for the wonderful hospitality which you and everybody else at Colorado College extended to me during my visit. It was one of the most enjoyable experiences of my life. I will always remember the intelligence and alertness and enthusiasm of your students, and the help and friendliness and intellectual stimulation that I got from those members of your faculty I was lucky enough to meet.

Sincerely,
James Yaffe

From the Chair

By MAX POWER—President ASCC

By this time, and in this issue of the TIGER, there has been a great deal of discussion for and against the proposed Colorado College Standard. I shall not dwell at length about the merits and the counter-arguments which have been expressed concerning the standard. I do wish, briefly, to discuss the issue as I see it, not of the merits of this particular standard, but in regard to the need for a standard.

In any event, there is an enforced standard of moral at Colorado College. It is enforced, finally, by the administration. In other words, this community, just as the community around the college, now enforces certain standards of conduct.

The purpose of the standard is to express what students believe should be the guidelines used in determining whether or not their fellow students have conducted themselves acceptably. The standard provides a means for the student body to express its view of morality to its judicial bodies and the administration.

If this standard is adopted, it will not mean that the student body has completely assumed the role of setting moral guidelines for our students. However, the administration has expressed its willingness, in fact, its desire, to see students have a larger voice in this area.

Admittedly, the standard is general. That is as it should be. It signifies, however, that the student body is prepared to accept some responsibility to, and to exercise the right to determine what rules of conduct will be enforced. Moreover, the standard will provide a valuable tool for Student Body Committee, Student Conduct Committee, Judicial Board, and others, in determining in specific rules or specific decisions what constitutes undesirable conduct.

Finally, the standard, adopted and printed, would serve as a notice to new students at Colorado College that the community does in fact expect its members to conduct themselves with consideration and good sense. The standard will make clear to all what is already true—that we have a standard of conduct which may not be broken with impunity.

Toastmaster Club To Be Organized

An opportunity to practice public speaking in an informal setting and to learn parliamentary practice are the chief attractions of the Toastmaster's Club, a new activity beginning on campus this semester.

Toastmaster meetings take place during the dinner hour and usually consist of a series of short, impromptu speeches and a couple of longer, prepared talks given by various members of the club. Major speakers are evaluated by fellow members sitting in the case of debates, votes are taken. Topics range from the light to the serious and each member is given ample opportunity during the course of the semester to speak and to evaluate.

It is tentatively planned to hold meetings once every two or three weeks in a partitioned alcove in the Rastall dining room. The meetings will begin concurrently with the evening meal, but will last until 7:30 p. m.

The club will be open to all students but it is limited to 25 or 30 members. Interested students can sign up or get more details by contacting Mr. Berkove at Hayes House.

NOTICE!

Next week's feature section will include Symposium participants who could not be discussed in this issue for lack of funds for a 12-page issue! A special article will appear by discussant Lawrence Berkove on one of our most stimulating visitors, James Yaffe. The feature editors wish to express their gratitude for the immediate interest and a later integrity of student-faculty pre-viewers and reviewers. We hope the there will be a continuing campus concern in developing a timely, vital newspaper.

Jewish Students Sponsor Weekend

The B'nai Brith Hillel Foundation of the University of Colorado under the direction of Rabbi Meir E. Elefant will hold an intercollegiate weekend at the Estes Park "Y" for the Jewish students in all the colleges in Colorado. This is the first effort to join the Jewish students of the various schools of higher education in a conference endeavor.

The weekend will be devoted to religious, cultural, and social purposes beginning on Friday evening, February 6, and ending Sunday, February 10.

An outstanding visiting lecturer will lead the discussions with rabbis and professors of the Colorado communities comprising the faculty.

Reservations may be made by writing the Hillel Foundation, 2795 Pennsylvania Avenue, Boulder. Cost for the weekend is $10.

RELATIONSHIP OF CC TO CU

By Max Power

All of us at Colorado College are aware, I think, of the continuing strife and controversy which have crippled the University of Colorado at Boulder. As students or faculty members, we are concerned when such a situation exists in any university. We ought to be especially concerned here, though, because the atmosphere and the quality of the university 90 miles to our north affects us as a college and the academic character of the state as a whole.

Part of the controversy at CU has resulted from ideological or personal disputes among students. The causes of these are complex, and, to the extent that the controversy revolves around serious issues, it is probably not harmful.

However, a greater and more damaging controversy continues to rage over the administration of the university. One need only look at last Sunday's DENVER POST, in which a meeting of the University's Board of Regents was reported, to see the acrimonious, destructive character of this second area of conflict. In that article we were told that one regent called the appointment of Mr. Newton, the University's retiring president, "the worst mistake" in CU's history. Mr. Newton called the regent's (Mr. Bromley) conduct "intolerable." Meanwhile an attorney defending a faculty member before the board called Mr. Newton a dictator and a "hatchet man."

There are two causes for this conflict—a continuing concern to the people of the state and a bitter burden for the University—that can be singled out. The first is that the president of the University must sit as chairman of the six-member board of Regents. The second, and more central cause is that members of the board are elected on a partisan ballot.

The first fact means that the president does not only answer to the regents for his administration, but he also passes on his own acts and presides at hearings contesting his own policy. This situation led, in large part, to last week's disastrous session.

The partisan election simply means that candidates who represent the minority party on the Board of Regents are forced to run against present university policy, good or bad. The fact is that this is tied in to party labels further complicates and injures the system of administering the University. Moreover, the political affiliation of the President—and Mr. Newton's long-standing political affiliations and activities have shown this to be sadly true—affect the whole color of his relationship to the regents.

Finally, the popular election of regents has thrust issues of relative unimportance, such as the hiring of football coaches or the dress of newspaper staff members, to the fore in the Board's consideration. This cannot help but detract from the consideration of more substantive issues and needs facing the University.

Happily, State Senators A. W. "Woody" Hewett (R-Boulder) and Donald E. Kelly (R-Denver) have introduced a bill in the senate at Denver to correct these two sources of conflict. The bill would change the board from six to nine members, each of whom would be appointed by the governor of Colorado for a six year term. The terms would be staggered, and no political party could claim more than five of the board's members.

The bill also provides that the president of CU reports to and is responsible to the Board of Regents, but does not take part in its voting or formal deliberations.

If adopted, the Hewett-Kelly bill would go a long way toward solving the problem of bitter conflict which has beset the University. Hopefully, the governors of the state would build a tradition of appointing well-qualified, capable men and women to the Board of Regents. In any event, the sources of friction, contempt, and whimsical pressure which presently affect the University would be removed.

The Hewett-Kelly proposal may not be a perfect or ideal solution. But it offers such a vast improvement in the situation at Boulder, that every concerned Coloradan and every one involved in higher education should give it his active support.

Dr. Barnes Employs Direct Approach to Existentialism

By Penny Nichols

Dr. Hazel Barnes' lecture, in which evaluation of specific works of art was subordinated to an informative presentation of the subject of existentialism, was a change well received by Symposium attendees. The speaker was introduced by Dr. Jane Cauvel of the philosophy department. The topic of Dr. Barnes' lecture on Thursday at 10:30 in Perkins Hall, was "Existentialism in Literature."

By developing a framework from Paul Tillich's conception of three kinds of existential anxiety, Dr. Barnes was able to take a direct approach to ideas usually conveyed indirectly by widely varying and differing expressions of existentialism. The material was well organized and intelligible to the large Symposium group with varying degrees of familiarity with the subject.

As stated by Dr. Gray in last week's "Tiger," Dr. Barnes is primarily concerned with ethics—"with developing an existentialist ethics." Because his acts are entirely free, man is "totally responsible"; existentialist literature attempts to deal with the "human situation" rather than the psychological development of character. The existentialist anxieties are reactions to those things which are a threat to the human essence of man. Thus certain concerns precede an existentialist ethics such as 1) fate (those happenings beyond our control which interact with our free actions) and death, 2) emptiness and meaninglessness, 3) guilt and condemnation.

Dr. Barnes emphasized the difference between religious existentialists and humanistic existentialists, considering herself to be one of the latter and stating her own feeling that "God is an out-moded hypothesis." The important difference for an existentialist ethics is that while the religious existentialists have an Outside Answer to each of the above "anxieties," the humanistic existentialist must build his own answers and create his own meaning. "The problem facing the humanistic existentialist is, 'How can one be a saint without God?'" This is particularly significant with regard to the "third" existential anxiety, since guilt and condemnation are inextricably bound up with "the other" (human subject). In connection with the last idea, Dr. Barnes volunteered an interpretation of Resnais' film, "Last Year at Marienbad," as conveying the "sin" of considering the other person as an object rather than a subject and of relying on "what really happened," when there is no objective happening, but rather as many subjective "happenings" as there are participants.

The audience was delighted to discover that the competent speaker was also capable of the quick comeback when the short discussion was opened with several questions—including "one facetious one" and "one funny one"—by Mr. Herving Madrugra of the romance language department.

In the interest of being informative on the subject of existentialism, Dr. Barnes did not wish to argue freedom versus determinism, and later her answers to questions pointed in this direction seemed less adequate than the rest of her presentation. She deflected a question about the advances in behavioral psychology by mentioning the existence of the "existential psychiatrists." Similarly, she talked about the external inhibiting forces of societies in reply to a suggestion by Mr. Madrugra that the same non-entity consciousness that defines man as essentially free might as easily give rise to a feeling (internal) of compulsion.

However, it was not her intention to talk about freedom and determinism and she certainly deserves high praise for her lucid coverage of a much-talked-about, little-explained subject.

LIEUTENANT JERRY HOLIMAN, PH.D. IN ELECTRICAL ENGINEERING

"If I had it to do over again, would I take Army R.O.T.C.?"

You bet I would, and I'll tell you why. Army officers live better than I expected. Take me. At the Army Signal Research Lab in Fort Monmouth, I get a chance to put my engineering background to good use. I keep on top of new developments. The experience is terrific, and it's going to pay off whether or not I stay in the Army. From Fort Monmouth I can go to a play in New York one weekend, and visit Washington the next. On my officer's salary I can afford it. Of course I have an active social life on post, too. Officers' club. Parties. Dances. You name it. My advice to you is this: if you have only two years to go for a commission, get it. Once on active duty, you'll be mighty glad you did."

Electronic Music Played

By Horace Work

On Monday morning following the formal opening of the Symposium in Shove Chapel, Dr. Albert Seay of the CC music department delivered a stimulating lecture on "New Musical Experiences and the Electronic World" to an appreciative audience in Perkins Hall. In a brief history of electronic music Dr. Seay explained that the invention of the vacuum tube in 1906 was the starting point; sound could now be generated electronically as well as mechanically. One of the first electronic instruments was a device with two vertical rods like car antennas. Moving one's hand between the rods caused an eerie sound of varying pitch to be produced. Eventually background music for science fiction movies was made with this machine. In 1933 at the Chicago World's Fair, a nickel would make a crude talking box "speak," marking one of the earliest attempts to reproduce the human voice electronically.

Dr. Seay went on to say that the Hammond organ was a more refined example of the electronic sound production. Presently giant synthesizers such as the RCA unit at Columbia are in use and can produce any known sound as well as create entirely new sounds.

Dr. Seay played several examples of the electronic music illustrating present techniques. A Concerto for Tape Recorder and Orchestra by Luening Ussachevsky, whom the Louisville Foundation commissioned, showed what could be done without a large synthesizer. Using a couple of tape recorders and various methods, Ussachevsky obtained different sounds and effects (such as echo) from an ordinary flute. The famous Chipmunk songs were done similarly; Alvin and his pals were created by splicing, dubbing, speeding up and slowing the tape of a dozen recorders.

Dr. Seay explained further experiments. In France, Musique Concrete was the amplification, alteration and recording of real sounds such as the rattling of pop bottles. At the Bell Labs, a computer was programmed to write Stockastic music which was performed by a conventional string quartet. The Illiac computer was used and when instructed what not to do, wrote acceptable music according to human rules. In another experiment in France a computer wrote 12 tone music for a wind ensemble and percussion. These last two examples were heard on record, the latter having the title, Algorithmes No. I.

Dr. Seay pointed out that the most advanced experiments in this field today were being done by men like Milton Babbitt who use the computer and synthesizer to create new sounds but compose the music themselves. With these new facilities he said, composers could have far greater control over their music. Composers could specify exact tempo, duration, loudness of each note and could eliminate interpretation and human error. In the reproduction of conventional instrumental sounds, unlimited range and volume are possible.

Dr. Seay stressed the fact that the invention of electronic music procured a new medium for composition not unlike the invention of the pianoforte, so different from its predecessors. The electronic world is simply a new era in the production of sound allowing far greater range of timbre and technical facility to be employed in music.

Dr. Seay ended the lecture with an excerpt from the Bell Labs record which said "Thanks for listening" electronically.

In the question and answer period that followed, someone in the audience asked if electronic music would replace human performers. Dr. Seay said that to some extent it would but he doubted seriously if the human performer would ever disappear completely any more than harpsichordists disappeared after the advent of the piano.

Criticism of Kaplan Considered Superficial

By John Giannes

Plato held two views on art and its relation to truth. The first is taken from The Symposium in which he expresses a true appreciation of beauty and regards art as an avenue toward truth. The second is found in The Republic in which Plato states that art is an illusion, removed from reality. The artist is a disturbing influence and there is no place for him in a well ordered world. Both of these theories have persisted to the present day and are crystallized in two positions, the first of which is the most familiar. The first position is that of the Romanticist. From this position, not only is there truth in art but only in art is there found truth. Scientific truth is provisional. The scientific truths left by the Greeks are now of only historical interest whereas their artistic creations are just as valuable today as they were then. Science is bound to its society by perceptual matters of fact whereas art bridges all difficulties. Science is abstract and only when stripped bare of any complexities can reality be gripped by a scientific truth. Some persons have said that one which is the source of all beauty. Therefore art makes it possible to attain some grasp of the mystic essence of all being. This theory has of course evoked an antithesis to itself.

This second position is taken by the Positivists who deny that art contains truth or that there is any truth in art at all. Truth is a property of propositions—art is not a proposition and therefore does not consist of any symbols for the logical structure of a proposition. The Romanticist's question has been, "Is there truth in art or is it a falsehood—reality or illusion?" The positivist begs the prior question, "Is it meaningful to ascribe either reality or illusion to art?" Truth and falsehood are additives of real meanings. Art is a repository of emotive meanings. Art can be intense, satirical, or subtle; never profound or telling.

Kaplan takes a position distinct from either of these and offers us three presumptions. The first is that in some sense or other it is meaningful and appropriate to speak of understanding a work of art, of interpreting, of getting its content, etc. That it is perfectly sensible to say it has content. The second is that the existence of content is as manifest and important with abstract art as with concrete art. Content is not to be confused with what the piece represents or is about as many works are not about anything. Any acceptable analysis of truth in art makes as much sense when applied to music or abstract art as it does when applied to literature or theater. The third of the presumptions is that the content of the artwork has a close relationship to other interests of human existence. It relates to life—spread if not to basic human concerns.

The audience was then given three theories on truth in art which use these previous three presumptions. Two of these, we were told, were inapplicable. The first, the Coherence Theory, which when applied to aesthetics, proposes that the artist's propositions must be similar to others regarded as truth. If there is truth in art, the artist has achieved a certain consistency between accepted truths and the content of his art. This theory allows the assessment of the logical correctness of the artist's theorems derived from the postulates. In a manner of speaking it is a quality of coherence which is fundamental for something to function as art. This answer can be analyzed by mathematical theories, however any such analysis would not provide the answer to the question of whether or not there is truth in art. Why value this mathematical quality? After all many people turn to art as an escape from mathematical thought.

The second theory is the Pragmatic Theory. In this theory there are two variants. The first looks to the artist and says that it is not really the work of art which is being truthful but is the artist. Truthfulness is artistic sincerity. A work of art tells us something which is deep within the artist himself. There are limitations to this, the first of which says that the receiver's interest in the article is displaced interest from the work of art. That is, the person is interested in the artist only in that it bears upon his work of art. The second limitation states that it is not sincerity which is important but is the "ring of sincerity" which matters. This is a paradox of artistic illusion. The second variant in the Pragmatic Theory looks to the audience. If the piece of art is convincing, if the audience is taken in by it, it is truthful. The effect which the variant produces is that truth becomes a matter of belief not of knowledge. This allows the observer to attach himself to false propositions, he must allow for the possibility that he may be mistaken. Still when illusion is perceived as such it is no longer illusion.

The third theory is the Correspondence Theory. This theory states that something in the work of art must correspond with some truth outside of the work. There are two sorts of correspondence, the first of which sets forth the theory of contained truth. This is applicable when the work of art contains a representational or referential component. The artwork says something concerning that which it is about. If it is similar to that which it is about it is true. This theory allows a piece of art to contain factual or mathematical truths. In a fantasy world anything goes but in naturalistic art what is contained is nomological truth. The difference between realistic art and idealistic art is in its contained truth. It adapts a value system or it sets all value systems aside and becomes more comprehensive in scope. The difficulty with this theory is that it can deal only with representational or referential art and ignores all forms except literature or drama or other forms of representational forms of art. It is not only limited in forms of art but even with respect to representational art it is not of aesthetic importance because contained falsehood is just as important as contained truth. Distortion may be just as important to the artist as perfect truth at a given time. So we come to a battle between contained truth and contained falsehood. But people who have been moved by a work of art don't talk about the truth contained within it, which has become for them an experience more than a reception of impulses.

The step to the second of the two sets of correspondences, embodied truth, is an obscure and difficult one. So Dr. Kaplan chose to take us into it through a short transitional step. Quasi-embodied truth is when the piece of art shows something but does not tell explicitly what it is. It gives the feeling of something. Dr. Kaplan used the example of the statue in the Lincoln Memorial which contains a falsehood in that Abraham Lincoln was not really physically that big but it also embodies truth in that in our conception of him he was that majestic. Majesty is expressed, embodied in the work of art. Suppose a work did not embody the qualities of extreme majesty or degradation, we take it as representative of human life as a whole—endorsement or repudiation.

Qualities of this sort may and must be experienced by us as characteristic of a phase of our lives derived from the aesthetic quality of the work of art. In order to embody truth a work of art must incorporate within itself a scope of virtues of the world. Some actually sweep away illusion and broaden the observer's horizons. An artist is making his interpretation of the qualities of virtues and the complexities of actual experience. Because of this interpretation art is an achievement as profound as philosophy. The artist allows us to look at the world through another's eyes, his eyes.

Dr. Kaplan, in the end, conceded that these are the peculiarities of his own perceptions—so he has called the artist a philosopher.

I was first taken by the beauty of Dr. Kaplan's speech as a unity, if one listened carefully he was aware of the way in which Dr. Kaplan tied all of the theories and conjectures together in the end to form a coherent philosophy, of truth in art. There is a European school of thought which believes that a student should not and cannot criticize a teacher or any kind of professional person in relation to their field or performance, however this is the first time I have ever felt that any criticism, good or bad, that I could make would be superficial and unwarranted.

Development of Jazz Discussed By Schuller

By Henry English

Gunther Schuller's lecture on trends in contemporary music was primarily devoted to the development of jazz since the "Bop" Revolution of the early Forties and the synthesis that is taking place between jazz and "classical" music as a result of the stylistic evolutions that have recently occurred in both streams. Up until the early Forties, jazz was limited melodically to the tunes of popular music; harmonically to the I, IV, V progressions of those tunes and rhythmically to heavy prodding of the rhythm section. With the advent of Charlie Parker, Dizzy Gillespie, Thelonious Monk, Kenny Clarke and others, jazz underwent a drastic change from what it had been up to that time. Melodies were composed on the chord progressions of standard popular tunes; a whole system of substitute chords were created to make the limited progressions harmonically more interesting; and rhythmically jazz became more complex while the rhythm section became more involved with the musical process instead of merely keeping time. Essentially what was happening to jazz in a relatively short time was what "classical" music went through in the span of a few centuries.

From that time on the timbre of jazz began to change. New instruments and tonal conceptions were introduced.

Lennie Tristan was experimenting with atonality. Andre Hodeir with improvising on a background of taped music and Don Ellis with Twelve tone techniques. And very recently Trombonist David Baker has been experimenting in playing at a tempo and in a meter other than that of the accompanying rhythm section. All of these developments mentioned above were used as illustrations by Schuller.

Of course jazz and Classical music had been influencing one another for some time, but the thing that separated them was a performance gap: jazz musicians could not read and symphony musicians could not swing. However, in recent years this gap has been minimized so that now jazz musicians can read and symphony musicians can swing. In addition, stylistically, jazz and classical music are beginning to have something in common. In his last example, Schuller played a recording of one of his own compositions for jazz. The piece, called "Abstractions," consisted of a background written in the atonal serial technique for guitar, bass (2), drums and string quartet, around which alto saxophonist Ornette Coleman improvised. The background was designed to achieve the feeling of free group improvisation although in fact the alto was the only instrument that was improvising.

Schuller felt he could do this because as he says in his liner notes, "Not only is Ornette's choice of notes sufficiently freed to function against an atonal, serialized background, but the type of non-telegraphic continuity he projects—outwardly fragmentary, but inwardly cohesive—is very similar to that of recent developments in contemporary non-jazz music." This piece represents a kind of synthesis that is taking place between jazz and "classical" music which Schuller has appropriately dubbed "Third Stream Music."

It is important to realize that this is not in any way an attempt to dignify jazz. Jazz has its own dignity. It is a growing healthy music of intrinsic worth. Nor is this an attempt to prostitute "classical" music; rather it is an attempt to coalesce various elements of both streams to produce a richness. In a sense this is part of the evolution of civilization, for one only has to look at history to see that our civilization is full of the amalgamation of different parts of other civilizations. For all we know this may be a significant step in the development of a culture peculiar to the United States, in which we may influence the various cultures in the rest of the World. Gunther Schuller is the leader of this movement.

Apart from being significant in the way that has been described above, Schuller's attitude is significant in yet another way. Jazz is no longer a form of light entertainment. It has become a form of music taken very seriously by those who create it and those who appreciate it.

Beckett Loses to Bard

By James H. Fox

Dr. Frank Whiting in his lecture on Tuesday morning of the Symposium felt that there should be some mean between the extremes of 'the blind optimism and deep pessimism' in contemporary theater. The former drama is exemplified by the shallow, melodramatic expression of modern life by Sunset Boulevard and NBC, and the latter, the playwrights of the Absurd, are obsessed with despair.

If a choice is to be made Dr. Whiting feels that the attitude of hopelessness and the ridiculous is preferable to the narrow vision of "blind faith." The dramatist must always remember that good men are capable of doing great evil when they are certain that they are right.

On the other hand, the Theater of the Absurd was also condemned, if everything in life is meaningless, so is the avant garde theater. "If man cannot communicate, why don't the pessimistic writers 'shut up'?" The Elizabethan playwrights also lived in a deeply troubled world, but by finding Dr. Whiting's mean they were able to realize a greatness which is totally absent from modern theater. The response of Southern writers like Tennessee Williams and Erskine Caldwell is to linger on decadence and sexual perversities, while Shakespeare went on to sound a triumphant answer in Hamlet, Macbeth, and King Lear. On the whole, the director focused on the "Shakespeare without Tears" idea in regard of movements in avant garde theater.

Dr. Whiting's participation in the Symposium would have been more meaningful if he had concerned himself with the real problems of contemporary theater. For example, are there any significant differences between the activities of Broadway and the West End? What is the effect of the evolution of the automatic director, more versatile lighting equipment, and television drama, in terms of the attraction of talented actors, directors, and writers, on the legitimate stage?

A relevant topic was finally reached during the Round-Table discussion on the Tuesday morning lecture. The problems and privileges of the university director. All the panelists agreed that an artist can be fulfilled in an academic environment. In fact, association with it was an incentive for internationally known director Tyrone Guthrie to move his activities from New York to the Midwest. The Twin Cities of Minneapolis and Saint Paul were chosen as the building site for Guthrie's new theater, mainly because he could enjoy affiliation with the cultural life of the University of Minnesota.

However, the education of the artist is not always enhanced by the intellectual searching of a community of learning. The best training of the actor, whether it is the hard driving professional school like Strasberg's Actor's Studio in New York, or the school of pavement pounding, or the less concentrated studies of a university or liberal arts college depends on the personality of the would-be performer. The worth of the actor's apprenticeship rests on his teacher's or director's ability more than the particular system in which he enrolls. Dr. Whiting, with an impressive record of 200 productions behind him at Minnesota, is probably as large a calling card for future leaders in drama as his distinguished department.

CARL CHARD AND ADRIENNE ZECH perform a demonstration of dramatic techniques as Dr. Frank Whiting directs them Monday morning at the opening of Symposium Week.

Babbitt's Lectures Create Most Student Controversy

By Joe Wilcox

Among the Symposium participants arousing the most verbal controversy on the Colorado College campus was Milton Babbitt, composer and Professor of Music at Princeton University. In his Friday evening lecture, Babbitt considered "The Composer in American Society" and spoke in particular about those composers who are a part of the 20th Century revolution in music stemming from the innovations of Arnold Schoenberg. He observed that the present American situation, in which the great majority of these composers are university trained and university employed, removes the composer from the traditional dependence on and responsibility to the concert-going public and places him in a unique environment of specialists in other academic fields. Although this allows the composer professionally to develop his personal interest in composition, academic inertia frequently tends to class him as a second-rate citizen in denying him the full benefits of the usual academic channels for publication of commercially impossible works and in not granting him the financial support to other disciplines. Because of the lack of any sizeable American public interest in complex music, however, the composer meets with generally even less success in the concert hall. Babbitt's worries about the future of American music stem from this view of the social position of the American composer.

Subsequent conversations with Babbitt at the Saturday morning panel discussion and the following luncheon brought out some of his views on the special problems and offerings of electronic music and his thoughts on the validity of the application of mathematics to problems of composition and the invalidity of attempting to content 'structure' or 'intellectual content' as separable components of a musical composition.

Pence's Approach Is Unrealistic and Naive

By John Gausnes

A very confident and well-informed young man named Bill Pence addressed a body of students January 7 on "Trends in Contemporary Cinema." Lieutenant Pence began pensively enough on the nostalgic note: All the kids used to go to serials shows when I was a little boy and now none do. Our children have become very sophisticated Walt Disney movie interlopers. Not only the children have changed in their movie-goer attitudes; adults who used to be habitual movie-goers are no longer (thanks to television) the avid movie fans they once were.

Our speaker classed present day cinema audiences in four categories: 1) the juveniles who, as we have already said, have deserted serials and are now conspiring with Walt Disney; 2) the teenagers who need a little Chubby Checkers and Toy Donahue (Susan Slade) to balance their regressive Walt Disney tendencies; 3) the adults who need something like forty-two international stars (in The Longest Day) or eighteen million dollars (for Mutiny on the Bounty) to tear them away from their television sets; 4) the most important grouping, the "art film audience" who have a more intellectual approach to motion pictures. This group has come about as a result of widespread education and the growth of film societies. (At this point Mr. Pence interjected the comment that foreign films are no better than U.S. films. It's just that we get the cream of the foreign film crop in this country.) The advent of the "art film audience" has induced the growth of independent film companies in this country because the demand for foreign films has allowed the film distributors who buy and distribute foreign films to buy films made independently in this country as well. This influx of foreign films has also given American studios impetus to make more inexpensive films. These new low budget films include Marty, Whatever Happened to Baby Jane, and Psycho. This rise in intellectual interest in films has given the film maker new status as an artist. Mr. Pence said that in their day Charlie Chaplin, D. W. Griffith, and the infamous (?) Eric von Stroheim were not considered artists, whereas today such names as Fellini, De Sica, and Resnais are revered. Giving this "artist" status to film makers is bad in one way because it gives impetus to bad artists and because the public may come to regard Berman and Fellini as God. We must remember that not all of the work of any one artist need necessarily be great or even good. Recent U.S. films which Bill Pence said were very good were The Hustler, Lolita, and the best example of recent years, West Side Story, which was the first really realistic musical. Mr. Pence closed his talk by saying that U.S. film makers have been crippled for years by financing and a "general public." The "general public" has been replaced by a highly diversified cinema audience which has given the film makers the freedom they need to make good films.

One got the impression from the lecture that in the past American movie makers have been hampered by big time financial dictators and this somewhat ambiguous term, "general public." The same time one is supposed to believe that this same "general public" was the grouping which broke into Bill Pence's four categories, recognized fine foreign films, gave impetus to independent film makers, formed film societies, became more widely educated, and are now sitting at home watching television. It would also appear to be some sort of a travesty to speculate that West Side Story in the case of the Hustler and Lolita (perhaps somewhat less of a travesty in the latter case than the former). When asked about this later in the discussion, Mr. Pence justified his position by saying it was a great mistake. This is no justification; music has been notoriously mad technical motion pictures, and though West Side Story may have been realistic, realism in itself does not make a great motion picture. In a conclusion, I must say that found Bill Pence's approach "Trends in Contemporary Cinema" somewhat naive and lacking.

Shapiro Talks As Critic

By Jim Scarborough

On Monday evening in Shove Chapel, Karl Shapiro demonstrated that he had come to speak as a critic and literary prophet, rather than a poet. His originally scheduled topic was: "The Public and Private Image of the Poet." But he announced to his audience that he preferred to talk about modern poetry in general, the condition of poets and critics, and entertained his audience with a proposal for a new kind of poetry. His beliefs, prejudices and idiosyncracies did emerge, but the position he assumed was that of critic rather than creator. Any one who has read some of Mr. Shapiro's literary criticism could have predicted the results. His method is witty, metaphorical and mild-to-bitterly sarcastic; his conclusions tend to be hasty, uncoordinated and unconstructive.

In the Shove Chapel lecture Shapiro advocated an "absurd" poetry, patterned after Camus' Sisyphus and exalting the basic meaning of existence. Because this kind of poetry does not exist, it is difficult to imagine or foresee. His lecture was therefore supposedly designed to give the audience some feeling of such poetry. In the more constructive respects, the lecture indicated a possible need for change, but did not propose even a semi-tangible direction which such a change would take. Perhaps this is as much as the audience should have expected, and Shapiro did at least assert some notions designed to arouse controversy. He claimed that modern poetry descends largely from the writings of T.S. Eliot, to Shapiro a lamentable state of affairs. He described Eliot's views as dogmatic, ideological and therefore third-rate, and stated that poetry, if it is to regain its role as innovator, must free itself from the early twentieth-century "avant garde." In the process of denouncing T.S. Eliot Shapiro also condemned Joyce, Lowell, Pound, Baudelaire and countless others. Shapiro then advocated a non-ideological poetry, a verse of healthy acceptance, a any, fun-filled verse that would free poetry of its chains.

Those who were very patient may have, applying numerous censoring devices, come away with some ideas and insights. But this reviewer finds it difficult to hide his irritation. Shapiro's approach was terribly deficient. While damning ideologies and the poetry of ideas he used his own ideology, as narrow and confined as that of his self-chosen opponents. This might have been understandable had Shapiro really proposed something totally different. But while expounding on absurd poetry he surrounded his treatment with the aura of meaning; a meaning of supposed non-meaning as charged as that which he condemned. Perhaps his most valuable statement was that poetry might be waning, faltering in a process of imitation. But this is hardly a revolutionary idea, at most indicative of any given period is imitative and soon forgotten. Even more discouraging was that Shapiro proved totally incapable of answering questions, either in the discussion session or in private. When asked what he thought of James Joyce as a novelist, Shapiro replied that Joyce was a "sweet man." When asked again, this time referring to Ulysses, Shapiro had nothing to say. He also demonstrated himself unable to assess the value of Eliot's poetry, when the conversation turned to the specifics of Eliot's verse.

Further Shapiro lacked a basic insight in his criticism of ideological poetry. That such poetry exists is undeniable, and that it often proves somewhat suffocating (usually to the mass of critics and minor poets who have nothing original to say anyway) is at least a point of view. Although T.S. Eliot may have played some part in the dominance of this attitude, he does not in any way totally account for it. The search for individual meaning is not a new preoccupation but one which continually arises out of generally unstable conditions. The poet in this situation may devise his private system, as might the laborer in search of a belief. Such a search for meaning or creation of meaning is, as Mr. Brooks pointed out in the discussion group Tuesday afternoon, Camus' suggested solution to the absurd situation. Shapiro's claim that meaning must be cut out of poetry is the only honestly absurd statement that he made. Most of the so-called "absurd" literature written thus far, e.g. Beckett, Ionesco, etc., is based upon breaking down meaning through incongruity, a technique which presupposes and uses traditional meaning to create a new kind of logic and meaning. If poetry were to be meaningless, in the true sense of the word, it would not be linguistic, nor stylistic; it would not even have suggestion: a non-entity which might initially be laughable but soon utterly boring.

To this reviewer Shapiro was a disappointment in what was generally a brilliant week of symposium.

Resume of Composers Given by Cecil Effinger

By John Giannes

Dr. Cecil Effinger, a composer with an international reputation, spoke to students and had one of his works performed as a part of the Symposium activities. Dr. Effinger gave his audience a brief resume' of what composers in Colorado are doing. He told us that Colorado has a chapter of the National Society of Composers of which only Colorado, Los Angeles, and Washington, D. C., are members. All major schools in Colorado have active composers. Although most of the composing done in this state is amateur, there are many publishing composers. There are six publishing composers at Colorado University alone. Dr. Effinger said that the reason for so many composers coming to Colorado was because they can work under less pressure here than in most other places.

Dr. Effinger then proceeded to act as a spokesman for traditional writing. He said that an intelligent and diligent composer writes to please the public. Nowadays we get less real music than in the past from our composers. Most composers write sounds, not music. We are "lacking a reason to compose and a commitment to music." It is wrong for a composer to think of himself as a scientist combining sounds. Dr. Effinger said that depending on foundation and series is "bussfooting" and avoiding the issue" and involves no commitment.

Later in the week we heard several speakers who contradicted what Cecil Effinger said. Abraham Kaplan implied that not all artists produce to please the public and if their art expresses the artist's view of some segment of life and if this corresponds with something accepted as truth, the work can embody truth in itself. This, it

Shut Down Count Down

Colorado College students are asked to avoid counting off the seconds near the end of the final period in a hockey game at the Broadmoor World Arena. At least one rival goal can be attributed to confusion resulting from students' failing to stop counting when the official clock stopped. Against Michigan State, the CC team held an 8-6 margin going into the final 10 seconds of play. The overjoyed student body started counting off the seconds, despite the fact that the clock stopped with about five seconds to go. The weary hockey players skated away from the net as they thought time had expired and the Spartans capitalized on the dangerous set-up and pulled within one goal of CC. Since CC has played very close hockey games, an error of this type in future games might prove to be very costly.

A Night with the Animals

By James Dyson

"The Theater of the Absurd" became a much worked phrase during the last week. In fact, with the ground work laid by Dr. Whiting, it became quite fashionable to voice one's opinion on the matter without having any first-hand knowledge of "the theater of the absurd," other than a superficial reading of Samuel Beckett's Waiting for Godot.

Those who were interested in seeing drama of this school, rather than just talking about it, had an opportunity Saturday night to see a production of Edward Albee's The Zoo Story. In this student production James Fox and John Giannes were directed by William McMillen to a very entertaining and thought-provoking interpretation of Albee's play.

At the beginning, Mr. Fox's timing was poor (not to be confused with pace), and even though this covered a slightly uncomfortable feeling, he at no time fell out of character. Slowly the timing was righted and by mid-plot the speeches were in balance and the lines, with poetic content, sounded well.

The actors played well together. A sharp contrast was achieved between the characters of Jerry and Peter, but, happily enough, not at the sacrifice of an underlying common bond. One must admire the method used to establish this common bond, for it lay in the ability of the actors and not in Albee's pen. The play itself has many meanings and could be directed pretty much at the discretion of any fine director, such as William McMillen. McMillen displayed a wonderfully balanced stage throughout the play. A good unity of blocking was achieved, considering that a single three piece set was used. Only two moves came to mind that did not seem properly motivated and in these cases the fault would be mainly with the actors rather than the director.

Perhaps the largest fault in direction was found at the very end of the play. Martin Esslin, as well as other critics, warn of innate melodramatic climax. In the CC production this melodramatic climax was enhanced by the use of a spot light and the utterance of a "My God" that left some question in the mind of the beholder whether God had seen fit to surround the body of poor Jerry with an earthly glow and take him home, so to speak, or if Jerry was merely another dead animal. The dead animal concept would seem to be dearer to the heart of Albee than the theory of eternal rest.

The play as a unit was the best dramatic work that CC has seen in the last three years. Hopefully, the dramatic talent now on campus can be enticed to present a few more short plays that would inform and entertain the student body.

COLLEGE STUDENTS SELF-CENTERED

By Sally Lentz

At the very time when America confronts a supreme challenge to moral leadership in the world, the roots of such leadership—in the sense of personal responsibility felt by its citizenry for the welfare of others—seem to be drying up. Our society is experiencing a loss of moral and social commitment.

The evaporation of social responsibility is particularly true among college-educated youth. American college students, including those at Colorado College, are absorbed in self-interest. To grasp the trend of CC student's thoughts on social responsibility, a short questionnaire was distributed in Slocum and Loomis Halls. Of the 513 which were placed in student's mailboxes only 19 were returned. In answer to the question, "What is my social responsibility as a college student?" the following responses were given:

1. "Keep the school's sacred nose clean."
2. "To act as a gentleman."
3. "To pursue my personal goals within the social framework of the school."
4. "To do what I want as long as it doesn't hurt others."
5. "Live and let live."
6. "To prepare myself for the life that I will lead after college."

The trend in the thinking of CC students seemed to be one of obeying laws rather than doing positive works of good. The previously-mentioned 19 students were generous in giving several minutes of their time to answer two questions. What of the other 494 students who did not? Did they not want to answer the questionnaire because it was of no personal benefit to them?

Competent Jazz in Session; Irrelevant for Symposium

By Bruce Colvin

The Friday night Perkins Hall "Jam Session" failed to fulfill a basic underlying objective of Symposium Week. The initial fault is not essentially to be found in the musicianship displayed during the evening, and dwelling upon the fact that it was in actuality an organized concert instead of the advertised jam session could only be a superficial criticism. Rather, the concert's failure was due to the nature of the music presented, representing a surrender to mass tastes. Judged upon an entertainment level, the performance might have rated rather highly but this was not intended to be an evening of popular music. Though they all very definitely have their niche in American music, the contributions to the "Jam Session" were out of context with the aims of this year's Symposium. The lecture developed and achieved in the Fine Arts. This incongruity was further magnified by the contrast of Cunther Schuller's excellent lecture on new directions in contemporary jazz, presented on the afternoon of the same day. The lecture developed an important framework that the evening concert totally ignored; the scope of the "Jam Session" was insignificant as a consequence.

The concert opened with the Neil Bridge Trio, featuring Johnny Smith on guitar. Bridge is a pianist from Denver whose group, consisting of bassist Bill Bastien and Darrell Coes, drums, has worked with Smith in the Denver area for the last four years. The effect of their long experience together was demonstrated in clean ensemble work and smooth execution; all four men are precise and technically adept musicians. But the total forty-five minute performance was a pallid, boring illustration of a sort of businessmen's jazz, with the Trio accompanying unobtrusively and with very little imagination, and featuring unadventurous solos by all four men. Over half of the seven tunes played were popular songs (a practice which Cunther Schuller noted in his lecture has declined greatly in contemporary jazz); among the jazz compositions performed were Bobby Timmons' "Moanin'," a funky soul tune rendered sterile by the four, and "Shiny Stockings" (made considerably well known by Count Basie), which was the vehicle for the best guitar solo of the evening. Smith's improvisation often displayed good ideas, but these were negated by such slick and superficial devices as the "amen" coda concluding "Moanin'."

The B. J. Young Trio followed, to perform three medium tempo pieces: "I Remember April," "Green Dolphin Street" (opening with a variation on the theme), and "On the Street Where You Live," from the Broadway musical My Fair Lady. With Joe Wilcox on bass and Henry English, drums, the Colorado College group was one of unfulfilled promise. The Trio sounded unrehearsed, and the lack of variety in tempo made their twenty minutes grow rather tedious for the listener. However, a few fresh ideas filtered through the mediocrity, exhibiting briefly the potential of this combination.

Undoubtedly the most refreshing portion of the concert belonged to young guitarist Tom Ross, who was featured with the Neil Bridge Trio, "Gone With the Wind," the first tune, was the high point of the evening, with the guitarist's vitality lifting the Trio to greater achievement. The second piece was Ross' paraphrase on an early Stravinsky composition, renamed "Patruska Blues" (and performed in 6/8 time). Though the theme was rather raggedly performed in ensemble, the group gathered a swinging momentum and closed after guitar and piano solos, and restatement of the theme.

Appearing as the last act, and engaging every member of the audience (because they play purely for the fun of it) while at the same time making any further serious debate about the aims of the "Jam Session" impossible—was the Gutbucket Seven. With Lloyd Brewer, trumpet; Thomas Ross (of Colorado College) on clarinet; Maxwell McRoberts, trombone; John Paul Jones on guitar; pianist Marshall Sprague; bassist Dick Fichter; and drummer Dexter Peake, the veteran crew blew entertainingly and sometimes admirably through approximately thirty minutes of Dixieland. Brewer and Ross also put in several notable choruses.

While the crowd left to the closing "One O'Clock Jump" of Johnny Smith and the Neil Bridge Trio, one could not avoid acknowledging the guitarist's graciousness in assembling the program. It's unfortunate that the results were so irrelevant.

Frat Changes Occurred Due to Deferred Rush

With the advent of the spring academic term, a new chapter in the life of Colorado College's fraternal system has commenced. On or about Wednesday, January 9, one hundred and three men registered for rush week under the new deferred rush system. Of the 103 men who registered, 90 were found to meet the minimum academic requirement (1.5) necessary to pledge. A total of 67 freshmen and one transfer student accepted formal bids by the fraternities, and thus became pledges.

During the previous rush week in September, 1961, the fraternities offered 110 rush bids, with 86 men accepting.

Professor Robin Rudoff, sponsor of the inter-fraternity council, stated that a number of significant changes occurred due to the deferred pledging of freshmen. First, due to the grade-point requirement, a number of the poorer academic risks were eliminated. Prof. Rudoff pointed out that he thought the overall academic performance of the fraternities would be correspondingly enhanced. He also felt that deferred pledging afforded both the fraternities and the rushees an opportunity to be more critical, and for the freshmen to be more selective about the chapters which they chose.

Both Prof. Rudoff and Dean J. J. Reid expressed the opinion that there was a need for a greater amount of personal contact between the fraternities and the freshmen; that one of the main features of deferred rush was not fully exploited due to the lack of communication. Nevertheless, Prof. Rudoff stated that, in general, deferred rush "should be better than fall rush."

Professor Ellis Attends Meetings in New York

Professor Amanda M. Ellis of Colorado College has returned from New York after attending to business matters and attending the meeting of the Modern Language Association, the College English Association, and the National Council of Teachers of English in Washington. The attending college professors heard talks on new courses, on the superior student and his curriculum, and on the new humanities courses.

Miss Ellis' article on her course in Medieval Literature published in the December issue of the College English Association Critique met with considerable comment and approval.

Others who have added their approval of the new course include Pyke Johnson, Jr., editor in chief, Doubleday Anchor Books; Professor Carlton Wells, University of Michigan; Victor Weybright, editor of New American Library Books; and Professor Max Holdberg, head of the Humanities Division, Pennsylvania State College.

Who's Afraid of Clement Greenberg

By Howard L. Smith

Clement Greenberg, noted art critic, told me last week to always be honest with ourselves, particularly when viewing works of art. Keeping this in mind we must look at Greenberg's lecture and be honest with ourselves about our reactions. Even though we may be sympathetic with many of the speaker's views we should not let our feelings influence our evaluation of his speech.

The person whose attention was focused on Greenberg hears numerous opinions. He learned that the speaker feels that modern abstract painting is not something unrelated to all previous art in history. Quite to the contrary, abstract art is a natural sequel to such forms of art as impressionism, fauvism and cubism. Furthermore, Greenberg contends that many abstract expressionists are even closer to the old masters in a few respects than were the impressionists or cubists. He bases this opinion on the fact that artists today are placing an ever-increasing importance on the many mediums, materials and supports which can be used and the digression one shows in using them.

Mr. Greenberg maintains that there is one fundamental difference between the art of the old masters and that of the abstract expressionists though. He claims that excellent modern art makes explicit what the art of the past made implicit. Furthermore, the speaker feels that one's appreciation of art of the present day will give one a greater insight into the art of the old masters. This is extremely nice to hear. However, Mr. Greenberg did not take the time to share with us his added insight with the audience. His listeners did not really find out why Mr. Greenberg admires artists such as Jackson Pollock or Barnett Newman. The speaker was not pressed to tell us why certain paintings of the former were successful while others were not. The fact that certain paintings happen to "work" is of significance to many people. Perhaps Mr. Greenberg should have told us how and why these paintings fall short of the old and others don't. But if he were to approach modernist art in this manner he may not have gone far. For the speaker himself said that everybody lacks an ability to verbalize explicitly beyond a certain point about a work of art. Nevertheless, Mr. Greenberg was willing in fact he was quite eager, to talk about specific paintings. It is at this point, when the question of individual commenced, that the audience showed its true colors. Various people, who may very well have been terrified of that evil man on the stage who propounded a "formal art form, proceeded to ask numerous naive questions. Mr. Greenberg, instead of being questioned about the content of his lecture and the opinion he holds, was forced to justify abstract painting, time and time again. He waited on the edge of his seat, feeling that a question asking whether or not it might be coming back into vogue. It gladdens the heart to think that all those people in the audience who never will step into an art gallery, who never will take the time to be honest with themselves about the art they do "stare at" who never will murmur "Rippenstein's name" who never will patently said that if one is to appreciate fine art, this appreciation must in most cases will have to be, the divated—much time and effort often have to be put forth by the interested person. Perhaps Mr. Greenberg should try us again—self room brighter day, possibly when O'leary Ford Still guards tigers at an Broadway Zoo.

Standard Is Student-Proposed

By Juan Reid

ED NOTE—The following article was requested from Dean Juan Reid by the Editorial Board of the TIGER.

Contrary to the opinion of many, the proposed standard of conduct is not the brain child of the administration. The idea of a written statement on a standard of conduct was first proposed by student members of the Committee on Undergraduate Life more than a year ago. Subsequent discussions, both in CUL and the ASCC Executive Council, led to an amendment to the ASCC Constitution that authorized the establishment of the Student Policy Committee. This committee, which is composed of seven students who are presidents or chairmen of student boards and councils that govern specific areas of student life, was specifically charged with the responsibility of formulating and publishing the non-academic policies of Colorado College.

At the time the ASCC Policy Committee was given this task there was general agreement that there was a need for a statement of policy concerning expected standards of conduct. The students of Colorado College have a right to know what is expected of them outside the classroom as well as inside. Prospective students and their parents also should be informed. The various student judicial bodies should have a written standard upon which they can base their decisions.

Critics of the proposed standard object on the grounds that it is not specific and fails to define its terms. Others maintain that mature college students need no code to guide them. It would be a monumental task to list the specific kinds of misconduct that a college student might become involved in, and it would require a code book of several volumes to list them. The specifics would have to rest on the decisions rendered by the various judicial bodies that would use the standard as a guide.

For those who maintain that college students are mature and therefore need no code to guide them, I can only point to the many immature acts that the student judicial bodies must consider each year.

The proposed standard is the result of four months of labor by the committee, during which time they have reviewed a number of similar statements that have been published by other colleges and universities. The statement has undergone a number of revisions in an effort to satisfy its critics. Unfortunately not everyone sees eye to eye, and some students do not accept the idea that they have a responsibility to the college community in areas of student behavior as well as in the area of academic performance.

CC Alumni Magazine Wins Best In Region

For the second consecutive year, the Colorado College Magazine has been named the "Best Alumni Publication for 1962" in the Rocky Mountains by District VII of the American Alumni Council.

The 10,000 circulation quarterly won the competition over university and college alumni magazines in Colorado, Montana, New Mexico, Utah and Wyoming.

In various subcategories the Colorado College Magazine earned one first place and four second place awards. The magazine was judged the best in coverage of student affairs. It won second place in such areas as photography, alumni events, general appearance and writing.

The Colorado College magazine is edited by Mrs. Ernest, wife of Prof. Bernard Ernest, chairman of the art department at Colorado College, and head of the Fine Arts Center painting school. Mrs. Ernest, a mother of three, has been editing the prize-winning magazine from her home on a part time basis for the past two and a half years. Mrs. Ernest has been a reporter for the Minneapolis Tribune, and has done public relations for several non-profit organizations in Colorado Springs. She holds a bachelor's degree from the University of Minnesota.

The Colorado College Magazine, founded in 1934, was edited for many years by Miss Lorena Berger, secretary of the college and alumni secretary. She still is a regular contributor.

The Winter Carnival will not be this weekend, February 2 and 3, but rather on the 16th and 17th of this month.

Statistics Indicate Success Of Deferred Rush System

By Peigi Benham

Colorado College's first semester on a deferred rush system recently ended and, with the formal rush over, sororities are ready to begin a new semester replete with pledges and new ideas for the Greeks. This formal rush, which lasted three days and saw open houses, informal parties, and finally, preference dinners, closed with the pledging of eighty-seven women, two of them upperclasswomen.

In comparison with previous years this is a higher percentage of freshman women pledged than in the past, when a substantial part of those going through rush were upperclasswomen and transfers. The open rush held in the fall saw fourteen upperclasswomen pledged, which probably accounts for this difference.

The following table of figures from fall rush for the past two years, and figures from the January rush of this year, gives an indication of the way deferred rush compares with past rushes. Naturally, after not quite a year on a deferred rush system, the figures are nothing more than indications, but they may provide a certain degree of insight.

This table shows several interesting things. First, as already mentioned, is the decrease, in 1963, in the number of upperclasswomen going through rush, which is accounted for at least partly by the fall open rush. Next, the number of freshman women who registered for rush in 1963 is the same as the number who registered in the 1961-62 fall rush (the figure for 1960-61 is different largely due to the size of that freshman class of women), a fact which is especially interesting in view of the fact that twenty-eight freshman women were ineligible for rush because of grades on the deferred rush system, a factor which was not present in past rushes. The final, and most important statistic, concerns the percentage of girls who finally pledged sororities in each of these rushes as compared to the number who registered for rush.

From these percentages it would seem that the girls who went through rush in January, 1963, were much more certain about pledging and were going through rush with this specific intention, whereas in past years girls were probably much less sure about their purpose in rushing. Another factor which would seem to confirm this statement is that in the rush just past there were fewer withdrawals from rush than in previous years. The interest shown in rush with regard to registration figures was about the same for this rush as in the past, but the percentage who actually pledged was substantially higher, as can be seen from the above figures.

Assemblies Committee

Under the auspices of the Colorado College International Relations Club and the Public Lectures Committee, Mr. Aaron Nash, Consul-General of the State of Israel for the 11 Western States, Alaska and Hawaii, will present a lecture on "Israel: A New Culture in an Old Land," on Tuesday, February 5, at 11:00 in Perkins Hall. He should include such topics as the Kibbutz movement and the problem of integrating Jews from varied cultural backgrounds.

Tuesday night he will speak on "Israel's Foreign Policy."

Mr. Nash was educated in Prague and Jerusalem and during World War II was connected with the Jewish Agency's Liaison Office to the British forces. During the Israeli War of Independence he was a member of the General Staff of the Israeli Defense Army. In later years he has held high government office and just before his present appointment was Director of the Inspector General's Bureau.

Students and faculty interested in the Middle East or in foreign affairs are cordially invited to attend this open lecture.

Gamer Views Jazz in Japan

Colorado College music Professor Carlton Gamer, who has been living in a Buddhist temple in Kyoto, Japan, says American popular music is having a tremendous influence in Japan. "American music is heard all over Japan," said Professor Gamer, who returned this week to the Colorado College campus after a fall semester visit to that country.

"Jazz has been completely accepted and assimilated by the Japanese. In fact, much of the music you hear over the radio in Japan is Western. Radio music falls into three areas: American popular, Western classical, and Japanese."

He noted that most of the classical music heard in Japan is European. "The Japanese are interested in all kinds of Western music. They are great music lovers." In fact, he said, "certain kinds of Japanese music are having a hard time."

He made it clear, however, that Japanese music is not likely to be replaced by Western music. "They both will continue to exist side by side. In other words, Western music will become a part of Japanese culture."

Professor Gamer, accompanied by his wife, Eleanor, and their 13-year-old son, Mike, spent three months in Japan. While there they made their headquarters with Mrs. Gamer's mother, Mrs. Ruth F. Sasaki, a Zen Buddhist priest and director of the first Zen Institute of America in Japan. They lived in a house on the Buddhist temple grounds.

A composer whose works have been performed in New York, Chicago, Denver and Colorado Springs, Professor Gamer admits some of his recent works have been influenced by oriental musical concepts, as result of his long-time interest in Eastern culture. One of his early compositions, "Sonata Breve," had its premier performance during the Colorado College symposium on "The Contemporary Arts and the Citizen."

Unitarian Church Plans Adult Discussion Group

The All Souls Unitarian Church of Colorado College has planned a program for the Adult Discussion Group with the first two group speakers coming from the Colorado College faculty. This group meets at 9:45 a. m. Sunday mornings at the church located at 730 N. Tejon.

On January 27, Dr. Kenneth Curran, chairman, economics department, will discuss the "Principles of Economics," and philosophy, and Dr. Ray Werner, department of economics, will discuss questions of ethics and morality in business organizations and businessmen.

The February 3 session will concern itself with "The Morality of a Business Society." Dr. Daniel Rucker, department of philosophy, and Dr. Ray Werner, department of economics, will discuss questions of ethics and morality in business organizations and businessmen.

CORRECTION

Tiger SPORTS

CC Loses to Denver Dropped from First

By Mike Hiltz

The CC Tigers showed a capacity crowd at the DU Arena that they could be a team to contend with, as they lost to a powerful Pioneer squad 6-5. Lacking great individual performers, the Tiger squad exhibited fine teamwork which almost won the game.

In the first period, Denver capitalized on Tiger penalties and on Tiger nervousness to build up a comfortable 4-2 lead.

CC scored its first goal at 4:28. After holding the Pioneers in their own end, Cairns cleared the puck in front of the net. Dixon picked up the pass and fired the puck past DU goalie Rudy Unis.

The second Tiger goal came after a shot by Simus rebounded in front of the cage. After a skirmish in front of the net, Cairns gained possession of the puck and tied the score 2-2. DU then pulled ahead with two comparatively easy tallies.

In the second period, the Tigers displayed good fore-checking and much more spirit and aggressiveness. CC opened the scoring when Jeff Sauer, coming from the right corner, passed to Roger Simus, who brought the score to 4-3. Hamill scored again for DU to give them a 5-3 lead, which Sauer then reduced to 5-4 on a perfect pass from Ken Cairns. The Tigers had many other scoring chances, but could not find the mark.

The third period was very even; the defense of both teams prevented much scoring. The Tigers tied the game at 5-5 on a score by Stouffer. Art Berglund raced down the right wing with Stouffer trailing. They worked past the defense, and Berglund passed to Stouffer, who beat Unis with a shot from 35 feet out.

John Art won the game for DU when he broke away down the center and faked past goalie Art Warwick. Coach Frasca pulled Warwick for a sixth forward, but could not tie the game.

In the second game of the series, the CC Tigers could not match the experience and polish of the Pioneers, as the Bengals went down to defeat 6-1. Only in the opening period did the Tigers have a sustained attack. They carried the game to the Pioneers and, with effective back-checking and fore-checking, held the DU team to a single goal. Stouffer opened the game's scoring when he tipped in a long slap shot by Dixon at 7:07. A fine pass by Kilbreth allowed Dixon to get his shot away. With less than a minute remaining in the first period, Denver tied the score at 1-1 on a goal by Johnston.

In the second and third periods, DU showed the style that has carried them to the top of the league. While holding the Tigers scoreless, they tallied five times to put the game out of reach.

Colorado College rebounded from these two losses to beat the Duluth branch of Minnesota University, 8-5, in a game played Jan. 19 at the Broadmoor World Arena. The upset came after Duluth had beaten DU 4-2 the previous evening on the Pioneers' home ice.

In the early stages of the game, defensive play predominated, as neither team could produce an effective sustained offense. CC's style of play clearly had the visitors badly off balance. This style, along with a tightened defense, gave the Tigers the edge throughout the contest.

Duluth opened the scoring at 7:21, with CC short a man. With Doyle out of position, Tok slapped in a rebound for the score. A minute later, Alex Yankovitch got the first goal of an eventual hat trick. Assisted by Roger Simus, he took the puck from a mix-up to the right of the Duluth net. With good stick handling, he faked a defenseman and slipped it past the DU goalie.

CC scored again after good teamwork by the line of Berglund, Sauer, and Fordyce. Berglund took a pass just inside the Duluth end and fired in the second goal for the Tigers. Mike Tok scored his second goal to tie the game at 2-2 early in the second period. His hard shot from 40 feet out left Doyle with no chance for the save.

Yankovitch scored his second goal after a scramble in front of the Duluth net. Score climbed to 4-2 after a shot by Don Stouffer from 35 feet out was deflected by Jim Frolick. Duluth narrowed the margin after a long shot from the blue line trickled into the net.

The second period ended with the score 4-3. The good, hard checking and sharp passing of the Tigers continued in the third period. They capitalized on poor defensive play by the Bulldogs to score four more goals.

With a minute gone in the third period, McGiffert tied the score at 4-4 with a shot from close in. Stouffer gave the Tigers an edge when he took a shot from Art Berglund and skated right in on the Duluth goalie. When DeLuca made his move, Stouffer flipped the puck in for the score. Less than a minute later, Beasley tied the score at 5-5.

The Tigers went ahead to stay, scoring three goals in the final seven minutes. Duluth failed on many occasions to get out of their own end, as CC kept applying the pressure. At 12:59 Art Berglund scored unassisted after a scramble in front of the Duluth goal.

Alex Yankovitch made the score 7-5 with the help of Wayne McAlpine and Dan McGill. He took the puck in front of the net and beat DeLuca for the third time. The final goal came with just 12 seconds remaining in the game. Jeff Sauer took a pass from Ken Cairns, flashed down the right wing, and skated in for the goal.

This non-conference win gave Colorado College an 8-3 overall record going into the tough Minnesota series.

GOALIE PETE DOYLE is ready as CC defensemen close in on loose puck.

Cagers Lose Two to CSC Team Still Remains Winless

The Colorado College basketball team found the Colorado State College Bears to be poor hosts as the Greeley team thumped the Tigers in two contests played on the Bear's home court January 11 and 12. The Bengals lost 72-54 on Friday night and 52-44 on Saturday. CC's two defeats left them with an 0-3 Rocky Mountain Conference record and a season mark of no wins and nine losses. CSC now stands 3-1 in RMC action.

Bob Heiny paced the Tigers with 32 points in Friday night's losing cause. Senior captain Gregg Smith also was in double figures with 13 markers.

For the first ten minutes of the opening half, the Tigers matched the Bears, and the Tigers were only down 1 point with 9:28 remaining. 19-18. Greeley's second unit entered the game and sparked CSC to a 36-24 halftime advantage. CC was unable to make up the difference in the second twenty minutes as the Bears dominated the backboards.

CSC had a hot night from the field as they connected on 30 of their 74 attempted shots for a 40.5 percentage. At the foul line the Bears pumped in 12 of 19 for a 63.2 average. The Bengals hooped 22 of 54 goal shots for a 40.7 percentage, and they chalked up 10 of 20 from the foul line.

Phil Hart was the top rebounder for CC with 8, plus sinking 7 points. Bob Baker tallied 4, Steve Hildreth sank 3, Dave Herrington and Pete Susemihl each accounted for 2 points.

The CC cagers on Saturday night led at the half 26-25 after a fine aggressive and hustling effort. Rebounding again proved to be a deciding factor in the second half as CSC's Charles Williams had a record breaking 23 rebounds. Freshman Phil Hart chalked up 13 points followed by Bob Heiny's 12. Baker scored 8, Smith 6, Susemihl 3, and Herrington 2.

Bengals Meet Minnesota; Tough Series Is Foreseen

Colorado College opens a tough 2 game series with the University of Minnesota Gophers when the teams face off at 8:15 in the Broadmoor World Arena. The Tigers are seeking to get back in the winning column after losing 2 big games, and first place, to the Denver Pioneers. The Tigers will be up against a team that beat Michigan Tech, defending NCAA Hockey Champions last weekend. The Gophers feature a very tight defense, but have little offensive punch as yet. The Tigers, on the other hand, have a very potent scoring machine, but are still weak on defense, although they are improving.

Colorado College is currently deadlocked with Minnesota and Michigan Tech for third place in WCHA standings, behind North Dakota and Denver University,

Undermanned CC Skier Place Last in Big Meet

Contrary to all expectations, it was the Symposium which handicapped skiing, rather than the other way around. CC could not field a complete team for their first entry in an Intercollegiate ski meet in at least ten years. The four men representing the Tigers (instead of an 8 man team), despite valiant efforts, could not accumulate enough points and had to be content with bringing up the rear. Six colleges participated in the 4-way meet, sponsored by the Air Academy at Winter Park, January 19 and 20.

In the Giant Slalom CC came in ahead of the Air Academy, but in all other events CC was last because of dearth of runners. Three men ran in the Giant Slalom and the Slalom each (instead of four), only two in the Cross Country race, and only one CC jumper leaped. The competition was stiff, including member of the U.S. Olympic Squad. Air temperatures were well below zero most of the time.

CC men placed as follows:

Giant Slalom
23 Glenn Foust	119.6
26 Tony Bryan	134.8
25 Charles Bates	125.8
(This race was won by Dave Gorsuch of Western State in 52.7, followed by Chuck Herries of DU, both on the Olympic Squad).
Slalom
15 Foust	74.0
24 Bryan	85.2
Cross Country (16 km)
14 Bates	1:17:56
26 Foust	1:18:59
(Won by Demers, Western State, in 1:04:49).
Jumping
16 Gus Hart	177.2 pts.
(Won by Floyd, DU with 221.6 pts.)
Final Team Standings

Utah	526.66
Air Force Academy	259.68
Colorado College	202.96

4th North Sea As IM- Winner

As intramural basketball underway tomorrow (Jan. 20) the Men's Residence Hall 4th North is shaping up as a heavy favorite to cop the crown with no difficulty.

Blessed to an almost super degree with basketball talent, 4th North five can be expected to roll over their opponents with greatest of ease, paced by Phil LeCuyer and 6'4" Bill B.

The races for second and 4th spots should be considerably tighter, with several teams matched as they contend for runner up positions. Among strongest will be 2nd and South, along with 3rd North possibly a darkhorse 2nd team. League newcomer Air House should be able to hold its own, but the relative capability shown so far of initiative shown so far of initiative should keep them out of the column.

The tournament this season set up under a sort of modified elimination system that allows for only one loss before team is shunted to the consolation round. This system, combined with a schedule which pits the best teams against larger and south wings, probably will quickly eliminate the chronically underhanded west cagers.

Games are to be played on Saturdays, running hourly 11 a. m. to 4 p. m. This should be a considerable improvement in an unduly crowded intramural football slate, and interest is expected to remain fairly high throughout the shorter season.

Even though this writer into the year with a 1000 point average, we'll take the consolation pick 4th North for the spot, followed at a respectable distance by 2nd South, with North just squeezed out of the semi-finals. 2nd West should be the lone west wing team to tend, making up in sheer what it lacks in height and shooting accuracy.

Frosh Hockey Begins Tonight

Freshman Hockey Season under way as the Colorado Frosh meet a strong Pioneers team at D.U. on Wednesday. The Colorado Frosh will take a rematch of the Pioneers at 8:00 p.m. in the Broadmoor World Arena.

Some experts rate the Pioneers as the strongest of the last two teams in the WCHA. According to some, Denver's effort is a potential three year all-American. Undaunted freshman coach Normand Laurence, "We'll be ready for them no matter how strong they are." Games promise to be very exciting and the public is urged to college the arena.

Standard Is Student-Proposed

By Juan Reid

ED NOTE—The following article was requested from Dean Juan Reid by the Editorial Board of the TIGER.

Contrary to the opinion of many, the proposed standard of conduct is not the brain child of the administration. The idea of a written statement on a standard of conduct was first proposed by student members of the Committee on Undergraduate Life more than a year ago. Subsequent discussions, both in CUL and the ASCC Executive Council, led to an amendment to the ASCC Constitution that authorized the establishment of the Student Policy Committee. This committee, which is composed of seven students who are presidents of student boards and councils that govern specific areas of student life, was specifically charged with the responsibility of formulating and publishing the non-academic policies of Colorado College.

At the time the ASCC Policy Committee was given this task there was general agreement that there was a need for a statement of policy concerning expected standards of conduct. The students of Colorado College have a right to know what is expected of them outside the classroom as well as inside. Prospective students and their parents also should be informed. The various student judicial bodies should have a written standard upon which they can base their decisions.

Critics of the proposed standard object on the grounds that it is not specific and fails to define its terms. Others maintain that mature college students need no code to guide them. It would be a monumental task to list the specific kinds of misconduct that a college student might become involved in, and it would require a code book of several volumes to list them. The specifics would have to rest on the decisions rendered by the various judicial bodies that would use the standard as a guide.

For those who maintain that college students are mature and therefore need no code to guide them, I can only point to the many immature acts that the student judicial bodies must consider each year.

The proposed standard is the result of four months of labor by the committee, during which time they have reviewed a number of similar statements that have been published by other colleges and universities. The statement has undergone a number of revisions in an effort to satisfy its critics. Unfortunately not everyone sees eye to eye, and some students do not accept the idea that they have a responsibility to the college community in areas of student behavior as well as in the area of academic performance.

CC Alumni Magazine Wins Best In Region

For the second consecutive year, the Colorado College Magazine has been named the "Best Alumni Publication for 1962" in the Rocky Mountains by District VII of the American Alumni Council.

The 10,000 circulation quarterly won the competition over university and college alumni magazines in Colorado, Montana, New Mexico, Utah and Wyoming.

In various subcategories the Colorado College Magazine earned one first place and four seconds. The magazine was judged the best in coverage of student affairs. It won second place in such areas as photography, alumni events, general appearance and writing.

The Colorado College magazine is edited by Mrs. Arnest, wife of Prof. Bernard Arnest, chairman of the art department at Colorado College, and head of the Fine Arts Center painting school. Mrs. Arnest, a mother of three, has been editing the prize-winning magazine from her home on a part time basis for the past two and a half years. Mrs. Arnest has been a reporter for the Minneapolis Tribune, and has done public relations for several non-profit organizations in Colorado Springs. She holds a bachelor's degree from the University of Minnesota.

The Colorado College Magazine, founded in 1934, was edited for many years by Miss Lorena Bergen, secretary of the college and alumni secretary. She still is a regular contributor.

The Winter Carnival will not be this weekend, February 2 and 3, but rather on the 16th and 17th of this month.

Statistics Indicate Success Of Deferred Rush System

By Pegi Benham

Colorado College's first semester on a deferred rush system recently ended and, with the formal rush over, sororities are ready to begin a new semester replete with pledges and new ideas for the Greeks. This formal rush, which lasted three days and saw open houses, informal parties, and finally, preference dinners, closed with the pledging of eighty-seven women, two of them upperclasswomen.

In comparison with previous years this is a higher percentage of freshman women pledged than in the past, when a substantial part of those going through rush were upperclasswomen and transfers. The open rush held in the fall saw fourteen upperclasswomen pledged, which probably accounts for this difference.

The following table of figures from fall rush for the past two years, and figures from the January rush of this year, gives an indication of the way deferred rush compares with past rushes. Naturally after not quite a year on a deferred rush system, the figures are nothing more than indications, but they may provide a certain degree of insight.

This table shows several interesting things. First, as already mentioned, is the decrease, in 1963, in the number of upperclasswomen going through rush, which is accounted for at least partly by the fall open rush. Next, the number of freshman women who registered for rush in 1963 is the same as the number who registered in the 1961-62 fall rush (the figure for 1960-61 is different largely due to the size of that freshman class of women), a fact which is especially interesting in view of the fact that twenty-eight freshman women were ineligible for rush because of grades on the deferred rush system, a factor which was not present in past rushes. The final, and most important statistic, concerns the percentage of girls who finally pledged sororities in each of these rushes as compared to the number who registered for rush.

From these percentages it would seem that the girls who went through rush in January, 1963, were much more certain about pledging and were going through rush with this specific intention, whereas in past years girls were probably much less sure about their purpose in rushing. Another factor which would seem to confirm this statement is that in the rush just past there were fewer withdrawals from rush than in previous years. The interest shown in rush with regard to registration figures was about the same for this rush as in the past, but the percentage who actually pledged was substantially higher, as can be seen from the above figures.

Assemblies Committee

Under the auspices of the Colorado College International Relations Club and the Public Lectures Committee, Mr. Aaron Nash, Consul-General of the State of Israel for the 11 Western States, Alaska and Hawaii, will present a lecture on "Is There a New Culture in Old Land?" Tuesday, February 5, at 11:00 in Perkins Hall. He should include such topics as the Kibbutz movement and the problem of integrating Jews from varied cultural backgrounds.

Tuesday night he will speak on "Israel's Foreign Policy."

Mr. Nash was educated in Prague and Jerusalem and during World War II was connected with the Jewish Agency's Liaison Office to the British forces. During the Israeli War of Independence he was a member of the General Staff of the Israeli Defense Army. In later years he has held high government office and just before his present appointment was Director of the Inspector General's Bureau.

Students and faculty interested in the Middle East or in foreign affairs are cordially invited to attend this open lecture.

Gamer Views Jazz in Japan

Colorado College music Professor Carlton Gamer, who has been living in a Buddhist temple in Kyoto, Japan, says American popular music is having a tremendous influence in Japan. "American music is heard all over Japan," said Professor Gamer, who returned this week to the Colorado College campus after a fall semester visit to that country.

"Jazz has been completely accepted and assimilated by the Japanese. In fact, much of the music you hear over the radio in Japan is Western. Radio music falls into three areas: American popular, Western classical, and Japanese."

He noted that most of the classical music heard in Japan is European. "The Japanese are interested in all kinds of Western music. They are great music lovers." In fact, he said, "certain kinds of Japanese music are having a hard time."

He made it clear, however, that Japanese music is not likely to be replaced by Western music. "They both will continue to exist side by side. In other words, Western music will become a part of Japanese culture."

Professor Gamer, accompanied by his wife, Eleanor, and their 13-year-old son, Mike, spent three months in Japan. While there they made their headquarters with Mrs. Gamer's mother, Mrs. Ruth F. Sasaki, a Zen Buddhist priest and director of the first Zen Institute of America in Japan. They lived in a house on the Buddhist temple grounds.

A composer whose works have been performed in New York, Chicago, Denver and Colorado Springs, Professor Gamer admits some of his recent works have been influenced by oriental musical concepts, as result of his long-time interest in Eastern culture. One of his early compositions, "Sonata Breve," had its premier performance during the Colorado College symposium on "The Contemporary Arts and the Citizen."

Unitarian Church Plans Adult Discussion Group

The All Souls Unitarian Church of Colorado College has planned a program for the Adult Discussion Group with the first two group speakers coming from the Colorado College faculty. This group meets at 9:45 a. m. Sunday mornings at the church located at 730 N. Tejon.

On January 27, Dr. Kenneth Curran, chairman, economics department, will discuss the "Principles of Economics," and will cover such points as the jargon of economists and economic terms, some current economic problems, possibilities, and policies.

The February 3 session will concern itself with "The Morality of a Business Society." Dr. Darnell Rucker, department of philosophy, and Dr. Ray Wiegman, department of economics, will discuss questions of ethics and morality in business organizations and businessmen.

CORRECTION

There was an error made in last week's TIGER which stated that the Essay on the Symposium should be 500 words in length. The Essay should be up to 2500 words in length.

The Necessity of Understanding

What remains after months of planning and discussion in formulating a student standard is an unsatisfactory, incomplete attempt in accomplishing this goal. Although a great deal of time has been devoted to the formation of this precept, no acceptable standard has yet been presented. The dubious, defensive reactions by a majority of students to the code has illustrated a warranted, negative response.

One must first question the necessity and function of a student code. Its creator, the Student Policy Committee, has repeatedly insisted that such a standard has long been tacitly understood, although it has never been stated in written form. If stated in black and white, the code could be used in various college publications, and more important, it would express a definite, tangible purpose from which the several student judicial organizations could "legitimately" operate. The S.P.C. also assured us the code would not be used as the basis for any decision by a student judiciary. The Committee's spokesman, Jo Heller, with the support of her Committee, recently guaranteed a student audience that in no way would a student judicial body refer to the code in the prosecution of a student. This assurance seemed to alleviate many doubts of the apprehensive audience.

Yet, what are codes or standards normally used for? Dean Juan Reid's article (page 1) states that the code will provide a basis from which judicial bodies can judge. This point, contrary to the S.P.C. assurances, illuminates a well established, undeniable fact. Codes are used to give and define the basis under which an organization will operate. It is a general but elementary definition of the particulars that fall under it. Codes are meant to be used, to be referred to, to provide a guiding path the particulars can follow. There is no way to ignore or by-pass such a statement or code. Perhaps the S.P.C. could attach an addendum to the code specifying that because of its general, and at times, vague nature, it would be unlawful and illegal for any judicial body to interpret the code when adjudicating a case. But needless to say, this would only be a laborious and cumbersome process, probably cancelling the code's original effects. Let there be no doubt that if a standard is passed without stipulations as to its use, student judicial bodies, if not immediately, will in the future, either consciously or inadvertently, base their decisions on such a standard. A defiance of that standard would make a decision hypocritical and ludicrous.

The fear of the proposed standard is more directly related to its meaning than to its potential uses. It seems reasonable to assume that if a standard is in accordance with our beliefs, then its passage and use might be justifiable. The standard was intended, as has been stated by the S.P.C. to help justify student judicial participation, in addition to creating a standard—one that students had initiated and supported themselves. Assuming that the judicial organizations would use a code in their decisions, it would only seem right to incorporate within the code only those areas in which student judicial groups should want to have jurisdiction. Otherwise, students would be agreeing to a standard that supersedes the present boundary of the various student judiciaries. For instance, the recently proposed student standard nonchalantly uses the phrase "all aspects of morality." Certainly, it is common knowledge that no student judiciary has the power to decide "all aspects of morality." Such a decision is in the hands of the administration. Besides this, there is doubt whether students wish to judge and accept responsibility on "all aspects of morality." Moreover, the administration's present definition of morality is extremely vague. Therefore, the use of "all aspects of morality" in a student code would be irrelevant to establishing a basis for student judiciaries while amplifying written student support of the administration's definition of the phrase—a definition that has not been satisfactorily defined. Remember, if students endorse a standard, they are voluntarily entering into an agreement. It is most important the student know the implications and execution of such an agreement.

This editorial strongly recommends that students consider new avenues of approach to the question, as exemplified by the two "Letters to the Editor" found in today's Tiger. By this process, students will have a word in the laws that govern their college.

HDS

LETTERS to the EDITOR

Dear Editor:

The following is a proposed Colorado College Code of Moral Conduct—

We, the members of the Colorado College Community, hereby establish the following Code of Moral Conduct. We do not condone and will not tolerate, while the college is in session, either the excessive use of alcoholic beverages or the indulgence in extramarital sexual relationships, and for the practice and enforcement of the rules stated below we accept full responsibility.

A—Drinking.

1. The College Community will, henceforth, enforce the laws of the State of Colorado concerning age and the presentation of identification in public places. Any student apprehended and/or reported using a false identification card will be placed on social and academic probation for the first offense, and will be expelled from the College for the second offense.

2. Under the existing laws of the State of Colorado, it is illegal to have alcoholic beverages on property granted by the State for educational purposes. Since Colorado College is on such property, it will, henceforth, strictly prohibit:

(a.) Possession or use of alcoholic beverages on any College property. Any student proven guilty of possession or use of alcoholic beverages on said property will be placed on social and academic probation for the first offense, and expelled from the College for the second offense.

(b.) Possession or use of alcoholic beverages by a College social organization. Any such organization proven guilty of possession or use of alcoholic beverages on College property, or property connected with the College, will be placed on social probation for one semester. The penalty for a second offense of a given organization in one given academic year will be decided upon by the College Administration.

3. Furthermore, Colorado College, over and above supporting the existing laws of the State of Colorado, will set and uphold its own standard. Any student drinking to excess, apprehended on or off campus, will be given a warning for the first offense, and will be expelled from the College for the second offense.

B—Student Relationships.

1. Any student, male or female, proven to have indulged in extramarital sexual relationships, will be expelled from the College.

2. Any student apprehended and/or reported using any College building for any other than its stated purpose will be given one warning, and will be expelled from the College for the second offense.

3. Any student conducting himself in a vulgar or offensive manner, on or off campus, will be given one warning, and expelled from the College for the second offense.—L.A.B.

Dear Editor:

In the discussion surrounding the Proposed Standard it is more useful to talk about what should be, rather than what has gone wrong. The Student Policy Committee is not being called upon to write a standard of conduct for CC students. The administration of the college will ultimately determine what the conduct of students should be and will enforce that standard, regardless of what the ASCC and its committees resolve. The question which the student body and the ASCC must face is this: what PART of the administration's standard does the student body wish to enforce with itself.

There is the possibility that the student body may wish to enforce whatever the administration finds suitable in any given case. But I believe that the majority of the students feel that the college's role in the social life of students should be smaller than it is, and smaller than it might be under the Proposed Standard. I believe that the majority of the students would agree with the following statement by Alexis de Tocqueville from "Democracy in America": "The citizen of the United States is taught from infancy to rely upon his own exertions, in order to resist the evils and difficulties of life; he looks upon the social authority with an eye of distrust and anxiety, and he claims its assistance only when he is unable to do without it. This habit may be traced even in the schools..."

If the student body does not feel competent, for whatever reason, to determine and enforce "all aspects of morality," then we must determine in just what ways it can conscientiously work. In attacking this problem I have come up with four large categories. Perhaps there are more or perhaps two of them can be combined, but in any event I offer them to the student body in hopes of aiding its effort to sound out its conscience.

The first of these categories is simply that of rules and regulations. The dorm rules, the regulations of the student regulations—all of these have been set up to simulate a home-like atmosphere and to provide for the smooth functioning of the college. Anyone who broke any of these regulations would clearly be damaging the college and thus damaging his fellow students and therefore the review of his case before a student judicial body would be justified.

Secondly, if a student should fall behind in his studies (which IS the reason we are here), either because of a lack of intelligence or because of willful neglect, he would likewise be damaging his fellow students for student decision to come to CC primarily because of its academic standing and its faculty.

Thirdly, if a student's conduct publicly damaged the name of the college he would likewise be damaging the future of his fellow students and thus be subject to student judicial review.

Finally, if a student should cause another student to fall into any of these categories he would obviously be damaging the student body and student judicial review would be justified.

If a Standard were formulated which included these four points (and additional ones perhaps) it would not in any way mean that this is ALL that a student might be disciplined for. It would mean that this is all the disciplinary action which the students would care to undertake. The administration would continue to enforce its standards, whether or not the prevailing opinion supported them. I believe that the Student Policy Committee must decide whether it aims to formulate a general standard of conduct (which I do not believe it can do, since it is not the administration) or whether it, as an organ of the student body, is going to deliberate to what extent the student judicial organizations are going to be the administration's partner in enforcing the administration's standards upon the student body. If the student body clearly knows what the administration's standards are and it can cooperate in their enforcement with good conscience, BUT if the student body does not really know what the administration's standards are, or if it does not agree with them, then it should not sign itself into partnership with them. Obviously, I believe that the latter condition is the true one. And for this reason I have suggested the above four areas, in which I believe that the student body CAN be a partner and still be true to itself.—Bradley J. Snyder

Revised College

Membership in the College community is a privilege, not a right. An atmosphere of freedom with responsibility is a standard through the recognition of a standard of conduct which tends to all areas of college life.

It is expected that integrity, common sense will guide the action of EACH STUDENT, that EACH STUDENT will both within and without the college respect for all aspects, morality including order, personal honor, and the rights of others.

ASCC Secretary

Petitions to fill the vacant ASCC secretary have been received from Marla Bullock and Melvaine. Both girls are juniors and have been very active in campus affairs. Miss Bullock is a member of Delta Gamma and holds an office in the sorority. She has worked on the ASCC Finance Committee. AWS J.C. Board, and was recently elected as one of the junior members, Phi Beta Kappa. Miss Melvaine is a member of Kappa Kappa Gamma sorority. She has served on various ASCC committees, a member of the Board of the College Board, and is a counselor-freshman dorm.

Elections for this office will be held Tuesday, February 11, of these girls will fill the vacancy left by Terry Kidner.

Sondermark to Call Meeting For 1964 Symposium Planning

Dr. Sondermark, Symposium Director, has called a meeting all persons who were involved in the 1963 Symposium (either committee members or interested participants), and all students are potentially interested in planning the 1964 Symposium. The meeting will be held on Wednesday, February 6th, at 4 p.m. in the ASCC Room of Rastall Center.

The purpose will be two-fold: 1) to evaluate the experience of the 1963 Symposium, in order to learn as much as possible for it; to avoid shortcomings and problems, and strengthen the program further in future years; 2) to begin preliminary discussion of possible topics for next year Symposium.

All interested members of the College community—students, faculty, administrators—are cordially invited and urged to attend the session.

Scholarship Amount To Increase in 1964

The amount of scholarships financial aid to freshmen will increase by more than 35 per cent next year, said Admission Director Richard A. Wood.

"We currently are providing $47,175 in scholarships to freshmen, but for the class entering in September, 1963, we award approximately $64,000 aid for 87 students," he said.

"We will find a way for the academically strong student, who has a financial need, to attend Colorado College," Wood said.

He said the average student receiving aid at the college has usually has some combination of scholarships, loans, or part-campus employment.

Sixty-nine per cent of the scholarships for freshmen entering Colorado College next September go to Colorado residents.

The admission director said more than one out two male freshmen from Colorado would probably receive assistance next year.

Wood said he anticipated about 40 per cent of the expected 370 incoming freshmen at Colorado College would be made of Coloradans.

"The Colorado student attending Colorado College today usually has a better academic performance and a better leadership record," Wood said.

OPINION

Clarification of the Standard

By Susan Caudill, Polly Franklin, Leigh Rainey

The ambiguity and confusion centering around the proposed morality code was admirably demonstrated by the mud-die and misunderstanding of the students and ASCC members who attended last Tuesday's session. It was alternately decided that such a standard already exists clearly in the minds of students and administration and that the campus confusion on such an ambiguous concept as morality could never result in a firm statement of policy. It was argued that student judicial committees cannot operate without this code, that these same committees already have such a policy based on precedent, regulations, and administrative requirements, and that the entire issue is futile because student judicial committees have no authority anyway. If the students of this campus can be trusted with the responsibility for judging their fellow students, a little more coherency in discussing this vital issue would certainly be desirable.

Unfortunately, the most confusion seems to be centered around the purpose of the code. During its presentation, three functions of the code were stated. (1) The code is to eliminate overlapping of jurisdiction among the various judicial bodies. (2) The code is to provide an initial step in the evolution of a hopefully more specific code for student behavior. (3) The code would establish a basis for the authority of student judicial organizations.

The first avowed purpose of the code is obviously irrelevant to the issues at hand. Lines of jurisdiction were carefully delineated by last year's ASCC and CUL. The second statement of purpose seems to insinuate that since student policy committee has taken a stand against sin, judicial committees will now have a clear and distinct concept of evil upon which to base their decisions. Here again it is to be hoped that this is not the purpose of the code. The present code, a masterpiece of ambiguity, allows for virtually any interpretation of morality. The Woman's Christian Temperance Union and a few disciples of Kinsey could probably provide some delightful definitions. A sociologist might be vitally interested in this growing collection of data but it is rather doubtful that the Student Conduct Committee would be. If judicial committees need a criteria for decisions, this particular code would provide no more than the statement that students must show "respect for all aspects of morality," whatever that is. Even Student policy committee admits that they can provide no definition even after recourse to seven dictionaries.

The two other suggested standards in this paper might be a valuable basis for decision-making. However, the real significance of any student code of conduct is embodied in the third purpose only partially touched upon during the code's nebulous presentation. If the students of this college would publicly state that they have a responsibility to their fellow students and to the college, that they have a respect for the ordered community and the laws supplying that order, then and only then will it be rational to have a student representative involved in judicial decision-making. The limited authority of these committees today is on loan from an administration which has consistently attempted to involve students in major decisions. However, if a code be passed, then a member of a judicial committee could feel he is working in the context of a community composed of responsible students. Student representatives should be involved in decisions affecting student rights. But they should be at those hearings because the student body gives them that authority and not because the administration has requested their presence. Yet many students assume that what they do is their own business subject to no ethical authority but practically subject to the Colorado Springs Police Force and to the administration. This attitude is contrary to the concern of a mature citizen. Such an attitude leads to anarchy and "privatism." Consequently, what is needed at this point is not a vague reflection of our own moral confusion but a positive statement of our intent to take responsibility for the protection of the ordered community and the rights of others. Only if this attitude becomes prevalent will student judicial committees have authority and an ethical reason for existing. If it takes a written standard to accomplish this purpose, then we must have a fundamental standard of responsibility.

From the Chair

By MAX POWER — President ASCC

The discussion of the proposed Colorado College Standard continues with this issue of the TIGER. While I believe that little is to be gained by further comment from the chair about the Standard, I do want to mention a number of the things which have resulted from the continuing discussion.

The most notable thing is, of course, that so many students have addressed themselves to a serious consideration of the policies which govern student life and of the judicial bodies which enforce them. This will lead to a greater understanding of these rules and judicial groups. The student body will take a more enlightened, better informed approach in the future to discussions of student policy, elections of members to these judicial bodies, and the like.

Second, several students have taken a good deal of time to propose alternatives or draft detailed statements. Hopefully, this indicates that students will continue to deal with this area of concern—student policy—which is constantly changing and meeting new situations.

Third, some of the weaknesses of the present judicial system, particularly those involving the Student Conduct Committee, have come to light. The Student Body Committee and the Student Conduct Committee have already been asked, as a result of the discussion of recent weeks, to consider together the confidence in which cases are or should be held, the systematic maintenance of precedent, the procedure of electing members to the committee, and so forth. This alone will make the discussion of the Standard, whether it is adopted or rejected, worthwhile.

A vote should come on the proposed standard Monday. We wish to remind all who are interested that the Monday meeting—like all ASCC meetings—is open, and that those who wish to speak will be recognized.

Just a word about Tuesday's election for ASCC secretary. Elsewhere in today's TIGER appear some information about the qualifications of Miss Bullock and Miss Melville, the two candidates for the office. We urge you to consider them carefully, for the job of ASCC secretary requires much of the person who holds it.

First, the Secretary must keep minutes of all ASCC meetings, and she must also maintain files and records. Second, the Secretary is responsible for ASCC's communications—distributing minutes and notices, TIGER and KRCC contacts, special programs, and the like. In addition, she must assist with ASCC correspondence.

Whoever is selected by your votes Tuesday will serve as Secretary until the Spring elections. This will be an active, important time for ASCC, so we again ask you to consider carefully your vote for ASCC Secretary.

Original! Spontaneous?

By David Greenberg

One of the most refreshing features of the Colorado College literary magazine, Kinnikinnik, is the almost total absence of any kind of studied, highly self-conscious writing that is common in most magazines of this sort. By and large the prose and the poetry, while not spontaneous, avoid poor imitations of Rimbaud, J. D. Salinger and Henry Miller.

"Poems from the White Gymnasium" (p. 57) by Charles

Meisner are certainly the most modern efforts represented in the magazine, they come the closest to the above named writers in form. By this I mean they come the closest to being categorized as part of the current genre of poetry. One of the great values, and often unrecognized, in this sort of modern poetry is that it allows that poet to bring the whole breadth of his, often highly personal, culture to bear on a seemingly abstract theme or idea. "Poems from the White Gymnasium," which goes from Norman Vincent Peal to Paul Klee does say something about a very loud yet deaf world, with a hard, if somewhat twisted, intellectual jolt.

Of the warless review here Norman Liden's "Le Printemps," is perhaps the only self-conscious effort in which the reader is all too sure of who the author has been reading. "Le Printemps," (p. 19) is a kind of short story (that is the closest I can come to defining it) set in Paris at the end of the Second World War. Quite frankly it relies rather heavily on The Age of Reason, the first of Jean Paul Sartre's excellent trilogy, The Roads of Freedom. The names of characters, Mathieu and Daladier are drawn straight from Sartre, as almost is the semi-existential sounding prose. "War is a god damn absurdity . . . The whole thing was nothing more than a nightmare; a lousy sordid nightmare." Imaginative stimuli aside, what is missing here is the kind of urgency which Sartre's characters feel about their boredom, the total estrangement they feel from their society. Perhaps Sartre's philosophy has to be lived before being written about.

"Symphony of the Subway" (p. 16) by Richard G. Beidenman uses a kind of Whitmanesque catalogue effect to bring across the poet's thoughts on riding the New York City subway system. Generally the poem is quite successful in conveying this feeling and the poet has done a good job in catching in his verse the rhythm of this great underground transportation complex.

The Publication Mean

By Terry Fonville

One of the problems of an editor of a publication like the Kinnikinnik is deciding where to draw the line; where to place the level of excellence, keeping in mind at the same time other factors which go into the composition of the magazine such as the character or mood "in toto"; temperaments of the writers, poets, and artists which contribute; and money. If the opinion of some of the members of the English faculty were to be followed, we would have a 10 page pamphlet published once a year (probably under the auspices of the English department) which would contain works of the very highest standard of excellence. This sort of magazine would largely contain works of the very few professionals in primordium present on campus. (It would not lend itself to occasional poetry one finds so prevalent in Kinnikinniks of the past). Perhaps this is as it should be.

In the recently published edition of the Kinnikinnik, I have tried (as I am sure have many editors in the past) to achieve a medium level, to satisfy those of the community schooled in the subtleties of literary taste who wince at the thought of poetry, for example, written by the uninitiated or a magazine edited by a zoology major, people who demand the excellence of the experienced professional; and those who view the magazine as a reflection of the literary atmosphere and feeling of our college; not of the highly talented few.

The method used to achieve this end was simply to encourage creativity on the part of a segment of the campus previously untapped. The result was the production of a very homogeneous magazine which, although contains no real "tour de force," does, I feel, reach an aesthetic standard. Although the italicized lyrical middle section, for instance, may embarrass some, for me it tends to evoke and intensify a mood of reflection, a feeling of something lost.

To mention other elements, the color prints certainly add to the general quality and beauty of the magazine, but the art works as a whole seemed to lack a certain importance and vigor.

Editors throughout the country have effected some interesting innovations with campus literary publications. The Gaviote, the University of San Francisco's equivalent publication solved some of its problems by limiting its scope to one theme, "War." The Antioch Magazine of Antioch College, Yellow Springs, Ohio, included a transcript of a symposium seminar on the topic, "The Social Responsibility of the Artist," suggested by an article written by a student. Whatever course a literary magazine takes, there are certain purposes that I feel it must endeavor to serve. It must attempt to be an expression of the college community, a vehicle for potential writers and a work of art in itself.

Morath Presents Enjoyable Lecture

By Chuck White

One of the most enjoyable programs of Symposium was the performance-lecture of Max Morath. Even though he was minus his bowler hat and big hair, none of his enthusiasm for ragtime music was lacking; however, the fact that the lecture was given in Shove Chapel did not help to create a ragtime atmosphere.

Max displayed his easygoing manner and extensive knowledge of the music which now has become an obsession with him. He surprised many of us with the statement that "Alexander's Ragtime Band" is not ragtime, but was actually written during the period when true ragtime was on the decline. A highly interesting and informative point in his lecture was his tying in jazz and ragtime. This is a debatable conjecture but Max backed it up by pointing out that the two were consecutively developed in the same area of the country by people with basically the same background.

Der Einsame

By Norman Colbert

Abend in Delphi

Unter starren Sternen klammert sich das Dorf angstlich an die steile glatte dunkle Felsenwand.
Frohmad und larmul sind die Reisenden weitergefahren. Das mondlose Aug sieht nur
Funken von Dorfem fern am Golf—ein Schiff.
Angstlich
Aht es das sonnenmude Olivenbaummeer drunten.
Strassen winden sich leer durch kahle Gehirg.
Im Blaudunkeln ruhn die Ruinen von Menschenruhm.
Der Einsame betritt behutsam den Weg um die Blocke
Angstlich
besteigt er den bruchigen Altar und fragt ob . . .
Am Quell der Weisheit schweigen schwarzhohe Saulen
Er wartet nicht lange, dann klettert hinab und . . .
angstlich

— Brad Snyder

(Beneath fixed stars the village clings anxiously to the steep, dark rock-wall. Happily tried and noisily have the travelers traveled on. The moonless eye sees only the sparkling of villages distant on the gulf—a ship. Anxiously it senses the sun-weary sea of olive trees below. Roads wind empty through the bare mountains. In blue darkness are the ruins of mortal renown. The lonely one treads cautiously the path about the boulders. Anxiously he mounts the brittle altar and, as whether . . . At the spring of wisdom, tall black columns keep silent. He waits not long, then climbs down and . . . anxiously.)

The theme of alienation, of estrangement and disorientation, was seen to preoccupy the writers of today. It is therefore not surprising that at least two variations thereupon are to be found in the current number of the Kinnikinnik—"Abend in Delphi" by Brad Snyder and "The Sacred Clown" by Chuck Miesmer, p. 45.

The first is a poem of contrast, placing the anguish of mortal life beside the impassionate magnificence of nature and the silent splendor of the past. Although Der Einsame (the lonely one) appears for the first time only well after the midpoint of the poem, the recurrence of the word angstlich makes it clear that all preceding has first passed the filter of his disquieted mind; for what can the inanimate or immortal know of Angst? The seemingly precarious hold of the village upon the cliff is but a projection of his own sense of insecurity, feeling, which separates him from the travelers, who feel no compulsion to linger. Raising his eyes to the heavens, he senses a higher, complacent conscience—"das mondlose Aug" (dark of the moon), seen but unseen and knowing but unknown, aware not of him but only of the immortal beauty of the moment. Since the grandeur of the past

Look Who's Cummings!

By Neale Reinhart

Happily the poems of this year's Kinnikinnik deal more in autumn leaves, autumn nymphs, subways, Dionysus, aardvarks, and Trotsky—concrete imagery, the first business of poetry—than any poetry in recent issues of the literary magazine.

This is true, for one thing, of "On Hearing of Your Tedious" (p. 5), by William Gordon: the rubbish in the attic, and the minister he says some of the same things—more simply but more effectively. He contrasts the boy's real feelings (his delight in moving the dirt with his toe) with the artificial interest of the minister (his silly grin when he asks the boy about the church picnic).

All three poems are heavy imprinted, consciously or otherwise, with the form and spirit of E. E. Cummings. Von Helms actually borrows his first four lines from Cummings' poem on Buffalo Bill. All three poems have short lines, two of them dropping lines in the middle and cutting up sentences in the manner of Cummings.

The ideas are at least similar to Cummings': the innocence of childhood (Chanson Innocente); natural instincts vs. dryadist intellect (La Guerre, II); the enigmas of death (the Buffalo Bill poem).

Cummings' integrity and fluent style make him a salutary model for aspiring poets, but in these three poems, as often in the Kinnikinnik, this emulation is oversimplified, and only the top is skimmed off Cummings' poetics.

Cummings' tricks of style can become trivial and dull without his intervening patterns of meaning, his careful division of lines, and his occasion use of traditional forms. His assertion of the world's natural virtue and fleeting beauty can become simple-minded, if the social ethical foundations of his beliefs are overlooked.

Gordon's attack on dry and dusty intellectualizing does not come through as well. How he says it—with the imagery of rubbish and old cardboard boxes—is fresher than what he says. He strikes toward subtlety in the last section when he talks about the intellectualizer's inhibitions, but the poem remains an argument rather than an experience.

In Liden's poem about the boy

Nymph or Bird vs. Jack-o-Lantern

By James H. Fox

OCTOBER

The day was as big and and as gold and as blue as all October,
So bright you scarcely felt the chill of the air.

But I saw a high white bird fly out of the north like a petal blown,
Or a snowflake,

Singly started.

— Sally Dietrich (p. 31)

The above poem and William Gordon's "Autumn," p. 30, concern different poets with almost contrasting feelings about the fall season. Neither writer, happily, uses the smell of burning leaves or Halloween imagery; each goes into realities beyond realities.

In "October" the sensitive adult-child is involved with the bright, brittle day, yet holds an objective distance as he rama serves but to thrust upon him the painful awareness of his own insignificance, he turns to the crumbling memories of mortal fame. Eagerly inquisitive, he mounts the altar only to discover that he knows no words to express his question—perhaps there are no such words. In face of the silence of the inscrutable ages, what is left him but to retreat beneath the burden of his Angst?

A peculiar mechanicality in the repetition of angustlich every five lines and an unhappy turning-off of the poem before it has completed itself subtract from the value of Snyder's effort. He does succeed however in proving himself in many ways master of his craft; the poet exhibits not only a most admirable command of his chosen tongue, but also great gift for the creation of individual images. It is regrettable that the wonder of "das mondlose Aug" and "das cammenude" Olivenbaumner" is to be sensed only in the original. Furthermore, the poem possesses a very logical (if inorganic) unity, enabling the pause representing the unasked question to become a cavity, resounding with echoes of meaning beyond meaning. "Abend in Delphi" is a very clever poem, and it succeeds for that reason, rather than because it is sincere.

In the dichotomy of man and milieu, Snyder has concentrated upon the latter: we know Der Einsame only through the reflection of the surroundings upon the mirror of his mind. However, in "The Sacred Town" Miesmer focuses upon his protagonist. Having some time ago dropped out of law school to undistractedly pursue the Muse, Ross has since confined himself to his quarters in an uptown roominghouse and comes in contact with the world outside only through his landlady or when he dons jacket and muffler and makes a pilgrimage to the bathroom window to leer longingly at the world which he has rejected and which has rejected him. Ross is overwhelmed with a sense of Weltschmerz, which his seclusion is powerless to remove. He has nonetheless resolved that he will not again show his face until the start of summer session. However a hot-dog vendor in green-checked jacket and baggy orange pants appears on the street below.

There is a symbolic movement from above life to below it (Ross ends up lying at the bottom of some stairs at the end of an alley). This would seem to be the proper attitude, for the story ends upon a note of elation: "... Ross, exhausted, slumped on the bottom step and lunged for air, grinning, a mad, great, gasping smile that there should be legs and feet moving above him, and, of all places, here." The hot-dog vendor, sacred because of his sainted act, represents reality. He is able to inflict pain, but is himself intangible. Only through pursuit of him is the proper relation of the artist to life achieved.

Once the clown has appeared, there is an irresistible rush to the end of the story. But, until then, throughout the definition of Ross and his life, there is a dawdling until the time of revelation is a hand. The special-delivery from Phil seems especially digressive. This may, however, be justified as a sort of "harking-back," a re-creation, to some extent, of the pain of Ross' former existence.

Mr. Miesmer's style is not lucid. On the contrary, he best communicates when he becomes opaque. Is not the description of the pursuit through the alleys exhausted and disconnected?

sees the soft, flowery form of the bird fragment into the sharp, angular snow crystal. This poem reminds me of the childhood experience of looking through a kaleidoscope as the colored bits of glass kept breaking into new patterns with the tiniest shake or twist of the cylinder. The glorious golden day shifts through "but" into an ominous forecast of approach of winter. The season is only itself and immediate in its simplicity.

Far more intellectual, but just as immediate, is the experience of the dreamer in "Autumn," who loses his identity with the "autumn nymph." The erotic, pulsating involvement begins as the nymph's eyes "that begged to grow inside my own" lead into the opening of the rapidly following second stanza, "As we drew together." The lovers reach anti-climax,

"To sleep forever
In each other's arms," at the end of the third stanza.

The orgy is performed before the "ancient gaunt-faced Pan, who dies with the leaves and flowers at the end of summer. The 'young Pan,' snickering in the obscure spring is in harmony with that time of year, as is the 'high white bird' in 'October'.

The "joyful fleeting hours" of the autumn nymph and her lover must "slowly crumble in the morning dew." This concluding antithesis between decaying attitude of

A colorful opinion

By Freimuth von Helms

In this briefest of critiques we must not be interested so much with the meaning and the conception of art as we should with the mediums the artist has employed in his creations. It is this problem of quality we are most concerned with. As to our selection of art, that we must brutally limit to two or three paintings and those in all fairness must be selected with mechanical indifference; and that choice being Howard

L. Smith's two works "Number Two" and "The Tenth of Twelve." First let us consider how successful were the color reproductions of the Kimmikink? How true are colors to the originals? Can we make an honest appraisal from all this photographic mimicry. Smith's "Number Two" reproduction is not a good one. The blue here is acid-harsh and flat, the reds for instance have lost their brilliance and have taken on more of an orange hue and the whites and greens are not as dramatic. In the second case ("The Tenth of Twelve") the reproduction was more faithful. A certain subtlety of color is retained and one can see the dramatic interchange of hue and light.

Next come the paintings themselves. After deliberately forgetting the usual host of obtrusive artistic vocabulary and purging ourselves of impulsive bias and emotion—for what is more absurd than the spectacle of some shallow fool violently attempting to cultivate a love or hate for "something" he lacks any understanding for, in the first place. Besides most are so often exude or sweat a sentimental and melodramatic feeling, I would feel safer if it would just transmit an understanding.

Further as Greenberg has said, "It is not the subject matter that constitutes great art but instead the paintings use or lack of rhythm, harmony and unity; the use or lack of color, texture and composition. Besides, as Howard Smith has represented, in much of modern art it is considered a cardinal sin to inject or allow to appear any image or form of human content. But when there is no image of "man" I can only ask image of "man"? And what has happened to man? And I say it with a certain confusion and hostility, for I am really concerned with what has happened to this man and to the reality of myself.

Nevertheless, considering the paintings from this point of view I venture the opinion that Smith is judged from two examples! Primarily a colorist. The subjects of his paintings are chiefly the beauty and the harmony of the paint more than anything else. There is almost an emotional fascination and thus preoccupation with this use of color. Still there is an effective and striking play between the invisible brush stroke and the haphazard spontaneity of the drip method. As such there can be no question of its motion and its fantasy. The total color effect especially evident in "The Tenth of Twelve" is one of tremendous catyctism and shimmering abstractions with light as the cohesive force. "Number Two" on the other hand is more symmetrical but by no means static. Here too, there is this interfacing, this convulsion of color almost a "neon throbbing." What is interesting is that the two works are different enough so that each evokes a varied sensation. All this helps to intensify and complete their expression.

Notes from Ward "B"

By Pats Lambert

Ward B is a closed women's ward housing fifty patients from ages 15 to 75. The main room in the ward contains a piano, the radio and television, enough chairs and card tables to accommodate all the patients. Although recently remodeled, it is still depressingly nondescript. Nearly all the women spend their time here. Many sit in one chair, in a characteristic position, for month after month. Others pace incessantly back and forth through the area. Still others sleep almost constantly in the adjoining sleeping room. A lot of smoking of hand-rolled and commercial cigarettes goes on. A few women have sewing to do, and some playing cards and old magazines belong to the ward; otherwise no diversions are provided. Everyone wears faded, shapeless dresses which once fit somebody but now are general ward property. Because items tend to "disappear," there are almost no personal possessions. A comb, fingernail clippers, etc., can be borrowed from the ward office, but many women have not combed their hair or brushed their teeth for weeks. Otherwise they are kept as clean as possible. Delicious cafeteria food is provided for all patients, who in Ward B are either seventy pounds overweight from lack of exercise or excessively thin from nervousness.

Members of CC's new Community Service Committee have been working in Ward B every Saturday afternoon, in co-operation with the Central Psychiatric Institute at Pueblo. This is part of an experiment to determine if informal association with untrained volunteer workers is therapeutically valuable to mentally ill persons. Beneficial effects of the weekly visits must be gathered from observation rather than patients' comments, but the general outlook is encouraging.

In spite of her talkativeness, the visit Janet enjoys most is the quiet one in which she sits silently just enjoying the visitor's presence. She is a little Oriental woman who spends most of her time sleeping. When awake, she walks around with a sunny smile and lots of conversation. Her favorite subjects are her family and Oriental food, which she misses. Since her attention span is very short, often during a conversation will begin absent-mindedly humming "My Blue Heaven."

Although general conditions there are somewhat depressing, each visit goes more smoothly as patients become familiar personalities. On our first mid-October visit to Ward B, its occupants greeted us with curses and a general departure from the room. Nowadays, the constant radio or television noise is turned off when we arrive, while patients call out greetings or come to meet us. Some want to talk, others to play cards; a few have good singing voices, and one would like to learn to play the piano.

ASCC Notes

For the Meeting Jan. 21

Miss Kidner returned to the first ASCC meeting of the new semester and expressed a wish to read the council minutes for the last time.

All Loosli has been appointed the new Election Committee Chairman, replacing Chuck White. Hugh Bell was asked to serve on the committee. The office of ASCC secretary is vacant due to the graduation of Miss Kidner. Petitions for secretary were available January 21 and will be due January 25. The campaign will begin on January 28 and election will be held February 5.

A letter was received from Susan Phillips outlining a work camp that will be held on the Navajo Reservation over Spring vacation. This proposal is pending a finance committee hearing.

ASCC approved Mr. Hite as the All-College Conference Chairman. The date of the conference has been changed to March 2 and 3. Mr. Hite reported that the conference will probably be held off campus. Mr. Hite stated that he is open for new ideas on topics of discussion.

Discussion of the proposed Standard for Colorado College will be held in the WES Room on Tuesday, January 22. Discussion carrying over from the Tuesday meeting will be resumed on January 28 at the regular ASCC meeting. All students are urged to attend and present their questions and suggestions.

It was moved that the ASCC amend the by-laws of the constitution to adopt the all-college minimum standard for class commissions in the present higher standard. Resulting from the discussion that followed, the motion was not passed and the present standard will still be effective.

Under College Development, it was reported that money is being raised in the Chicago area by alumni for the new sports complex.

Rastall Center was proud to report that the Colorado College bowlers defeated the Pueblo College team. The Association of College Unions will be sponsoring tournaments in Rastall games area. Billiards and ping pong are two of the areas of competition.

At registration time the seniors collected 50 per cent of the $25 class dues. The Sophomore Class meeting will be held in Perkins, January 22. Plans for the Winter Carnival to be held February 15 and 16 will be discussed.

Under the heading of Old Business, another letter was received from the World University requesting funds from the ASCC. The letter will be handed over to the Campus Chest for consideration.

ASCC wishes to express sincere thanks to Dr. Sonderman and his committee for their successful work on the Symposium. Mr. Meis reported that ASCC and Rastall Center each paid $107.50 for the social evening at Delmonicos during Symposium week. It was considered a great success.

Miss Benham moved that the members adjourn to the Kachina for further discussion of the proposed code.

For the meeting Jan. 28

Dave Helms was the only candidate nominated at the class meeting January 22, to run for the vacant office of Sophomore Class Secretary and Treasurer. Maria Bullock and Karen Melvaine are the two candidates running for the position of ASCC secretary. These two elections will take place on February 5, in Rastall Center.

Sue Phillips outlined the work on the Navajo reservation which will be the headquarters for 26 Colorado College students during the Spring Vacation. Due to a deficit in the treasury of ASCC, the council is not able to budget the money requested for the trip.

Applications for Chairman of Parents Weekend, April 26-28, will be out soon.

Alpha Phi

The Alpha Phi convened an otherwise dull week of attending classes with a Scholarship dinner and formal pledging. Cathy Grant was awarded the trophy for highest average and Becky Holden was honored as having the most improved average. The sorority is now enthusiastically engaged in planning a Valentine dessert with the Betas.

Phi Delta

Sunday, Phi Delta Theta formally pledged Larry Fast, Jerry Layton, Paul Holland, Chuck Mauritz, Paul Seligson, Dick Johnson, and Randy Fischer.

As the Claremont Quartet was previously engaged, Brother B. J. Young's band provided the sounds for the Phi Deltas and their dates at their pledge dance Saturday night at Bernardo's. Miss Cherry Blair from Topeka, suffering from the effects of a recent gas explosion, was the unfettered guest of Fred Weidling.

Tomorrow night, there will be an informal party in the basement. Juice box will provide the entertainment for what should be a rousing evening.

Our congratulations go to Dave Hite who has been chosen chairman of the All-College Conference.

Miss Keller asked that the Proposed Student Code of Colorado College be taken from the table and opened for discussion. Following discussion, another motion was made to table the code until Monday, February 4, when the ASCC will vote on the code presented by the Student Conduct Committee.

Under Rastall Center news, Colorado College bowlers beat the Denver University team. Mr. Meis reported that there will be social events in Rastall on February 8 and on February 22. The Association of College Unions will sponsor a five state area tournament at Denver on February 14-16. This tournament will include competition in table tennis, billiards, bridge, chess and bowling.

Nominations for Winter Carnival King and Queen will be made Monday evening, January 28, in the sororities, fraternities and in Loomis. Votes will be cast at the expensive price of five cents per vote. Students may vote as often as they wish. Be sure to back the sophomore boy and girl of your choice. Voting will be February 11-14.

Saturday afternoon the Theta pledge class was the guest of the Kappa Sig pledge class at a toboggan party. The following afternoon the whole chapter enjoyed some broomball practice over at the Kappa Sig Ice Palace substituting mops and broken hockey sticks for brooms, and hockey pucks for a volley ball. The agility of both groups was finely exhibited in spite of the cold weather. With an installation of officers Monday night, the Thetas are ready to begin the spring semester with a new slate of officers. The Thetas are looking forward to a Founder's Day luncheon Saturday complete with a fashion show. The Thetas would like to congratulate past president Lynne Vincent and Polly Franklin for being elected to Phi Beta Kappa.

This pledge class make the Fiji House the largest on campus.

To celebrate the successful end of Rush Week the Fijis met with the Thetas and Kappas at the Krazy Kat for an informal gathering.

THE CURSE OF THE CAMPUS: NO. 1

Hate me if you will, but I must speak. We college types are far too complacent. Sure, we've got plenty to be proud of. We've got a ton of scholarship, new highs in academic honors. And yet, in the midst of these triumphs, we have failed dismally to make any progress in solving the oldest and most horrendous of all campus problems: We're still got roommates.

To be sure, all roommates are not bad. There is the well-documented case of Hilquitt Glebe, a student at the Manhattan College of Agriculture, majoring in birds and whey, who admitted publicly that he actually liked his roommate—an odd admission when you consider that this roommate, Mervis Trunz by name, was frankly not too winsome a fellow. He practiced his tympant in his room, he kept an alligator, and he collected airplane tires.

But, on the other hand, Mervis bought two packs of Marlboro Cigarettes every day and gave one of them to Hilquitt—and I ask you—who can stay mad at a man who gives you Marlboro Cigarettes? Who, upon tasting that flavorful blend of Marlboro tobaccos, upon drawing through that pure white Marlboro filter, upon exulting in this best of all possible cigarettes, Marlboro—who, I say, can harden his heart against his neighbor? Certainly not Hilquitt. Certainly not I. Certainly not you, as you will find when you scurry to your nearest tobacconist and buy a supply. Marlboros come in soft pack or Flip-Top Box. Tobacconists come in small, medium, and large.

But I digress. Roommates, I say, are still with us and I fear they always will be, so we better learn how to get along with them. It can be done, you know. Take, for instance, the classic case of Dolly Fitcher and Molly Madison.

Dolly and Molly, roommates at a prominent Midwestern girls' school (Yassar) had a problem that seemed insoluble. Dolly could only study late at night, and Molly could not stay awake past nine o'clock. If Dolly kept the lights on, the room was too bright for Molly to sleep. If Molly turned the lights off, the room was too dark for Dolly to study. What to do?

Well sir, those two intelligent American kids found an answer. They got a mine's cap for Dolly! Thus, she had enough light to study by, and still the room was dark enough for Molly to sleep.

It must be admitted, however, that this solution, ingenious as it was, had some unexpected sequelae. Dolly got so enchanted with her miner's cap that she swished her major from 18th Century poetry to mining and metallurgy. Shortly after graduation she had what appeared to be a great stroke of luck: while out prospecting, she discovered what is without question the world's largest feldspar mine. This might have made Dolly very rich except that nobody, alas, has yet discovered a use for feldspar. Today Dolly, a broken woman, squeezes out a meagre living making echoes for tourists in Mammoth Cave.

Nor has Molly fared conspicuously better. Once Dolly got the miner's hat, Molly was able to catch up on her long-lost sleep. She woke after eight days, refreshed and vigorous—no more vigorous, alas, than she realized. It was the afternoon of the annual Dean's tea. Molly stood in line with her classmates, waiting to shake the Dean's hand. At last her turn came, and Molly, full of strength and health, gave the Dean a firm handshake—so firm, indeed, that all five of the Dean's knuckles were permanently fused.

The Dean sued for a million dollars, and, of course, won. Today Molly, a broken woman, is paying off her debt by walking the Dean's cat every afternoon for ten cents an hour.

Two Student Delegates To Attend Conference

Two student delegates have been nominated from Colorado College to take part in the forthcoming fifth annual Air Force Academy Assembly in early April. The topic this year will be "The Secretary of State," and the conference is co-sponsored by the American Assembly of Columbia University. Outstanding student delegates representing some 70 colleges and universities will attend. They will participate in a series of discussions on the conduct and substance of American foreign policy. In addition, several distinguished guest speakers, headed by Secretary of State Dean Rusk, will address the Assembly. (These speeches are open to the public, and all Colorado College students are invited to attend.)

The Colorado College students nominated are Gordon Allott Jr., who is President of the Pick and Pan (Honorary Speech and Drama Club) and has served as manager of Radio Station KRCC-FM; and Max Power, president of the ASCC.

Two Colorado College faculty members will also participate. Dr. Glenn Brooks of the Political Science Department will be one of the round-table chairmen, conducting discussions among the students, and Dr. Fred Sonderman, Associate Dean and Political Science Professor will be the editor of the final report of this Assembly. He served in the same position last year, when the subject was "Arms Control and Disarmament."

CC Tiger SPORTS

Alex Yankovich

Yank Gets Hat Trick, Clinch Goal

Twenty-two-year-old Alex Yankovich had a big night against Minnesota-Duluth when he scored the first hat trick of his college career. The senior education major from Schumacher, Ontario also scored the winning goal against Minnesota last Saturday and has played well all season. He attributes much of his success to excellent play from linemates Wayne McAlpine and Roger Simon.

Alex has contributed a lot to the CC sports program in the four years he has been here. As a freshman, he played quarterback on the junior varsity squad, and he has played baseball each spring. He is expecting his third baseball letter this season, and counting his three from hockey, will have accumulated six letters by the time he graduates next June.

Yankovich plans to go to graduate school next year and wants to pursue Slavic Language studies at the University of Southern California, leading to a career either in teaching or in the diplomatic service. He plans to marry CC senior Kathy Clark this coming August.

Lauding the achievements of this year's squad, the senior wingman pointed to the new vigor that has characterized team play. He praised the good coaching of often-underestimated Tony Frasca.

Freshmen Bow to DU Rematch Slated Soon

The Colorado College freshman hockey team lost an 11-1 contest to the tough DU from DU displayed tremendous depth and excellent individual play in outskating the CC squad at the Denver Arena. According to Coach Norm Laurence, "the score didn't indicate the game at all." CC skated and passed well, but the baby Bengals could not quite jell. Going into the final period, CC trailed only 5-1, but a big outburst by DU gave them six goals in the final period.

Pioneer Goalie Buddy Blom played like the highly rated goalie he is. The CC goalie, Mike Carter, made 37 saves and had a good night although he did let 11 goals slip in.

Tigers Split Gopher Series

By Robert Williams

In losing the first game against the University of Minnesota, 7-3, the CC Tigers found out the hard way that small errors can make the difference between victory and defeat. Although the team generally skated with the Gophers, there was a general lack of coordination among the players with respect to their play-making. As a result, our offense, which has been the bulwark of our past success, failed to materialize.

It appeared to this observer that the game should have been a 3-3 tie at worst, except for the small but costly mistakes. Although vastly improved over last year's defense still appears to be the team's Achilles' Heel. On several occasions they have been "caught short" at center ice or have failed to cover the man in front of the net, and usually a goal for the opposition has resulted.

One final point is our lack of ability to capitalize on the other team's being shorthanded. For nearly 10 per cent of the game Friday, we had a one-man advantage, but we never used these opportunities by scoring. It appeared to me that the goal-tending by both Colorado College and Minnesota was the best part of the game. The goal tending was good again the following night.

In what was unquestionably the most exciting game played by Colorado College in the 1960's, CC defeated Minnesota by a score of 6-5.

After opening up a 2-0 lead on goals by McGill and Cairns, the Tigers found themselves behind by the middle of the game. This was short-lived, as Stouffer and McAlpine brought CC back into the lead, making the score at the end of the second period 4-3 in our favor.

The final third of the game was a seesaw battle, as Minnesota tied the game 4-4. Simon gave CC the lead; the Gophers again tied it; and finally, with little more than a minute to play, Yankovich scored the winning goal.

A tip of the hat must go to Pete Doyle, who did a fine job in the nets.

Although the end result was victory, I couldn't help feeling that the entire potential of the team was impaired by intentional and useless penalties. As the team moves into the hardest part of its schedule, I hope that the players diminish their presence in the "sin bin" and concentrate on developing a consistently effective power play to capitalize on the opponents' penalties.

Although critical of parts of their game, I must take this opportunity to congratulate the entire team on its truly outstanding will to win, drive, enthusiasm, or VIGA when ever you want to call it. Time and time again this season, this team has overpowered teams with greater talent by simply outplaying the opposition, due to their unsurpassed enthusiasm and drive.

Skaters Compete In National Meet

Four Colorado College students leave this week for Long Beach, California, to compete in the National Figure Skating Championships, to be held Feb. 7-10. The Long Beach meet will determine whether the Broadmoor entries will receive a berth in the World Championships in Cortina, Italy, and will decide, as well, whether the coveted Hamed Trophy, symbolic of national skating supremacy, will be returned to Colorado.

CC's four skaters are favored to dominate their respective events at Long Beach and to make a creditable showing in the World meet.

National Senior Men's champion Monty Hoyt is expected to repeat his victory at Long Beach and is thought likely to move up from last year's respectable 4th in the World Senior Men's event. In the same division will be freshman David Edwards, who placed third in last year's national championships.

In the Senior Pairs division, Judianne and Jerry Fotheringill face some tough competition from Ron and Vivian Joseph of the DU Arena, but are favored to take the top position after placing a strong second in the 1962 national meet. The Fotheringills, from Tacoma, Washington, are completing their second season at the Broadmoor under the tutelage of Carlo Fassi.

Winners of the top two spots in each of the events at Long Beach will enter the North American Championships at Vancouver, B.C., Feb. 16-16, and will then go to the World Meet in Cortina d'Ampezzo, Italy, Feb. 27-March 3.

This year's team of entries is thought by most to be the strongest "fielded" by the Broadmoor World Arena in years, and there is an extremely good possibility that the team championship, and the Hamed Trophy, will be Colorado property by mid-month.

Tiger Cagers Fall; Drop Three More

Colorado College helped the Colorado School of Mines set an all-school record for victories as the Bengals fell to the Miners 49-42 in a game played Tuesday evening, January 22, on the Mines home court. The Miners chalked up their eleventh season win in a lullbacker game that saw only brief moments of good playing from either squad. Colorado College built up an impressive 18-6 lead going into the last six minutes of the first half, and had prevented Mines from scoring a single field goal. The Miners came back in the last six minutes, however, and at the halftime the score was 21-20 in favor of CC. The second half was even more disheartening as CC lost lead after lead and finally succumbed to Mines. Baker and Hart led the CC scorers with eleven points each.

CC then returned home as a rambunctious crowd watched the Tigers play catch-up all evening before losing to the Fort Lewis Aggies January 24 in a game played in antiquated Cossitt Gymnasium. It was a close game all the way as the Tigers battled futilely for their first win of the season. With less than thirty seconds to go, Ft. Lewis led 63-61 and the Tigers had an excellent chance to tie the game, but late minute penalty shots killed the Tiger dreams of victory. Hart and Heiny paced the Tigers with fourteen points each.

Fort Lewis came from behind the next night to defeat the flat CC Bengals 61-58 in a game played on the winner's home court. The CC squad led 30-27 at half-time but could not keep pace in the second half and fell to the Aggie rally. Greg Smith lead the Tigers with eighteen points.

This last loss put the CC season record at no wins and eleven losses. CC plays Adams State in Cossitt Hall tonight and tomorrow night in Rocky Mountain Conference play. The Tiger cagers are hoping for the big first win, but so far seem incapable of playing two good halves of basketball.

DAVE HERRINGTON goes up for two against Ft. Lewis A & M. Ft. Lewis took both games, 63-61 and 61-58.

German Travelogue

The highly successful entertainment series, Theodore Fisher's "Horizons Unlimited Travelogues" will offer as its third number Theodore Buniller's "Germany" at the Fine Arts Center Theatre for 2:30 and 4:30 matinees February 3 with repeat on the Monday night at 7:30.

Box office in advance at the Chinook Bookshop (telephone 635-1195). February 1, 2, and 4. Buniller is on the famous National Geographic series in Washington, D.C. this winter and already engaged for next season.

Bengals Play Michigan Here After Rematch with Gophers

Colorado College takes to the road to play a re-match series with the tough Minnesota Gophers at Minneapolis tonight and tomorrow night. The Gophers will be out to avenge a 6-5 loss to CC last Saturday and hope to sweep the series to clinch a solid fourth place. The Tigers have similar aspirations for a good finish in league standings, and hope to sweep this important series from the defense-minded Gophers.

CC will then play Michigan University at the Broadmoor World Arena this coming Monday and Tuesday night at 8:15. Michigan was picked by many to be a strong team in league play, but so far has displayed poor form in posting a 1-6-1 league record. Michigan should not be underrated, however, and can be expected to put out a serious effort in order to avenge a permanent home in the league cellar. CC needs to win this series in order to stay in the league contention and a bone-bruising brand of hockey should be witnessed by all.

4th North Crushes 3rd West As I-M Basketball Play Opens

A strong, well-balanced, championship-bound 4th North team overran a hapless but game 3rd West squad 66-11 as the Men's Residence Hall League opened intramural basketball play last Saturday. In the other four games played, 2nd North 2nd South, 3rd South, and 1st South emerged victorious.

The five-game series opened at 11 a.m. as 1st North sparked by the enthusiasm and brilliant strategy of Sk Meis, went down to defeat at the hands of 1st South, 35-35. A fairly even game throughout, 1st North could never quite match the south wing's combination of Corb and Holbrook.

Freshman Richard Silverman almost managed to power an outnumbered 1st West team to victory in the second round against 2nd North. Silverman pounded in 23 points, but it wasn't enough, as the North wing held out for a 34-33 win.

A massive 2nd South team smothered strong 2nd West in the third match, despite the near-heroic scoring efforts of freshmen Louis Jaramillo and Rick Carroll. The two between them scored 32 points but 2nd South, paced by Chuck Wilson, pulled it out 43-36. The defeat cut short what this writer had predicted would be a creditable season for 2nd West, but the team showed its mettle, and should do well in the second round.

In the fourth game, 3rd South pulled an upset victory over a surprisingly lop-sided 3rd North five. Despite the drive of sophomores Dwight Kramer and Lee Hunt, the South wing's balance was a telling factor as 3rd North's desperate last-second scoring drive fell short by 4 points, 49-45. By the time the last match began, pitting 4th North against 3rd West, both spectators and officials were pretty well saturated with basketball, but the power-heavy 4th North team provided plenty of reason to stand up and take notice.

The tilt began fairly normally, though it was plain from the beginning that the west wing was badly outclassed. The west wingers cut the margin to 4 points with their first field goal, and 6-2 was the closest they were to come as 4th North vengefully countered with 22 straight points. From then on the game became one of cat and mouse as the north squad pounded in goal after goal, controlling rebounds almost completely and, after a short warm-up period, barely allowing their opponents into the back court. By the time the final buzzer sounded, 4th North's lone frustration was their failure to cross the 70 mark, and there could be little doubt remaining that the wing was destined for great things in 1963 intramural play.

The following names have been added to the Dean's list:
Michael Austin Clark 13-3.76
Terry Kidner 15-3.3
Karen Kossuth 13-3.46
David Saul Greenberg 15-3.46

Flat Tops Crewcuts J B's Barber Pole

502 E. DEL NORTE
J. B. Sherbet ME 5-2740

All five games were played smoothly and cleanly, and the officials are to be commended for an efficient and conscientious effort in presiding over 5 consecutive matches. The season is off to a good start, despite the fact that 2 of the 4 teams chosen by the writer as contenders were eliminated in Saturday's play. The other two should remain victorious, however, as 4th North can be expected to roll easily on their opponents. The only serious challenge to the north wing's supremacy will probably come from the Socratic 7, but age and weight can be expected to defeat the faculty team with some assistance from 4th North's height and drive.

Below is a list of games set for tomorrow, together with a reproduction of the overall schedule.

Saturday, Feb. 2

1st South vs. 2nd North
2nd South vs. 3rd South
4th West vs. Arthur House
(The winner of the 4th West AH game will meet 4th North Sunday, Feb. 3.)

Keglers Beat DU

The Colorado College Bowling team again piled up enough pins in the first game of their match with Denver University to take the win. A total of 15 pins was all that separated the two teams.

The "Bengal Bowlers" scattered 930 pins to D.U.'s 823 in the first game and then managed to stay close enough in the next two to have a total pin score of 2,647 to 2,632.

The sensational finish of O'Kene Van Putten put the cap on this hotly contested match. Van Putten closed out with a strike in the 9th frame and followed with a "turkey" in the tenth. He had the high game of 225 and his series of 596 for this match. Ben Brant was D.U.'s high scorer with a 584 series and a 218 high game.

A return match in Denver has been arranged between the two teams for February 24th.

This win gives the keggers for CC a season of three wins and one loss with two more matches scheduled.

The match was watched by a number of students and off-campus spectators who showed the interest which has been generated on campus in the all around sport of bowling.

Winter Carnival February 14

Next Thursday night the Sophomore Winter Carnival will unofficially start with CC playing North Dakota in a critical WCHA hockey game. Friday night marks the official beginning of the Winter Carnival with intra-fraternity hockey and intra-sorority broom-ball at the Broadmoor World Arena. The games will feature announcer Jeff Sauer and referees Rich Love and Norm Laurence. The big event of the evening will be the crowning of the King and Queen of the Winter Carnival. The crowning will occur at about 9:30. Admission will cost fifty cents and the games will run from 8:00 p.m.-11 p.m.

Saturday afternoon will feature a ski meet between CC and the freshman teams of CU, DU, and Air Force at Ski Broadmoor. It should be an afternoon snow-packed with fun. No admission will be charged.

The culmination of the weekend will occur Saturday night with the CC-North Dakota hockey game and a dance afterward at the Anders Hotel ballroom. The hockey game, which promises to be exciting, will start at 8:15 p.m. After the game, the dance will start at 10:30 p.m. and will run till 1:30 a.m. The dance will feature E. J. Young's dance band. At the dance, trophies will be awarded to the winning sororities and fraternities of Friday night's games.

Voting for the King and Queen will take place in Rastall from Monday, Feb. 11, through Thursday, Feb. 14. Each vote will cost a nickel. The candidates for King are: Stan Lathrop, Kappa Sigma; Glen Foust, Phi Delta Theta; Don "King" Sprinkle, Phi Gamma Delta; Don Peterson, Sigma Chi; and Rory Weed and Bill Mendenhall, representing the independents. The candidates for Queen are: Sue Thompson, Kappa Alpha Theta; Cheryl Betts, Delta Gamma; Pam Meredith, Kappa Kappa Gamma; Kay Knudson, Gamma Phi Beta; Pat Damian, Alpha Phi; and Jane Humphrey and Nancy Seaman, representing the independents. Tickets for the dance will be available at the polling place at $2.00 per couple.

The purpose of the Winter Carnival is to earn money for the class of '65 to help pay for graduation week and to pay for the room and board of our student from Laos, Va Chaunromany.

Sunday afternoon there will be a poster making party for the carnival. The time and place will be announced.

Committee heads are: Chuck White, overall chairman; Dave Helms, dance; Jo Heller, financial; Sue Moore, coronation; Glen Foust and Pete McLaughlin, ski meet; Coleman Robinson and Linnea Erikson, intramural hockey and broom-ball; and Rich Conrad, publicity.

Brandt Leaves for European Sabbatical

Dr. Thomas O. Brandt, professor and chairman of the German department at Colorado College, has been granted a sabbatical leave for the second semester of the current academic year. Professor Brandt and his wife left Colorado Springs Wednesday, February 6 for Europe. They will return in June.

Brandt, who joined the faculty in 1947, plans to spend the next few months working and traveling. Following several months on the Spanish island of Majorca they will visit Italy, France, Germany, Denmark and England.

In addition to his duties as a professor and department chairman at Colorado College, Professor Brandt is managing editor of "The German Quarterly," published by the American Association of Teachers of German.

A native of Austria, Brandt holds a Ph.D. degree from the University of Vienna. He has taught at Oregon State University, University of Washington, the University of Maryland, and Middlebury College.

Last Monday, February 4, the Associated Students of Colorado College defeated the first proposed student "honor code" by a vote of 14 to 1. In mature and persistent defense of the code was Pat Chapman, Senior representative and head of the Enthusiasm Committee.

The code, which has been discussed at both January ASCC meetings as well as at a special session of the ASCC and in every corner of the campus, went down quietly in the final meeting preceded by no discussion. This does not mean, however, that the controversy caused by the code itself, and further by the idea of any code at all, has passed. The fight is not over, though this initial code is now obsolete, because voices and suggestions have made their mark. From a code of "no rules at all" we have proceeded to the code of L.A.B., as strict in its content as the former is liberal. Somewhere in between there is a point where the future policy of this school is to be found, and somewhere in between it is hoped that we can find the guideline for our "maturity."

Whether or not a student code of any kind is needed is still open to discussion, and what this code will include and how it will be phrased are vital questions. Most important of all is the question of how this code will be interpreted, and by whom.

The Dean of Men has informed us that the code was "student-proposed," but we have been told by others that it was an administration proposal, and still others have said that the code has been "floating," waiting to be brought to earth and thrashed around. This confusion was doubtless influential in the defeat of the code, but move important were the questions of meaning and purpose of the code, which have not yet been answered to everyone's satisfaction. The Student Policy Committee, created with the purpose of formulating "the non-academic policies and regulations of Colorado College," handily intends to drop the issue of a student code. A need for such a code is evidently felt to exist by members of both the committee and the college community at large. The committee has announced its intention to continue working on a code, and it intends to consider any proposals submitted to it in formulating a new code.

Discussion of the now-defeated code has been worthwhile, it has been so not merely because we have all considered it important, but because the discussion has been intelligent. General statements, undefined terms, and cloudy statements of intent were not impressive, but the final votes, "aye" and "nay," were cast conscientiously, and the question of a code is now out in the open. The initial one has failed, and it may be surmised that the next one, if not more specific and better-defined, will also fail. In the meantime we must think hard and prepare our stands on this question—to each his own view, until something is passed and, then, we shall see.

College Social Standard

President Benezet Voices Opinion on College Issue

A campus social standard is nothing more or less than a recognition by all of us that at Colorado College we live in, by and, at least temporarily, for a select institution of regard and tradition.

In order for a college degree to mean what it should, the college must be a place of respect both academically and socially. Most of us would not have come here were this not the case. The point need not be belabored.

Any social institution, if it identifies human aspirations, will place restraints upon the conduct of its members. The selective residential coeducational college in America is a notable example.

A campus social standard reminds us of these facts. It does not spell out offenses or penalties; it is rather the basis of agreement on which courts of equity can decide, when a case arises, to what extent, if any, some individual has failed to recognize the restraints on conduct which the privilege of membership in this college community requires.

Until recently in colleges, the deans or president were the sole courts of equity. They would interpret the degree of offense and the just penalty. If students, on the other hand, are to learn for themselves what community membership means in their lives, they ought to have the experience of judging conduct against community standards; they ought to have the security to feel also that such judgments are being handled by their peers rather than always by elders put there to judge them. We need to grow past the parent-child relationship in college.

Social conduct is obviously harder to judge than academic honor. Surrounding circumstances are more complicated. It can be done with thought and care; but there has to be a starting place. Instead of, "I have neither given nor received help on this exam," we must start on some broader base. It has been proposed that we start by saying in effect, "I recognize that membership in this College from which I hope to gain so much is a privilege and that it necessarily places restraints upon my conduct while I am identified as a member of the College."

In the recent past we have found students who had not made any such declaration. Thus courts of equity on conduct were stalled until agreement could be gained that the student, after all, is not free to follow his own dictates alone while in the College. If we can clear that up the Student Conduct Committee, I believe, will be in a position to do a better job for us all.

Dear Editor,
In all the articles and letters in the last two issues of the Tiger there has only been one mentioning of the students' studies, which is, as Bradley Snyder said, what we are here for. I see no reason then for a "home like" atmosphere in a college or university. One expects a college to be filled with students, and that the administration will have this first in mind in establishing their policies. The academic standard is what is important—in this way is the reputation of the College really affected. The second, third and fourth of Bradley Snyder's categories of determining moral concerns are the ones which are to be first considered. How a student might damage the name of the College is a matter which needs some definition, and which is not caught up with sexual behavior and drinking. There are other considerations which have a far more direct connection with morality and ethics.

Misa or Mr. LAB misses the issue completely in his or her Victorian and stilted proposed code. Sexual relations are usually not carried on in public and therefore do not affect the rest of the college community (drinking and other ways of showing affection are really not vulgar or offensive manifestations, and extramarital intercourse is a private affair carried on in private.) Girls and boys, for that matter, who stay away from the dormitories all night (whether they do or do not have sexual relations—and who is to say whether they do or not?) can only affect the other people who wish to make it their business for some not very admirable reason.

It seems to me that dormitory rules could undergo a rather extensive revision. Some people DO like to go walking between the hours of 11:30 p.m. and 6:00 a.m.—which should not be limited.

It is quite sad and pathetic to think that this is the best we can do, for there are issues which are far more deserving of all these energies directed to this code. The success of the symposium is certainly exemplary of this. Other scholarly, political and ethical subjects are more deserving of these energies. Why was there not more discussion and writing on the University of Mississippi affair and on the last Cuban Crisis? Why were there not more people at the discussion by Professors Gilbert, Brooks and Rudolf?

If administrations would concern themselves with the academic, and with students as such, such concerns as sexual behavior would not need be so important as issues. Here a more liberal view is necessary to keep a body of students that is varied and therefore interesting to each other.

Dear L.A.B.,

It seems that you wish to reduce the population of Colorado College to about 600 students.

Reluctantly yours,
J.B.

P.S. And perhaps ASJC should reconsider before adjourning "to the Kachina for further discussion."

Friday evening, February 8, Rastall Center Board will sponsor a party in the Hub. It will begin at 8:30 a.m. There is no admission charge. Music for dancing will be provided along with plenty of atmosphere. Pizza will be sold. Everyone is urged to come to the Hub for an evening of fun Italian style.

Sin and Crime

By James Scarboro

Though the recently proposed standard of conduct is rightly defeated, there is an aftermath of confusion among the students. Where to go now? Max Power recommends that the student body codify a standard which supposedly exists by implication. This is a poor idea primarily because no such implied standard does exist. To investigate the operations of the administration on so-called "maximum penalty cases" is to find a mass of confused legislation. No one can claim that there has been a consistency based upon principle. In this issue of The Tiger, President Benezet has indicated his hopes for a student-formulated code, some kind of succinct and meaningful statement which the administration has been unable to come up with in practice. But before this can be done by the students, certain "rules of the game" must be understood. Indeed this is a game and the sooner this fact is realized the better able we will be to propose an honest solution.

Most of the present confusion revolves around a mixture of two, entirely different, genres of transgression: crime and sin. Crime is public and sin is private. In the first case the transgressor is accountable to the law; in the second to conscience via guilt. Sin is not the concern of anyone else is not at that moment sinning; there is accountability only in terms of private commitment, not public responsibility. The blunt, the way I conduct my private life is none of your business and vice-versa. This is a basic freedom we cherish in most of its forms: freedom from unwarranted investigation, the freedom to be left alone. But on moral issues many of us suddenly switch horses and carry a banner for public prosecution of private acts, which, no matter how fervent, is nothing more than poking one's nose into the affairs of another, an intimidating preoccupation of the most pernicious motives.

The two categories, sin and crime, take care of themselves. Crime, if committed in the town, is handled by the local police; if committed on college property, i.e. damage to other minor offenses, then the individual is subject to college authorities. Sin, because it is private in act and consequence need not be considered, nor will forcing it into the public give it a basis of justice or even retribution.

It is therefore that area between sin and crime which must concern us. Obviously if the actions of any student would make blatantly public and threaten the image of the school, then the student has committed a crime and it can be dealt with as such, on the grounds of implied damage to individuals and the community. But let's admit that the reasons for prosecution do not derive from principles or truths. As a college we are simply demonstrating the tendency toward survival tactics when the school's public or private image is threatened. The act is blind, emotional and not designed for the personal welfare of those being prosecuted. If an unmarried pregnant woman is dropped from school, it is not because she and a male have committed a moral crime by themselves. We have no basis of deciding that question. It is dropped because her action implicates the rest of the students and the image of the college.

It should be evident that this area of rules and judgments cannot be circumscribed by a standard based on principle; such a standard is irrelevant because we are not dealing with principles at all.

Why then are we working on a so-called code? The most cogent reason is that the college must account to parents, donors and townspeople. This does not mean that we have to do good, only appear good. This is the matter of our public image and stems from nothing more than trying to be a sound, well-supported school. It is a matter of diplomacy; we cannot pretend it is anything else. If we were to take a detailed look from the outside, collecting opinions on dorm rules, premarital intercourse, etc., there would be little general agreement. What we desire is nothing more than the appearance of order and discipline, the external indications that things are running smoothly. If you grant that we try to account to those who support the school and provide students, then follows that you do not really account to any of them in specific terms, for they think and believe differently. What we assure is the appearance of order and goodness; and the assurance is all they need. Further this is all we can legitimately offer.

Let's stop this talk about moral right and wrong, an inherently justifiable moral principles or precepts. It is nonsense. If we want just a bit of dignity and honor in our lives we will have it by paying lip-service to these words. We will have it only by realizing that we are presenting an irrational code to an irrational society. We are paying homage to nothing more than opinion. This is purely pragmatic; we want to be honest we should state in our code that our tenets are not made on a framework of principle; that honor and dignity are personal; that we have written a so-called code only to present an image to the world; that our code is as artificial as the rules of those to whom we are answering. I could not disagree entirely with anyone who refused to be pragmatic and thus scorned the entire issue. But if we are going to say something, let's be honest with our endeavor and understand the issue for what it is.

Room for Improvement

Mr. Yaacov Nash, one of Israel's senior diplomatic officials, recently presented two of the finer lectures of the year. Mr. Nash's lectures carried an element of concern and interest for all students. At both his morning and evening presentations, only 30 students found his topic of enough interest to attend. Normally, one would dismiss this poor record of attendance and sympathize with the unfortunates who missed the Assembly. Yet, it should be noted that one of Colorado College's chronic ailments has been the serious lack of intellectual curiosity by the student body.

Colorado College has taken significant steps in the academic realm. Students are producing work of higher academic caliber than ever before. But they have not carried their academic achievements into the environment that surrounds them. Students still have not found the connection between their classroom knowledge and the decisive areas where an application of this knowledge is necessary.

At this point, one may cite the attendance record of the Symposium as a explicit contradiction to the above remarks. Yet, this editorial is quick to point out that only one out of every six students attended over one-half of the events offered in the Symposium. At almost every event, citizens from the Colorado Springs community made up an equal share of the audience. Only a small percentage of students patronized a majority of the Symposium's lectures.

Where does the problem lie? The ASCC recently interrogated the Assemblies Committee and deemed the failure to be poor advertising. Yet, Mr. Nash's lecture was publicized in the Rastall show case for several days in addition to an article appearing on the front page of last week's TIGER. The International Relations Club sent three separate announcements of the lecture to over 200 members on its mailing list. It should be noted that only one member of the ASCC bothered to attend Mr. Nash's lectures on Tuesday morning and evening. And only four members of the Assemblies Committee took time out to hear the program they had sponsored.

The problem is simply that Colorado College students are generally uninterested in the intellectual offerings made by the College. Certainly no one can dispute the fact that numerous opportunities are available. This is not an easy problem to correct, but definitely one well worth our consideration. Let there be no doubt that before Colorado College can be considered one of the outstanding liberal arts institutions in this nation, its student body will have to generate more interest in the vital problems of our world than it has shown in the past.—HDS

By MAX POWER—President ASCC

The representatives of the student body overwhelmingly rejected the proposed Colorado College Standard at Monday's ASCC meeting. No one denies, however, that much has come of the discussion surrounding the standard. The student interest generated by the proposal has led to a pretty thorough expression of student ideas and opinions concerning the area of student policy.

For all students, the air has been cleared somewhat by the Standard's rejection, but a better understanding of this area of student life remains. For those who believe that there is a need for some kind of standard, new proposals, and new points of view have emerged from the discussion. Finally, for the Student Policy Committee, the discussion of the Standard has resulted in new proposals, new insights into the committee's own task, and new approaches to student policy matters. —(Continued on page four)

CLARIFICATION OF AUTHORITY

By Terry Fonville

"The authority exercised by the students through the ASCC, under (its) constitution, has been delegated to them by the President of Colorado College under the authority of the Board of Trustees of Colorado College."

The above quoted paragraph from the ASCC constitution is the most important statement in the sacred document (which is our only basis for student government). It allows the ASCC and the judiciary organizations the assumption of the responsibility of government. Little or no provisions have been made in the constitution for administrative control or jurisdiction in matters of student government. Whether this omission is intentional or accidental, we, the students feel it is our right to know our exact powers and the limits of our governmental jurisdiction. For if these things are not known and are not made clear, many of our judicial decisions may become (or perhaps are) uncertain, confused, and really a little counterfeit.

In the constitutional by-laws of the ASCC some attempt has been made to delineate responsibilities. Student Policy Committee compiles and publishes regulations and policies. Student Conduct Committee has jurisdiction over major areas, i.e. infractions of general non-academic policies, and regulations of the College. Judicial Board, Inter-Fraternity Council, Intra-hall Council, and Honor Council deal with infractions of their specific policies. The Jurisdiction Committee handles disputes. The President and the Deans of the College have veto power over any regulation or policy of any of the above mentioned groups.

The point at hand is this: no where in the constitution is there any mention or provision for the administration to directly formulate and initiate policies, regulations, or decisions which the groups mentioned above have been given power to make. Yet, the administration has stepped in and has gone beyond the self-imposed limits of its power and jurisdiction by actively formulating and enforcing decisions without the say or sanction of the groups in question, thereby violating its trust and bond with the associated students.

President Benezet has stated in a recent publication that college students "ought to have the experience of judging conduct against community standards; they ought to have the security to feel also that such judgments are being handled by their peers rather than always by elders put there to judge them." We cannot agree with our President more. We also feel that a "basis of agreement" and a clearer foundation is in order, perhaps through a college standard as he suggests, or perhaps through addition or clarification of constitutions of the various organizations. The president's statements make our position stronger and more valid.

On other fronts in ASCC, this semester will bring the following:

- 1) Examination of the benefits which CC would gain by joining the newly formed Colorado Collegiate Association;
- 2) Consideration of proposals to revise the ASCC election procedures. Some of these suggestions include holding elections earlier in the Spring; holding elections for class presidents, vice-presidents and secretaries separately, and placing the times of the various class and all-school elections closer together;
- 3) Direction of a student-led summer reading program for next year's freshman class; and
- 4) Establishment of a system to better co-ordinate speakers and special interest programs here at CC.

We urge students interested in these topics to come to committee or ASCC meetings dealing with them. Please let your representatives know about other issues which you would like ASCC to consider.

This is Our Tradition...

As the exponent in Colorado Springs of the natural shoulder fashion class, we take special pride in its wide acceptance.

Years ago we were among the first to recognize the importance in developing a style idiom that captured a faithful following among traditional men. Joining our experience with our suppliers, we have worked together through the years to create soft shoulder innovations in design ideas, tailoring and fabric "finds" that have contributed significantly to the development of this fashion as a tradition.

That is why the natural man looks to us for the finest in soft shoulder expressions.

- Whatever the occasion, you will find traditional clothing correct.

Yaacov Nash . . . a tribute to Israel

By Myles Hopper

The College and community was treated to a visit by a distinguished representative from Israel, Mr. Yaacov Nash, Consul-General of the State of Israel for the eleven northern states plus Alaska and Hawaii, spoke on the small nation in the modern world. Last Tuesday morning found Raskin Hall sparsely populated for what turned out to be a very good assembly.

Mr. Nash based his statements more or less on what he termed the recent "historical revolution"; this revolution consists of the phenomenal growth of scientific and technical knowledge and the equally incredible "growth of freedom". One who was subjected to Nazi tyranny, Mr. Nash is "thrilled" by the new growth of colonies into nations. We might add that Mr. Nash is thrilled not only by the formation of new nations, but by the fact that these new nations can give the individual the chance to live his life in freedom.

The major questions of international affairs, namely those of war and peace, will be decided for the most part by the giants of the East and West. But, Mr. Nash added, "the small nations should not look to the future as inferiors."

One of the major advantages of having a small nation group in the United Nations, the speaker continued, is that it is not always directly involved in crucial problems and is thus able to maintain objectivity and above all, a pacifistic attitude. Their role, lies in contributing to the "realm of human knowledge and values." In this context, size becomes irrelevant. At this point Mr. Nash made an interesting historical allusion, although not an original one, to the incredible size and might of Israel's ancient (and modern) enemies and persecutors. Lasting universal values and a tough moral foundation provided the cohesive force allowed Israel to stand while Rome, or Persia, or Egypt, or Nazi Germany crumbled. We might here again add that the Israeli army should not be overlooked (nor the Maccabees of old) when appraising Israel's success. However small this army has been, it has often provided a means for defending that moral fiber and those values when words alone were not sufficient.

Mr. Nash divided the trend towards nationalism into two phases. First, a people become a nation; second, they must act as one. "Sovereignty is not enough"—it cannot be the final goal. When Israel became a sovereign nation it was a barren sand-dune land of 600,000 people—many of whom were desperate refugees, concentration camp survivors, and people untrained to subsist for themselves. But for seven years now Israel has carried on its own Point Four Program; and its own "Peace Corps" has extended its services to at least sixty needy nations.

Israel has been successful in its Peace Corps efforts due to its small size and its own undeveloped condition. Because other nations do not suspect Israel of imperialism and because they are aware of common problems, laboring "ambassadors" can find their efforts effective and welcome.

There are strings attached" to this phrase, her foreign policy but only those strings to repay the world for its debt to Israel—a debt to be paid by the enhancement of human values and the dignity of man.

Mr. Nash concluded his remarks by commenting on the nuclear age and the problems of civilization. We must, the speaker strongly asserted, have an effectively supervised plan of complete disarmament before the danger can be eliminated.

There was nothing profound in the words spoken by Yaacov Nash. There was nothing impressive in his physical presence. But for his wisdom, his sad and penetrating voice, his stature as a man of the humility of his speech, his profound effect on this writer.

Mr. Nash is a dignified, a man with a strong idealism. To be sure, Mr. Nash is an idealist and this is good. He spoke as an idealist tempered by the trials of warfare and politics, but not defeated. He is a man who speaks of Arab and Jew uniting to defeat a common enemy—the desert. He can speak of the dignity of man and human values when others of us have lost faith in them.

Those of us who did not attend Tuesday's assemblies missed an interesting experience. Mr. Nash represents what this writer witnessed as the spirit of a young Hebrew nation in which a wife together will shoulder rifle, and later, join hands to dance and sing songs of peace. An incredible toughness combined with sincere desire for peace is found in Israel's Yaacov Nash.

All-College Conference

Saturday and Sunday, March 2-3, are the dates for the All-College Conference. It will be held at Star Ranch south of Colorado Springs. A traditional event, the Conference gives students the opportunity to air their opinions on top of current interest at Colorado College. To enjoy the value of weekend retreat, students are urged to spend the night at Star Ranch if at all possible.

The first discussion will be at 2:00 p.m. Saturday and Conference will end at 4:00 p.m. on Sunday. Each discussion will start with short comments by a small panel of students and faculty. It will be their duty to open the discussion. In addition the discussion sessions, sports and entertainment is planned for Saturday night.

At this time the Conference topics are still being formulated. Therefore, students are urged to submit ideas for possible topics. Suggestions may be given to Dr. Hite 634-3511 or Leigh Rasmussen X286. A final listing and explanation of the topics, along with schedule for the weekend will appear in next week's TIGER. Members of the Conference committee are Carolyn Creyke, Leigh Rasmussen, Milenda Wells, Terry Paville, Judy Cookingham and Helms. David Hite is the chairman.

The March 2-3 date is a date from dates marked in the student calendar. Las Vegas Nite, previously scheduled for this date will be February 23.

In all, the Conference gives the College community a time to look with perspective at itself, assess we faced the first semester, and expectations for the future. Registration will be in Rastall Center February 15-25.

CC Icers Break Even Play Denver Tonight

By Dick Hantala
 "If we can take DU Saturday night, that'll put the icing on the cake for a highly successful season," said an elated Tony Frasca after a two-game sweep over the Michigan University Wolverines Monday and Tuesday nights at the Broad-moor World Arena.

Tonight CC meets the Pioneers at the DU arena in the first game of a home-and-home series, returning to the World Arena tomorrow night. Denver is currently in second place in the league and is hoping for its 23rd and 24th consecutive wins over the rebounding Bengals.

After dropping two on the road to the Minnesota University last weekend, the Tigers bounced back to crush Michigan 8-5 and 4-2. In the first game of the Minnesota series, Colorado College lost wingman Alex Yankovich and a 5-0 lead, in that order, as Minnesota pumped in three quick goals in the closing minutes of the game. Minnesota's momentum carried over into the second game as they easily outthrew a flat CC squad, 3-1. The series gave goalie Pete Doyle his first two losses of the season.

The disastrous road series dropped the Tigers to 5th place in the WCHA and in the opinion of many killed CC's hopes for a berth in the league playoffs. In the Michigan series, however, Frasca's squad roared back into contention, showing more poise than they have for a long time. Led by the near-professional goal-tending of Art Warwick, the Tigers pasted an offensively erratic Wolverine squad.

Monday's game started rather calmly, but the second period saw three rights break out at 6:33, leading to five simultaneous penalties. Minutes later, a defensive collapse led to four goals scored within 36 seconds. Michigan tied it up 4-4 momentarily in the wild skirmish, but Berglund put CC ahead to stay at 12:56. After that, the game belonged to the Tigers, as their lead mounted to 8-4 before the Wolverines knocked in one more with four minutes remaining.

The fired-up Tigers gleaned their second win Tuesday night, 4-2, as the Berglund-Stouffer-Fordyce line tallied twice. Warwick, behind a steadily improving defense, again stymied the Michigan offense with a dazzling series of spectacular saves. Defenseman Paul Kilbreth was a prime factor in the effectiveness of CC's defensive play, moving in hard and fast on the Michigan attackers. The officials proved unusually enthusiastic, as Referee Roger McNeil attempted to eject the Arena announcer as well as offending players, but CC, led by the fine example of Captain Don Stouffer, fought hard and clean.

As the DU series opens, CC gets another crack at the powerful Pioneer squad which is seeking to cement its hold on second place. CC must win to keep alive its uncertain playoff hopes.

Tennis Players Rank in Intermountain Division

The November issue of Tennis World magazine placed a number of Colorado College players in high positions in the Intermountain division of the national rankings. Freshman Cy Dyer is ranked first, with his partner, Dick Hurd, in the Boys' 18 Doubles division. Cy is also ranked 5th in Boys' 18 Singles, and 7th in Men's 21 Singles. Bill Yost, also a freshman, is ranked 9th in Boys' 18 Singles.

Russ Sperry, CC's team captain, is ranked 9th in Men's 21 Singles. Sperry, who holds the RMC Singles and Doubles Championships, added one more trophy to his collection during Christmas vacation, winning the Men's Doubles event in the Saguaro Tournament, held at Phoenix, Arizona.

CC's tennis squad, defending RMC champion, open its home season against Regis April 5 on the Monument Valley Courts.

Intramural League Moves Into Semifinal Cage Play

By Peter Bonavich

An undermanned 3rd South team pulled a come-from-behind upset victory over favored 2nd South Saturday in the highlight of a four-game series which saw 4th North emerge once more victorious, along with 1st and 3rd south. 4th West scored a hard-fought victory over Arthur House, but their stay in the winner's circle was short-lived as they went down to defeat at the hands of 4th North later in the afternoon.

In the opener, 4th West took a fast lead, and Arthur House never recovered, despite Jerry Fotheringill's drive and the last-ditch efforts of Ben Lyon, who scored over half of AH field goals.

Freshman Karl Halbach (alias Holbrook in last week's report) teamed with Steve Froughl to power 1st South to an easy 42-26 win over 2nd North. Page Whyte provided ten points, and Steve Gustafson cast 3 free throws and 4 field goals for the north wing.

Highly favored 2nd South fielded a huge team, and the tilt looked for a time like the proverbial hammer poised to crush a six-man 3rd South fly, but the fly proved too fast, and 3rd South bounced back from an 8-point deficit to take it, 31-27.

Fighting for the right to meet the Socratic 7 in a semifinal match, 4th North displayed much drive but no shooting finesse as they butchered 4th West, 52-16. It was Miesmer who led the west wing squad, but the effort was futile from the first as Hautala, LeCuyer, and Evans each hit in double figures. The north wing's rebounds made all the difference. 4th West was usually unable to take more than one shot before some grabby north winger had stolen the ball.

The league moves into semifinal play tomorrow, as 3rd South meets 1st South, and the Socratic 7, fresh from a double bye, runs into an experienced but possibly somewhat cocky 4th North five. Now the race has taken shape, this writer will predict wins for 1st South and 4th North. The 1st South cagers, boasting both numerical strength and 2 or 3 extremely accurate shooters, should pull out a close one, while a cold Socratic 7 squad will probably prove unable to match 4th North's play on the boards. The faculty could give 'em a run for it, however, if they manage to capitalize on the north wing's shooting weaknesses.

"THINK RIGHT"

By Norman Colbert and Jim Fox

EDITOR'S NOTE—The following is a verbal collage, made from the account of a discussion by two members of our faculty and selections from a Christian businessmen's magazine, Good Business, whose motto is: "Christian principles are the best basis for business." Following each quoted section in parentheses is a symbol standing for the title of the article or department, followed by the month and year in which it appeared. A specific date, e.g. "June 21" = "Collander of Activities," = "Pocket Power" AA = "Ambition Achieved," and GL = "Good Living."

"... The plenty of God is now mine as promised by Jesus Christ." (PP, Dec. '62). Last Sunday at the All Souls Unitarian Church Dr. Darnell Rucker and Dr. Ray Werner discussed the problem of "The Morality of a Business Society" and the hope and hopelessness of the American acquisitive society in which the expectation of profit is the primary motive.

"... God is my loving father and He supplies me with every good thing." (PP, Nov. '61). The use of one's intelligence to clarify the rightness or wrongness of an action and respect for others were the two ethical standards which Dr. Rucker felt must be maintained on the individual level.

However, business does not encourage the use of the intellect for moral purposes. When the primary concern is to get your customer and sell your merchandise, respect for one's fellow, be he customer or rival merchant, is a negligible or non-existent factor.

"... In quietness and confidence I attain every desired end." (PP, June, '62). On the institutional level, actions based on moral principles are prohibited by fear—"If I do this, I may hurt my own business." This fear works to preserve and codify moral apathy and principles of self interest. After all, "Business is business."

"... June 11—I pay close attention to principle in all I do." Dr. Rucker concluded his opening remarks by saying that we cannot blame the individual businessman for the essential immorality of his profession; it is rather the inevitable result of the development of American business from the small tightly-knit company to the large impersonal corporation.

"... June 21—I make more substantial progress." Dr. Werner suggested two possible solutions to the problem. We must first "get the facts," so that we can understand the real magnitude of the evil beyond the popular presentation of statistics.

Secondly we must recognize "interrelationships". A business deal may affect different participants in different ways.

"... July 24—I think and talk only success." The economic institution, created to fulfill social values, is neither more nor less moral than any other institution. Is business so unique that it cannot be reconciled with other institutions? asked Dr. Werner. Yes, was Dr. Rucker's answer. We live in an economic era and no other institution, including the church, is strong enough to impose its values on the present trend.

"... April 7—I see the whole world as a divine workshop." While destroying the old values, it seems unlikely that American business will promote any important ethical principles of its own beyond the law of survival of the fittest.

"... After attending public school, S— tried a year at State College, then quit to get a job. He was able to take over a small filling station and had the idea that if he gave better service and worked harder than others and utilized more ideas than others did, he would soon own a string of stations. Which he did.

"From here he carried the idea into the trucking business, a rough and tough business in those tail-end-of-the-depression days. S— learned about it the hard way, as a driver, often being cut out of runs because he would not play the game the way unscrupulous brokers and operators wanted him to. He could be rough too, and he had the physical strength to hold his own, but he had a code: 'no one can hold you back if you do right and think right'..." (GL, Dec. '62)

Censorship Problems Discussed by ACLU

On January 30, last Wednesday, the American Civil Liberties Union of Colorado Springs held their Winter meeting of the 1962-63 academic year. The subject matter of the meeting was both fascinating and difficult to discuss: the limitation of expression on the ground of obscenity.

A lengthy statement was prepared by the National American Civil Liberties Union and was read by the members of the panel prior to the meeting. The panel, Father Jepson, Dick Noyes (Chinook) and Sheldon Singer (V.P. and General Manager of KVOR), responded to the statement and then answered relevant questions from the audience. Before the program began, a summary of the ACLU original statement was read to the group by Professor Bechtel. The summary reads

1.) Any limitation of expression on the ground of obscenity is unconstitutional. The Board took this position because, it said, the drawing of a precise line between good and bad material is impossible. What may strike one man as pornography may be a matter of complete indifference to another. Also in a free society there is a special need to protect controversial expression. In such a society standards are formed through discussion and censorship limits discussion.

2.) If obscenity laws are invoked, prosecutions should be based on clear proof that the material involved would cause, in a normal adult, behavior which has validly been made criminal by statute. This position the Board said, follows the ACLU's traditional "clear and present danger" position.

With respect to prosecutions, the Board also listed several protections that should apply: the right to counsel, the right to a prompt public trial by jury, a clear statutory definition of the offense, and no action directed toward persons who do not have substantial responsibility for the creation or distribution of the material in question.

3.) If allegedly obscene material is directed toward children, the standard to be applied should be that there is proof beyond a reasonable doubt that the material would cause behavior that would violate a criminal statute. In this area, the Board said, the assumed danger to sensitive minds should be measured against actual evidence as to whether such danger is real and also the damaging effect that general proscriptions on children will have on the availability of controversial reading matter to adults.

The Colorado Springs chapter will hold one more meeting this year on a topic not yet disclosed. There are three meetings per academic year; Fall, Winter, and Spring providing the calendar dates. All meetings are open to the college and in general are not well-attended by students. Nevertheless, it is certain that such a group has much to offer any interested student and should be taken advantage of.

There is a special student membership rate of $2.00; but, for a $5.00 membership fee one is entitled to full mailing list privileges. The opportunity for vigorous discussion and attempts at explanations of hazy topics is offered by the ACLU.

Any students who are interested should contact Professor Bechtel of Colorado College as soon as possible. It is hoped that a large portion of our student body will become, if not active members, at least active discussants.

KRCC Will Rebroadcast Symposium Lecture Series

KRCC broadcast 42 hours of the Symposium, "The Contemporary Arts and the Citizen." The station received approximately 100 phone calls per day, that is Monday through Friday. From this it can be judged that we had at least 1000 people who were listening to the station. This is based upon the fact that for every phone call from listeners 10 will never call.

The programs that were rebroadcast are listed below. Some of these will also be rebroadcast during this semester.

1. The Symposium Worship Service, 1-13-63
2. Folk Music Program 1-13-63

An unrestricted grant of $750 was presented by G. A. Cheney, manager of Sears-Roebuck in Colorado Springs, to CC president Louis T. Benezet. The purpose of this "Cost-of-Education" grant is to supplement the Sears-Roebuck Foundation Scholarship program at the independent college of Arts and Science.

Mr. Cheney said that 94 colleges and universities throughout the U.S. would also receive "Cost-of-Education" grants totaling $36,700.

Halfback Mellin Named To Academic Grid Team

Colorado College halfback, Bill Mellin, has been nominated to the 1962 All-America Academic squad. Mellin, a CC junior, was one of 104 football players selected nationally for the scholastic grid team. The 21 year old Philadelphia major from Tenafly, New Jersey, played at the slot-back position through the early part of last season, before mid-season injuries sidelined him.

According to Lester Jordan, coordinator of the All-America academic squad, Bill was chosen from hundreds of players nominated for the 1962 team.

Also Rastall received many phone calls which were not included in the number of phone calls to KRCC.

Two tapes were made for KOAA TV in Pueblo and several tapes were used by KVOR in Colorado Springs.

It is felt that the coverage given aided the symposium greatly and did a great deal of service for the community.

Cervantes Draws Blood

By John Ebe

This evening at 8:00 the FAC Film Society will present Luis Bunel's 16 mm production of Viridiana in the Music Room of the Fine Arts Center. Admission for non-members will be one dollar.

Viridiana is based on the myth of a little-known saint who lived at the time of Saint Francis of Assisi. Saint Viridiana, a young woman, was drugged by an old man, and while in this state completely at his mercy. Without the help of drugs, his advances would have been fruitless. From this idea Luis Bunel creates a complicated world of eroticism, religion, and death. His twentieth-century Viridiana is a novice about to take her final vows as a nun. At the encouragement of an older nun she visits her uncle, an elderly Spanish gentleman, and becomes the object of his sexual and religious fantasies. As the film progresses both Viridiana and her uncle are confronted with reality and personal inadequacy. In the uncle's case this confrontation leads to suicide. Viridiana, after the suicide, decides to break with the church.

The film is definitely Spanish. There is an unmistakable connection between the uncle's obsession with the past and "Don Quixote." The black humor of the beggars that overrun the estate after the uncle's death is straight from Goya. It would be wrong, though, to regard Viridiana as simply a comment on Spain's religious, social, or political situation. Instead, the viewer must realize that Bunel, while taking a definite moral position, is attempting to illustrate nature's view concerning the true nature of man.

The density of Viridiana's meanings and implications is extraordinary. Bunel uses every technical trick of film making. Music becomes an element of emotional counterpoint, and not simply mere adornment. Shades of light and dark take on shades of subtle meaning. As Viridiana begins her fall from innocence, symbols appear everywhere. A crucifix serves as a pocketknife, a group of beggars for an instant arrange themselves similar to the figures in Da Vinci's "Last Supper," a cross and crown of thorns become symbols of erotic impulses. Rock and roll blares as Viridiana, in an act of submission, plays cump with her cousin and his servant. Then the camera draws back leaving them grouped together in a bright rectangle of light, trapped to illusion in a world without exit or gillusion.

Directory Lists Summer Jobs

The 1963 "Summer Employment Directory" contains a comprehensive list of 1,485 organizations throughout the United States which want to hire college students this summer. Specific jobs with salary, name of employing official, and suggested procedure for making applications are given.

The jobs are found at summer camps, resorts, national parks, summer theaters, hospitals, ranches, restaurants, pools and beaches, various departments of the government, business and industry, and other places. There are jobs for all classmates, freshmen through graduate; in addition, juniors, seniors, and graduate students can find summer jobs in their field of study.

Employers are included in the directory at their own request and they invite students to make application directly to them.

The new "Summer Employment Directory" may be obtained by sending $3 to National Directory Service, Dept. C, Box 32065, Cincinnati 3, Ohio. Mark "rush" for first-class mailing.

Attention—Older Students!

Are there any older students who might be interested in forming a club to meet one afternoon a week in Rastall Center? I am told there are about twenty of us here. We might do some interesting things together or just exchange ideas and information.

If at all interested leave name and telephone number in Tiger office sometime soon.

Napa Valley Inhabited

By Georgina McClay and James H. Fox

The Most Happy Fella, which will be presented by the Drama, Dance, and Music departments March 7-9, was adapted by Frank Loesser, also author of Where's Charlie, Greenwillow (Anthony Perkins) and the old standard, Guys and Dolls. The original idea was Sidney Howard's Pulitzer prize winning play, They Knew What Happened, produced by the Theater Guild in 1924.

The show, using a minimum of spoken dialogue, is Loesser's first solo effort, and took him over four years to write. During that time, he composed over thirty musical numbers, ranging from arias to folk music. The songs and orchestration suggests the basis for character development and introspection, as well as most of the important details of plot. The term "opera" is a dubious classification for The Most Happy Fella, which is referred to by its author as an "extended musical comedy."

Howard's They Knew What Happened is basically a tragic melodrama. The protagonist is Tony (John Glines), an aging Italian vinegrower in Napa Valley, California, who falls in love with Rosabella (Genevieve Vaughan), a young waitress he has seen in San Francisco restaurant. When wooing her by mail, he modestly sends her a snapshot of his handsome foreman, Joe (Ben Lyons), in preference to his own homely mug. She agrees to come to Napa to marry him.

The sentimental story is developed by a number of lively, varied Napa inhabitants, not present in the original, who inject Loesser's wit into the Valley. The musical version has a much wider vision—four sets and a large cast—than Howard's one set and thirteen character drama. Featured are foot-loose Cleo (Polly Franklin), genial and timorous Texan, Herman (Romney Philpott), and Tony's possessive sister, Marie (Mary Pat Hill).

Donald Jenkins is the musical director, William McMillen will stage the production, and Norman Corwin is responsible for the choreography. The grape pickers' wardrobe will be created by Jean McMillen; David Hand and Bishop Nash are in charge of the set and lighting design, and Georgina McClay serves as assistant director.

Other local Napa includes: a trio of drug store cowboys, Al (John Lewis), Jake (Robert Workinger), and Clem (Charles White) who assist Herman in the well-known "Standin' on the Corner, Watchin' all the Girls Go By," Pasquale, the bully (Dale Spall), Giuseppe (William Moon), and Cicio (Robert Little), who form another trio of Italian servants. Doc, the marriage counselor of the A.M.A. (Richard Bradley) and Arthur Day's melodious Cupid, The Postman (William Moninger), who sings on delivery.

In addition, there are nine minor acting roles, fourteen dancers, who portray drugstore cowgirls and waitresses, a chorus of thirty-nine singers, and an instrumental ensemble, including Anne Perry and Trent Ellis at the two pianos, Hugh Teason at the string bass, and, last but not least, "CC's Gene Krupa," Henry English, who works the percussion instruments.

In Howard's play the emphasis is on the growth and maturity in the character of Tony, as he realizes that certain compromises are necessary for happiness. In Loesser's version, the theme is rather that of the search of lonely people for companionship and security.

CC Group to Invade Old Mexico; Spring Break to Be Fun Fiesta

Colorado College students will take off for Mexico March 22 on the first of a series of annual Spring Vacation trips to the country south of the border. Reservations are still open to interested students and should be placed with Miss Claydon in the Department of Romance languages.

The group will spend three days in Mexico City and three days in the beautiful provincial towns of Guanajuato and San Miguel Allende. These cities are seldom visited by tourists. They have been included in the trip with the purpose of presenting the students with a genuine picture of Mexican provincial life. Guanajuato, reputedly one of the most beautiful places in Mexico, is a lovely combination of the Medieval and the Renaissance. The group will also see the site of the impressive Teotihuacan, urban center of a mysterious civilization which occupied the Valley of Mexico between 300 BC and 1100 AD.

Most of the highlights of Mexico City and surroundings will be visited. The students will see the Palacio de Bellas Artes, Chapultepec Castle, the University of Mexico, the famous gardens and houses of the Pedregal, the National Museum of Archaeology and the Cathedral. It is suggested that everyone visit the fascinating Monte de Bellas Artes, Chapultepec park, the national pawnshop of Mexico, and that at least one trip be made to one of the few open air markets left. There is ample time for each one to do his own investigating.

Other interesting plans include a bullfight, an afternoon at Xochimilco, invitations to private homes, and dinners in unusual and typical restaurants.

The spring trip is not designed to be exclusively a study trip, but rather a combination of vacation plus learning. Knowledge of Spanish is not required, but it will be a great help to those who wish to investigate Mexican problems and opinions. Much of what is of importance and interest will be pointed out by Miss Claydon, who is accompanying the group.

Special permission has been granted to allow the students to depart on March 22. They will drive to El Paso and fly to Mexico City. This travel arrangement will allow them the maximum time in Mexico. Their return is scheduled for March 31. Itineraries are available at Rastall Center Desk.

Brave New Classicism

Review of James Yaffe

By Lawrence Berkove

Three weeks after his appearance here, it is generally acknowledged that author James Yaffe was one of the qualified highlights of the Symposium. Far less known to most of the other guest participants, Yaffe quickly carved a surprisingly large circle of personal admirers with his clarity, candor, and charm, and a firm band of allies with his literary philosophy. The ideas that he advanced in his public appearances bear repeating both for their relationship to those advocated by other Symposium speakers and for their intrinsic value.

Probably the most striking feature of Yaffe's philosophy was its pronounced sense of literary form. He defined the novel, for example, as an extended prose narrative distinguished by its emphasis on the development of character. He then contrasted the novel to the short story and the drama by pointing out that because of its inherent brevity, the short story must emphasize sudden revelation of character rather than gradual development, and that because of its restrictions of place, availability of text to the audience, and such authorial machinery as description and comment, the drama must emphasize dialogue, gesture, and intensity of character. Thus, although his opinion that such works as Swift's Gulliver's Travels and Orwell's 1984 were not true novels because they were not primarily concerned with the development of character surprised many in the audience, he meant nothing more than that as they were not done in the form of novels they must be judged by standards suitable to them; his distinction was formal and not qualitative, just as were his distinctions of novel from short story and drama.

Following from this point was his next contention—that form was more basic to the novel than message. He held that a novelist was bound to exercise economy of style and restrict himself to those personalities, events, and statements which were absolutely necessary to the development of character, and no more. He opposed stylistic gimmicks which are used for their own sake when he voiced his adherence to the dictum that the best art is that which conceals itself. He also claimed that the novelist ought to be thoroughly familiar with the tools and techniques he used—and he included as "tools" such subtleties as the ideas and world (real or imagined) which the novelist evokes. In concrete terms, this means that the ultimate test of a novelist's "caring about" his characters is not that he "likes" them or sincerely agrees with the values they might represent, but that his "villains" are just as fully developed and believable as his "heroes."

The third feature of Yaffe's literary philosophy was his regard for the writers of the past. One of his most forceful statements was his fervent assertion that a young writer could do no better than to deliberately study the great writers of the language to see what they had done and to learn how.

If we have to give it a name, Yaffe's literary philosophy may best be described as a sort of classicism. It is a concern for form and craftsmanship which is manifested within a literary tradition. But merely to tag Yaffe as a classicist does not do justice to him—or to classicism—and it certainly does not explain the enthusiasm with which his remarks were received. Too many in the college audience had filed notebooks with austere and erudite definitions of classicism to be excited by more old hat.

To this reviewer, the real contributions Yaffe made to a symposium dedicated to contemporary art and theories of art were the persuasive appeal of his vision of the novel and his perceptive appreciation of the infinite value and enduring validity that was possible within classicism. He was a living proof of the continuing vitality of the tradition of De Fielding, Sterne, Austen, Dickens, Conrad, and Cary, and of the fact that a writer who acknowledges these writers as his masters will still be fully as contemporary as aesthetically satisfying as the next modern.

I, personally, would push last point even farther. In Shapiro's iconoclastic broad attack on all literary tradition, notwithstanding, I would say unless a writer acknowledges the classical writers of the past models, and unless he learns the value of form, he may be contemporary, but he is unlikely to be aesthetically satisfying. It is this, I think, that Shapiro is debating the examples and lessons of the past and to advocate per radical change, but it is quite other for a young writer to take his advice. Shapiro has studied past himself and although he does not seem to want to admit it, in fact does not practice some of the very excesses he recommends. He is in the position of one who full meal already under his belt who urges others to drink empty stomachs and who says them that this is the better of wisdom.

Along with Clement Greenberg and Gunther Schuller, to list a few other participants who come to mind, Yaffe represents a thoughtful segment of contemporary artists and critics which believes among the many changing aspects of art there are a few that are unchanging, and that the best modern art shares some essential qualities with the best of the masters. Yaffe never takes the time to read some of Yaffe's own work, but he practices what he preaches. In his recent novel, Margolies, and in his short story published in various magazines can be found plots and characters skillfully and entertainingly created with variety and depth. His work "Cares" about the author and about his audience. In my estimation, James Yaffe is almost a better than average writer. I am sanguine enough to believe that he is well worth watching.

Screen Has Surprises

La Belle Americaine, a French movie coming to the Fine Arts Center on Tuesday night is profound, makes no blindingly social comments and his no star, buttercup-like Doris Day mar its humor. It is just one of the most hilarious movies to see along in a good many years. It starred Dey and his company, started in the Broadway show La Plume de ma Tante, have together a comedy based on very simple ideas, the impact of monstrous American car on French working class family. The family is able to purchase the car because of the confusing chaos which the French government has instituted in the value of its money. What goes on from there is better seen than said, or perhaps better laughed at than paraphrased.

If you gloomily feel that comedy means Rock Hudson in Doris Day or that Glen Ford is Charlie Chaplin, go see La Belle Americaine. It is a most relieving surprise!

Foreign Students Seek Better Understanding

By Terry Winograd

One of the basic objectives of a liberal arts education is to gain an understanding of other people. This is being achieved to a greater extent than most by thirteen students on our campus from such diverse places as Norway and Thailand, Egypt and Japan.

Many groups are involved in the arrangements for their education, including our Foreign Student Committee. This group is composed entirely of students and has the responsibility of deciding among the many applicants for the available admissions. Seven scholarships are provided by the Institute of International Education, which also does the preliminary screening of applicants. Students desiring to study in America apply to IIE, which matches their qualifications and interests with those of the college, sending their applications to the schools for which they are best suited. Other scholarships are underwritten by such groups as ASPAU (African Scholarship Program of American Universities) and our own sophomore class.

This year we have students from a great variety of countries in every continent. Luis Arrieta, the veteran among the foreign students, came here from Panama, intending to stay just one semester, but decided to continue. Now in his fourth year as a political science major, he is in charge of the labs for the Spanish department and is working on a radio program on KBOC entitled International Studies. This program brings together foreign and American students for round table discussions on many topics. After attending law school, Luis plans to hold a post in international relations.

Also from Latin America is Luis (Fernando) Perez. After a year here, he plans to study engineering at other schools in the United States for several years before returning to work as an electrical engineer in his native Costa Rica. He, as many of the other students, attended a university in his own country before getting the opportunity to study here.

"The boy with the unpronounceable name" is a term used to describe several students with some degree of accuracy, but it best fits perpetually smiling Brecharr Hemmaphrad. As a pre-engineering student, he plans to follow the 4-2 program in chemistry, then return to Thailand. Running a close second for the most difficult name is Valouma Chounnamany, but his nickname "Va" avoids frustration on the part of his tongue-tied colleagues. Va is not new to this country, having attended high school in New York. In order to accept admission here on a scholarship sponsored by the sophomore class, he turned down an offer to attend college in Moscow. After graduating from CC in political science, he will be in the Laotian diplomatic corps. Another politics major from the Orient is Kazuko Kogugi, who is privately enrolling from Japan. She attended Keio University before applying to CC, which was recommended to her by a friend living in Colorado Springs. Her experience here will give her a background for a job in the United Nations.

Europe is the home of four of the students now attending CC. Rudolf Giesinger came here from Austria in order to become better acquainted with our language and people, as a basis from which he can follow his calling as an English teacher. He has already taught for three years at the junior high school level, and after receiving his degree, he will teach at a Gymnasium (equivalent to our high school).

Magda Findeisen is also studying English as part of her preparation for a career as an interpreter or translator of scientific books. She is in an unusual position, as one of extremely few Polish undergraduates studying in the United States. She has attended the University of Warsaw, and will probably remain associated with it after attaining her degree.

Norway is represented by Thordis Eriksen, who is here on a Fulbright travel grant. She will major in history or Spanish, but has an interest in politics, as seen in an accompanying article. Views on another subject are expressed in an article by Gerhard Janssen. Venneboer, Gerhard is the only student here on an exchange program—a Colorado College student is attending his college in Holland. An economy major, he will be employed in international trade.

Completing the range of continents, we have three students from Africa. Solomon Nkiwane is in his second year here from Southern Rhodesia. His interests in law and politics prompted him to seek a liberal background as found in this country. After getting a master's degree, he plans to study in England before returning to his country. Abiodun Afonja is also in his second year at CC, majoring in mathematics. After attending graduate school, he will return to teach high school or college in Nigeria. Both he and Solomon are sponsored by ASPAU and were among a very few students selected from over 3,500 applicants for these scholarships.

New this semester is Hassan Adan Noor, a transfer student from Georgetown University. He came from the Somali Republic last fall, and after graduating with a degree in economics he will return to his job as an agricultural statistician for his government.

In relating their impressions of America, these students, of course, expressed many different views. One thing, however, which almost all of them mentioned was the difference in seriousness between students here and those in other countries. They felt that many American students are not serious about their studies and do not come to college with a real desire to learn.

Often, we tend to look at a situation from one point of view because of the similarity of our backgrounds. Being on a campus with students from other lands presents a great opportunity to see how things look through the eyes of others. This is an opportunity which should not be overlooked. We should take advantage of it to the greatest possible extent by meeting other students and listening to their ideas and views.

sketches will be combined with a general explanation of where CC will channel its building activities in the next 10 years. Why not come and find out what will be completed as you graduate and what future students will be able to use? Coffee will be served at 4:00 p. m. in WES room of Rastall on February 20, 1963, sponsored by Rastall Center.

Dates for Essay Contest Extended

The Symposium Essay contest dates have been extended until March 1. Essays are to be submitted prior to that date to Dr. Sondermann's Office in Peabody House. They should be up to 2500 words in length and should deal with the general theme of the Symposium or any sub-theme of particular interest to the writer.

Two prizes are offered: the first prize is a $25.00 gift certificate from a downtown store (men's and ladies' wear); and the second prize is a $10.00 gift certificate from the Colorado College Bookstore.

AFSC Co-ordinates Many Service Projects

Many of you have heard of the few CC students who have been involved in service projects sponsored by the American Friends Service Committee. This committee is the outgrowth of the concerns and activities of Quakers in national and international fields of social action and has operated many projects here and overseas which aim at reconciliation and rehabilitation. Last weekend the AFSC sponsored a College seminar entitled "Service in Society" held at the Colorado State Hospital in Pueblo. The purpose of the seminar was to bring together interested students from various Colorado campuses to explore the motivations for service in the environment of a service project. Participants in this weekend project had the opportunity for active work involving mental patients, and for discussion which was stimulated by the AFSC's representative on our campus, and is extremely willing to discuss with you the activities of these weekend projects and their value to you.

Dates will be as follows: March 1-3, April 5-7, April 26-28, and May 10-12.

Poll Taken at Loomis Dorm Shows Students Ill-Informed

By Leigh Rainy and Susan Caudill

Monday night, or rather Tuesday morning, a small but persistent group of Loomis Hall malcontents surveyed the supposed intelligent and well informed CC upperclass women. The purpose of this makeshift poll was to investigate political attitudes and knowledge of current events. The results are almost too embarrassing to print. Even allowing for the inexperience of the pollsters and hurried tabulation, it is impossible to ignore the appalling implication of the following figures.

(1) 50 % of the 130 women interviewed did not know the name of the secretary general of the United Nations. Some individuals were even under the impression that the United Nations is headed by General McArthur, Dag Hammarskjöld, or Bobby Kennedy. (2) Concerning the all important Supreme Court decision, Brown vs. The Board of Education (1954), 65% admitted complete ignorance. Some, however, felt the case was related to child beating and teaching of evolution in grade schools. One individual suggested that this case involved accusing Senator Joseph McCarthy of Communist sympathies. (3) 75% knew nothing about the headlined Iranian Revolution. Some, felt confident in saying that the crisis was just "another one of those South American revolts," or that "an atomic bomb had been dropped on this small Asian nation." (5) Although 59% were able to name the president of the Senate, five individuals stated that "there is no such office," and another individual suggested that Nixon is currently in charge. (6) The Senate majority leader is unknown to 79% of the interviewed group. Several individuals felt that Bob Munson of Advise and Consent holds this prominent position, while others held out for Barry Goldwater. (7) Incredible as it may seem, 40% were unable to name the secretary of state. Nonetheless, some remain secure in the knowledge that this office is held by Dean Acheson, McNamara, John Foster Dulles, Adlai Stevenson, Douglas Dillon and the irrepressible Bobby Kennedy. (8) An admittedly harder question asking which senator is currently attacking the Kennedy Administration's handling of the Cuban crisis yielded ed 90% totally unfamiliar with the situation. (9) 67% of those interviewed had better find out what happened on the Fourth of July. (10) In an attempt to get away from these remote and obscure questions, the investigators asked Loomis residents to name their class commissioners. 30% found themselves unable to name any. (11) When asked, in a somewhat devious manner, whether or not matriculation is a cardinal offense, the following comments were made—"Why yes, killing your mother is a terrible crime."—"Isn't that some kind of religion?"—"That must have something to do with kissing."—"Is this the Catholic church we're talking about?" (12) 10% of the 130 answered affirmatively to the question "Do you think the Mann Act has contributed to erasing Secularism?"

In response to opinion questions, Loomis indicated that Rockefeller should be the next President, and decided that there were offensive instead of defensive weapons in Cuba. Loomis evenly split over U.S. recognition of Red China, favored trade with Communist nations, and decided to allow known Communists to teach in college.

Despite the defensive discomfort of some political science majors, the 130 were more embarrassed than hostile. (The more recent results are on page two)

Tiger Club and Tigerettes Entertain Deaf and Blind

Tiger Club and Tigerettes joined forces Sunday, February 10, in a Valentine's party for some of the boys and girls of the Colorado Springs School for the Deaf and Blind. About thirty of the children and several of their teachers and housemothers were treated to a performance of The Philippine Duck Dance by members of the Kappa Kappa Gamma sorority.

FAC Features Hepburn Movie

By Norman F. Colbert

It is not uncommon that a popular piece of fiction be translated from the austerity of the printed page to the many-splendored silver screen. This has been with us for as long as movies and best-seller lists have, and, after the better part of a half-century, the trusty old dictum giving the ever-critical audience the go-ahead to the affair—"the book was so much better than the picture"—is beginning to seem very old indeed.

On Tuesday the cinematic adaptation of Truman Capote's Breakfast at Tiffany's will be screened at the Fine Arts Center, and members of the literate elite familiar with the novella will note that the technicolor version is scarcely its twin. To pad the slender plot to feature-length proportions and to add a bit of that billion-dollar flash that builds box office queues, Mister Capote's penniless young writer is provided with a generous, maternally mistress, who sets him up in a Hollywood-baroque apartment with blue flock paper on the wall, a mummy glass telephone, and a room-sized closet, full of suits. To provide the conventional love interest expected by the movie-going masses, the elliptical plot is made a matter of boy-meets-girl, boy-loses-girl, etc. Miss Holiday Goughly still gets the "mean reds" and $50 for the powder-room, but she has lost her "wildness," 11 lovers, and her impressive repertoire of international obscenities. Having departed so far from Mr. Capote's intention, it is amazing that the picture is nevertheless, a very good one.

George Axelrod, who prepared the screenplay, has endowed it with a goodly measure of never-failing wit. Moreover, if the heroine as impersonated on the screen is much tamer than the genuine article, being Audrey Hepburn she is thoroughly delightful. Considering what he has to say, George Peppard plays the young writer with phenomenal grace.

The book is a good book; the picture is a good picture. The media are different, and let's not judge the one by the standards of the other.

* Poll Taken at Loomis

action to the poll was to rush to the text book and newspaper after the interviewer left the room. Perhaps the most violent reaction was that of two women who ambushed one of the interviewers and presented a counter quiz which was undoubtedly based on the authority of Ladies Home Journal. I define a coddled egg, the contents of a baby's formula, the proper family room temperature. In this case, the interviewer proved even more uninformed than the participants of the original poll, and was correspondingly embarrassed.

However, the major purpose of the poll was not to publicly embarrass Loomis Hall. It was merely intended to measure political awareness. As it turned out, the poll is a better measure of political ignorance. We go to economics and political science classes and we knit and take occasional notes. But our concern for the vital issues of political science and economics are lost somewhere between Palmer Hall and the Hub. Some of us have even forgotten the basic facts of knowledge about our government were supposed to learn in the ninth grade. Consequently, the time to be concerned with the state of the world, surely not an unimportant matter, cannot be limited to class or immediately following a survey taken by a handful of students. If Loomis' present ignorance is embarrassing, its continued ignorance will be inexcusable.

LETTERS to the EDITOR

Dear Editor:

Although I am sensitive to and approve of the general campus climate which you seem to be recommending in your editorial "Room for Improvement," it seems to me that your consideration of the failure of students and faculty to attend assemblies and other campus events en masse fails to take into account some extremely relevant matters. Perhaps we are more deficient in "intellectual curiosity" than we ought to be and perhaps our publicity and communications system isn't always sufficiently wide and intense. But the analysis should not stop there. There are at least two other points of equal or perhaps greater relevance in explaining small audiences.

1. We have had "wolf" cried (somewhat in reverse) too often to be able to trust the publicity we do receive. I recall having read several announcements from sponsors of events to my classes with great enthusiasm and having urged them to attend in order not to miss a "jaw-dropping" experience. In attending the event myself, I have judged it to be a terrible waste of time for everyone concerned. The speaker turned out to be uninformed or misinformed and the only people who could hear him were the "lucky" ones who sat in the front three rows. Any sponsor is entitled to a few such mistakes, but it seems to me that we have had altogether too many such unfortunate experiences, so many, in fact, that many of us react with considerable distrust to glowing announcements of coming events. The net result is the decision sometimes rightfully, sometimes wrongfully, that there would be more intellectual profit in a game of bridge. I feel we have the right to demand more responsible decisions and more truthful publicity from the sponsors of speakers and events.

2. There is the possibility that we have too many events, even if excellent, at which we expect large audiences. Please note that I did not say that we have too many events. It is simply that with a multitude of events our expectations of general participation by students and faculty at nearly all of them is unrealistic. We cannot all be actively interested in everything important all the time. Even if this were not the case, we cannot all attend everything we are interested in at any time. It is offered. We have to make choices among a set of competing demands and obligations and without knowing what they are, who is to judge that any individual or even the students and faculty at large have made an improper choice in non-attendance?

If we are to countenance the number of events that we do, then it seems to me to be realistic to say that we have built in small attendance at a majority of them. We can choose to sponsor many events with small attendance or to sponsor a few events with at least a proper expectation of a large audience. But we have nothing against many events, but we should accept the consequences of the decision to have them without scouring ourselves and others for failing to attend a majority of them.

Finally, I wonder if, at about this time of year, we don't begin to suffer from the disease of "attentitis," characterized by such symptoms as tired buttocks, confused ear drums, and nervous systems trying to carry dozens of messages in many directions at the same time. The only cure I know of is to stay away until the damage is repaired. Perhaps the dogged attenders are afflicted with the more serious variety known as "compulsive attentitis" rather than being intellectually curious.

In closing, may I restate the fact that I am not disagreeing with your complaints, but that I think that you have identified wrong culprits or if not the wrong ones, only a part of them. Perhaps those who advertise the product falsely and those who sell us more than we can consume should also share in blame.

Dear Editor:

This school year has witnessed a vastly improved intramural program from the standpoints of participation and also quality sportsmanship exhibited. While this is attributable to defensible, excellent organizations, merely increased student interest is irrelevant. The fact is that groups on campus, including fraternities, dorms, town squads and spectators, have joined in excellent and comprehensive intramural program.

Concerning this program, several students were raised. Jim Heckman in last week's Tiger in talking about current intramural basketball teams, he said, "... I exclude the amorphous Zetas who recruit non-members to play for them." Are the Zetas organized and do they use "members" in intramural competition?

Perhaps the answer to this question lies in the objectives of the organization. Zetas is an organization of men students who participate in social and athletic functions without being members of a fraternity. They have desire for numerous meetings, social functions or fraternal obligations. At present, it is impossible to say whether a person is a member of this group or not. There is no membership list.

Since 60% of the men on campus do not affiliate with Greek organizations, there is a definite need for this type of organization. However, there must be a way to have "amorphous" this can become.

About the only necessary requirements for an excellent intramural league is that the participants be definable. As exemplified by this year's participation, a group may have a winning team. Fraternities, faculty and dorms have presented tough competition in the various sports. When other groups are limited by membership as to who can compete, it is justifiable for one group to have no membership requirements to be able to choose the best participants in each sport from 60% of the men students?

Fraternities are limited by ties and pledges, faculty is limited by age, interest and those sign up to regularly participate each wing in Slocum is limited by the men who live there. It is not too much to ask that the Zetas be limited to those men who have enough interest to sign up at the first of each semester. In no way does this harm intentional informality of the group. It does, however, place similar membership requirements on the group. Since the Zetas have proved that they can field a winning team in any sport they choose to participate in, why don't they help strengthen the intramural program further by obeying a sensible rule of limited membership?

From the Loomis poll, it becomes obvious that even in a college environment basic knowledge is still in many cases lacking. This of course is not unique to colleges. However, a college community is uniquely able to combat this lack if it is willing to draw on its resources of knowledge. Yet, in many cases these resources are not significantly utilized.

Some of the means that are open to Colorado College students to supplement their educational process are an increased Faculty Lecture series, a more complete airing of foreign student opinion, and devoting the Symposium to topical subjects. The proposed Faculty Lecture series, I believe, should deal with questions such as the economic implications of the Common Market or possibly a discussion of the validity of the CC Civil Defense program. In either of these cases, several faculty departments could contribute valuably to the discussion.

The foreign students should be more extensively called upon to speak, for they can give us a comprehensive point of view. Otherwise very difficult to attain by other means. Already the Symposium Committee seems to be heading towards a topical approach, as can be seen in the Symposium article on page 1.

If all these steps are taken, the level of knowledge at CC could be appreciably raised. The responsibility for seeing that these projected programs are implemented devolves on an interested student body. For, if they are interested, then pressure must be exerted on committees that would be involved, which in this case are the Symposium Committee, the Foreign Student Committee, and the Assemblies Committee.

Planning Committee Solicits Ideas For Next Year's Symposium Topic

At a post-mortem session on the 1963 Symposium, which turned out to be at the same time as the first pre-planning session for the 1964 Symposium, it was decided to solicit, as a first step, as many suggestions for a topic for 1964 as possible from the faculty and the students. The second step will then be to give as many people as possible an opportunity to express their preferences on these suggestions. The third step will be to make a decision on a topic.

A fairly widely held feeling on campus is that next year's topic, while it should not be in the field of arts as such, should, however, be of such a nature as to permit the inclusion of discussions and demonstrations of artistic concepts and products (films, music, theatre, etc.).

Among the ideas that have already been suggested, the following may be of interest to students and faculty:

- 1) Take an area of the globe and study it in some depth (for example: Latin America, the Soviet Union, the Far East, etc.)
- 2) The Mass Communications Media in America (press, radio, TV, etc.)
- 3) The American Negro

These would all permit—in fact demand—inclusion of the kind of artistic and cultural products mentioned above.

Undoubtedly, there are many other good ideas floating around the campus. The first task is to gather them up. Would you therefore fill out the form below and return it prior to March 1st to Dr. Sondermann's office in Peabody House? In this way, your own preference and choice will have the same chance as others of being considered.

PROPOSED SYMPOSIUM TOPIC FOR 1964

My suggestion for a Symposium Topic for 1964 is

By Ralph Schmidt

A couple of months ago I attended a meeting sponsored by the Colorado Springs Friends of the United Nations for the foreign students of Colorado College and the American Field Service students at the local high school. I left the Wood Avenue home very disappointed with the glibbed oratory and content of the discussion, but attended that evening. Later I wrote home about the discussion which eased the anxious feeling of "what a way to treat the United Nations, a phenomenon of our times which I believe," and promptly turned to the ultimately more important work which a history term paper involves. With the announcement of an issue about the foreign students at Colorado College that "anxious" feeling has returned and again I need to ally it: I'd like to offer an opinion as to what I think a foreign student program ought to be.

In the first place, what should be expected of a foreign student? It's not easy being a student in a foreign land. I was one last year in Holland, courtesy of the Foreign Student Committee, if you'll excuse the self-reference). But in spite of the difficulties involved all ideal foreign students should be interested in everything they can possibly do to learn well about their host country. This means that outside of a fair amount of time allotted for books (it is a year of foreign study) the ideal foreign student should be in and out of the extra-curricular—joining clubs, writing articles, giving speeches, joining more clubs, taking excursions, reading Lippman, Brinkley, and even local affairs—ad nauseam. More important is just meeting lots of people and making lots of friends. The problem is that you can't be a successful foreign student all by yourself: The college and the individuals which make it up have definite responsibilities to you. The most important of these is interest. If there is little or no interest at a college, there should be no foreign students around to feel the whip of indifference which is wielded by ignorance. Assuming interest, there must be organizational form present in a college's response to a foreign student. As distasteful as it may sound this implies advisers, committees, and officers. The most essential of these are the advisers, for no year in a foreign country can be spent at ease if there isn't someone—an adult—who can always be depended upon to know the answers about visas, employment, lodging, alien registration, etc., and even about personal problems. If he doesn't know the answers himself to these most basic questions, he should be able to find them. After the advisers have been found a committee of the more interested students and professors with intelligent and thinking people leading them, is needed to set policies and to plan the activities of the group.

Enough for the foundations and the framework of the program, it's what fits into these that really counts. To speak of formal activities first, I suppose there's nothing worse than attending a meeting during which nothing of value takes place, and you leave with that having-wasted-time feeling. What, then, can a meeting of a foreign student committee accomplish? In addition to the few sessions which are devoted to selecting future candidates, couldn't each of the foreign students give a well-prepared talk about his country? This sounds horrendously boring, but there are many things which could inform and entertain: "What on Earth Is Nassar Doing?" "What Is Nassar Doing on Earth?" "The Inesistive, Bourgeois American I See Everyday, and How He Compares with the Inesistive, Bourgeois Dutchman"; "What Every Young American Ought to Know"; "The Real Threat in Africa is the Guerilla"; etc. The committee ought to be the central agency in helping college student who are interested in studying abroad to find the right materials and make the right contacts. There are various community organizations which, Lord knows, need help; the committee could augment a program with service clubs to include other organizations who would jump at the chance to hear how Norwegians and Poles have fun, for instance. In addition to the activities of the foreign student committee I can think of no more worthy project for a class than that of raising money for the tuition of a foreign student. The idea of having the right fraternity student in the right fraternity house (or in the right room in the right dorm) is fine and ought to be carried out on a grand scale.

I can say little about informal activities, except that from my conversations with foreign students many of my provincialisms have been punctured. In lots of ways we Americans are the most provincial people on earth (especially those who have "done" Europe). It seems to me that the most important thing we can do is to open our eyes and opinions about the world which we think we lead and indirectly control (we don't). What more pleasant and convenient way to do this than to meet a foreign student and talk about things.

What have I said, I suppose it boils down to the following: A good foreign student program requires some effort and promises some real rewards. You have my opinion. I'd be interested to hear some others.

Sororities Start Debates

In the interest of discussion, competition, and fun, the Delta Gammas have challenged the Theta Lodges to join them in the first of a hoped-for series of inter-sorority debates on topics of current interest. The first "Monday-night fight" will be held at the Theta Lodge Monday evening, February 17, at that time the challenged Thetas, represented by Judy Hooker and Jan Nyquist, will meet the challengers, D. G.'s, to discuss the topic "Integration in Education."

The debate, the brainchild of Linda Rainey and Sue Caudill, is hopefully the beginning of a tournament among the sororities from which a "champion" will emerge. The representatives of the two houses will form a panel which will carry on the main discussion of the topic, while each sorority will participate as a group in a general discussion period of fifteen minutes, following the preliminary presentation and discussion by the panel members. The final discussion period of fifteen minutes will again be led by the members of the panel. Three members of the faculty will be invited to judge the competition on grounds of clarity of expression, relevance to topic, and general participation by the houses as groups. Dean Worner has consented to be one of the judges present at the Theta-D.G. discussion, and a committee has worked out details of judging, as well as an outline of the planned tournament. Sue Caudill is in the process of arranging other debates through the scholarship chairmen of the different sororities.

The discussion, it is hoped, will stimulate interest in a variety of topics, while promoting a friendly spirit of competition and giving the houses an opportunity to know each other better as groups.

PETE WEBSTER rushes down the hill to remind everyone of the Sophomore Carnival being held this weekend.

Greeks Arm with Brooms For Winter Carnival Games

The 1963 Sophomore Winter Carnival activities get under way this Friday with the fraternity and sorority hockey and broomball games at the Broadmoor World Arena.

Schedules of games have been sent to all fraternities and sororities and it is urged that participants familiarize themselves with their schedule. The Winter Carnival Committee has asked that each team be present at least five minutes before their game time. Any team not present five minutes before its game automatically forfeits its event.

At 9:30 p.m., hockey and broomball games will cease for ten minutes in order that the Winter Carnival King and Queen may be crowned.

Voting for King and Queen will be carried out as follows: Each person who wishes to vote will pay 10c for that vote. One vote for King and one vote for Queen will be given to each person. With this method, the King and Queen titles will be honors, not purchased positions; and the Sophomore Class will still obtain the money that they need to support their exchange student, Va Chouramany.

It is the sincere hope of the Sophomore Class that everyone will attend the events planned. We feel confident that a good time awaits both spectators and participants. We'll see you on Friday night at 8:00 p.m.

Winter Concert Series to Begin

The Colorado College Winter Concert Series will present four concerts in this semester, the first of which is scheduled for Sunday, February 17, at 4 p. m. in Perkins Hall.

Kyung Sook Lee, 17-year-old Korean pianist, will be featured in a solo recital. She will play Bach's Chromatic Fantasy and Fugue, Beethoven's Sonata in E major op. 109, Ravel's Sonata, and Chopin's Ballade in F minor.

Miss Lee has been in America only since 1961. She lives in Denver and is a senior at South High, studying piano privately with Max Lanier. She appeared recently as soloist with the Denver symphony. Conductor Saul Caston said, "I have not been so impressed with a young piano talent since I heard Van Cliburn when he was 17."

Kyung Sook plans to attend the Curtis Institute of Music in Philadelphia next year and has already been invited for an audition there in April. Only a month ago she won first place in the statewide competition for a solo appearance with the Golden symphony orchestra on February 24th. After her graduation from South High Kyung Sook will attend the Summer Music School at Colorado College, and plans to return here in future summers between the school sessions at the Curtis Institute.

In Korea, Kyung studied piano with the same teacher as Tong H Han, the most famous of a group of outstanding young piano talents from this remarkably musical country.

March 1 Deadline Set for Study-Aboard Applications

A deadline of March 1 has been set for applications from students interested in participating in the University of Colorado's Junior Year Abroad program in 1963-64.

Applications should be sent to Prof. Harold L. Amoss, director of the Office of International Education, T.B. 1, University of Colorado, Boulder.

Students accepted for the new program will spend the 1963-64 academic year at the University of Bordeaux in France. Expenses for the nine-month program will be about the same as a year of study on the Boulder campus.

Most of the participants will be juniors, but a few seniors may be allowed to enroll, Amoss said. Students in colleges throughout Colorado are eligible.

Participants will be selected by the CU Committee for Study Abroad, headed by Dr. Louis Tenenbaum. At Bordeaux they will live in university dormitories.

The program will be self-sustaining and not involve use of tax funds.

College Impresses Student With Political Indifference

By Thordis Eriksen

One of my first impressions of Colorado College was a seeming indifference to politics. This puzzled me because in Europe the universities have a political atmosphere. I do not mean it is an all-dominant feature of our universities, but there are far more political activities than here. Having become aware of the fact, I started looking around to see if my notions were right or if it was only a too quick judgment on my part.

Have you ever noticed people sitting in the Hub discussing Kennedy's mediocre plan 7—or the American economic aid to neutral countries? I thought that at least the first question would be interesting and controversial enough to stir up some excitement to start a discussion—outside of class. But, no. No American student discusses the subject—and that in an election year! I was really excited about being in the U.S. during an election year. There would be the subject—and that in an election year. There would be the subject—and that in an election year.

Is US Dating System Valid?

By Donna Haraway

Boy meets girl. Sounds common enough, yet there's something in human beings that makes them want to write: Boy meets girl! It happens all over, every year, in any country where Homo Sapiens commonly reside. What then is unique about this phenomenon in the United States? What are the aims, methods, successes and failures of dating here that make the sexes a wonderful reality?

There are probably two main goals in dating, each becoming more or less predominant as the individuals themselves grow and their attitudes mature. First, dating is fun. It's an opportunity to meet people, go places, and just generally have a good time. Most of us don't care if our dates are fantastically intelligent, good looking, and bubbling with the best personality in existence. But we are looking for people who know how to laugh and who know what it means to care about someone and something outside themselves. The second major aim in dating is to find a partner we would be willing to give our entire selves to for life. Marriage is no game, and dating is a serious preparation for a life of giving.

In the U.S. these goals are accomplished by a rather elaborate system. Dating begins early, very often before the individuals are at all ready for the experience. There is a progression through stages of "making-out," eighth grade parties, going steady in high school, getting pinned in college, and finally making the big leap to the altar. All these phases are punctuated by periodic clumps, emotional crises, and general chaos. A system of ethics ranging from sexual morality to who opens which door when, governs the whole process. Single dates, blind dates, beer busts, and heaven only knows what else are all part of the American scene.

Obviously, we achieve a certain amount of success. At least long white dresses, crying babies, and joint income tax returns have been fairly common in the last decade. But let's take a closer look. Does our dating system really help us achieve our ultimate goals? The picture can look pretty sordid. Our divorce rate is a national scandal. Disregard of God's law before marriage causes untold heartache for many. Unwed mothers, venereal disease, broken family life, are becoming more serious problems each year. Does the system make it too easy to commit sin, to become selfish instead of unselfish? These are difficult questions, not to be answered without taking a long look at ourselves and our ideals. Too often the answer is unfavorable.

Enrollment

Colorado College today reported the largest second semester registration in its 89-year history.

Mrs. E. M. Scroggin, registrar, said 1,329 students are registered for the semester which got underway January 21. This was 90 more than were registered for the second term this last year.

Full-time undergraduate enrollment is 1,167. Of these 626 are men and 541 are women. Enrollment by classes for the second term is 379 freshmen, 271 sophomores, 256 juniors, and 270 seniors. In addition, there are 29 graduate students enrolled, 124 special students, and 10 visitors.

The spring term ends with commencement exercises May 27.

KRCC Radio Reports Expansion of Studios

KRCC-FM Radio Colorado College is Colorado's first non-commercial education FM station. From its founding in the Spring of 1951, KRCC has made steady progress in expanding its programming, modern record libraries and broadcasting facilities. The studios have been located in Rastall Center since its completion in 1950. In 1961 an extensive remote studio complex was completed and special events taking place in Perkins Hall, Shove Chapel, WES Room and the Rastall dining room may be heard on any FM set.

Mr. Woodson (Chief) Tye, faculty advisor to KRCC, has informed us that KRCC is planning a new expansion of facilities in the near future. With over twenty students in the Operation and Management classes, Station Manager Mike Irsfeld expects one of the best semesters of programming in the history of KRCC. Working with Irsfeld this semester are Louis Myers, Program Director; Jerry Agnew, Production Director; Gene Zickler, Jim Bolick, Special Events; and Tom Semenson, head record librarian. The Staff of KRCC-FM radio is proud to present some new programs for your listening enjoyment. They are Candle Light House, International Profile, Peace Corps Plus One and Great Decisions. 1963. So why not dial 91.3 mc on your FM set and sit back and enjoy the show.

CC Prof. Studies Jury Trials At Level of Magistrate Court

Colorado College political science Prof. J. Douglas Mertz, who has been studying the effects of jury trials at the magistrate level in Colorado, reports that in Oregon, non-lawyer judges are required to attend judicial conferences at law schools annually.

Professor Mertz, a lawyer himself, has just returned from a half-year sabbatical leave which he spent in law libraries in Oregon.

The Colorado College professor's three-year-long research project grew out of a ruling handed down by the Colorado Supreme Court five years ago in the "City of Canon v. Morris" case which provided for jury trials at the magistrate court level.

"It is interesting to see how the legal profession in Oregon has met the problem of trial by jury at the 'magistrate level,'" Professor Mertz said. "He said all judges not trained in the law must attend the judicial conferences, conducted by law school faculty members. The magistrates participate in seminars on trial procedure and evidence, he said."

While on leave, the Colorado College political scientist developed his "3-R" theory about sabbaticals. They are designed for reading, reflection, and relaxation," he said.

Professor Mertz spent most of the fall semester in the law library at the University of Oregon, reading in such areas as science and law, functions of the courts, current constitutional problems and law and society.

At Colorado College, where he is chairman of the political science department, Professor Mertz teaches an upperclass seminar entitled "Law and Society." Students in the seminar study the place of law in society through discussions of basic Anglo-American legal principles.

Professor Mertz earned his LL.B. degree at Yale University and received his Ph.D. in Pennsylvania and taught it at the Dickinson Law School before joining the faculty at Colorado College in 1948.

Racial Problems in Two Countries Compared by Student from S. Africa

By Solomon Nkwiwe

Several students have asked me to comment on the incidents that took place at the University of Mississippi several months ago. These incidents, as I all know, involved the Negro student, James Meredith.

My answer each time has been short and simple. I was not particularly surprised by the incidents. I was neither really depressed nor elated by them. I am used to this sort of thing in Southern Africa.

There was, however, one thing new to me in the whole affair. This was the attitude of the students of Ole Miss to Meredith—at least, those students whose actions got publicity in the papers. It had rarely occurred to me that even students at university level in the South object to mixing with fellow Negro students.

I must admit that the latter remark reflected (or reflects) my ignorance of the magnitude of the racial problem in the South. It is also a reflection of my pre-conceived ideas about high education in general. For some obscure reasons, I have always entertained a certain faith or confidence in the eventual elimination of racial prejudice through education, particularly in this country.

In Southern Africa (the Republic of South Africa, Portuguese Angola, Mozambique, and Southern Rhodesia in descending order of magnitude—there is at present an acute white-black racial problem, which in many circumstances, is comparable to the racial problem here in the South). But again, there are several aspects in which the two situations differ. In Southern Africa, the population of 14 million (11 million Africans, three million whites), definite ideas of white human beings exist. This is particularly prevalent among the minority ruling Afrikaans (South African Dutch). I suppose the free world doesn't really mind what individuals or a people choose to believe in, as long as those beliefs are not pursued at the expense of the rights and liberties of other men. However, it is not uncommon to hear the Afrikaans justify their beliefs by referring to the Bible.

In an sense, even in Southern Africa where segregation (Apartheid) is the official policy of the government, students at university level have always identified themselves with the students of other racial groups. The best examples were provided by the passing of the Bantu Education Act (1948). This act had as its main provision that all education would be completely segregated. This meant that the African students who were in any of the nine universities had to quit. There was so much objection by the students (white students) that some universities had to be closed down, at least temporarily.

Southern Rhodesia is much the same as South Africa, except for one or two minor facts. First, because Southern Rhodesia is still a colony of Her Majesty's Government, segregation there is not called apartheid. In the last 10 years, I have assumed several names among which "partnership" became the most popular.

Also, in conformity with the dignity and spirit of the Commonwealth of Nations, Southern Rhodesia's constitution excluded phrases that would be construed by the outside world as being unjust to the Africans.

In short, while proclaiming officially the principles of human rights, in practice Southern Rhodesia has proved in reality to be only paying lip service to the ideas.

It is no wonder then that white South Africa (both black and white) have been very keen to know the state of affairs in U.S. Clearly the resistance to change the status quo are perhaps more economic and political than psychological. I do not see a patient student who will economic and political considerations to be the main reasons for racial segregation in the South. No, there could only be psychological or emotional reasons.

The press in Southern Africa which is still controlled by the white like to retain the "Colony privilege" status, usually much coverage of race riots in South. It would appear that the reason for this is an effort on the part of the whites there to smirch America's image. Fortunately most Africans are not fooled by that. Certainly, Africans do not condone the attitude of white Americans in the South. But rather they won't allow that to be used as a legitimate reason for perpetuating injustice in South Africa.

The solution of the racial problem in the South is therefore, supreme interest to Africans. It may be necessary for me to also state that the more humanely problem is solved the better it is. From the evidence of the "Ole Miss" students to desegregation in the South cannot conceivably debase the economic and political status of the whites. It seems to me the resistance to segregation should not be as tense.

My comment, then, on the overall situation in the South is as long as the South continues to be part of the United States, as long as the United States remains a democracy as it is, the racial problem in the South will be solved eventually on side of right. Africans believe, this Africans also respect and admire Americans, the English and other Western nations their scientific progress and their tremendous contribution to this dynamic civilization. But also believe, very sincerely, that it was a continuation of historical and environmental circumstances, and behind it was meanness that did it. But we do not believe that the color of the skin or some comforting religion should be made to stand the way of racial cooperation for justice for all. It is a lucky circumstance that no many Africans have read Darwinian beliefs because before long we may have the reverse situation of stupid Africans going around trying to prove that the black man's skin is an index of superiority.

37 Students Admitted to CC Under Early Decision Program

Thirty-seven high school students, including nine from Colorado, have been admitted to Colorado College as freshmen for the 1963-64 academic year under the "early decision" plan. Admission Director Richard E. Wood said the number of high school students entering CC under this plan has nearly doubled in the past year. He said the plan is becoming increasingly popular among superior high school students.

The "early decision" plan makes it possible for the advanced student to be admitted to the college after he has completed his junior year in high school," Wood noted. "He must, of course, complete his senior year satisfactorily, and must submit satisfactory scores from the College Entrance Examination Board Scholastic Aptitude Test," Wood added.

Each candidate for the plan is required to prepare a written statement explaining his reasons for wanting to attend a liberal arts college, and for wanting to attend Colorado College in particular. The application must be accompanied by an affirmation that the candidate intends to apply for admission to no other college, and a non-refundable tuition deposit of $100.

Colorado high school students already accepted at Colorado College under the plan include: Judith Adams of Wheat Ridge; Kathryn A. Bricker of Denver; Pamela A. Carpenter of Golden; Dorothy Ruth Davies of Denver; Dorothy A. Foss of Golden; Dorene E. Heverlein of Boulder; Ann VanDeruer of Denver; Robert Miller Knight of Denver; Kristen L. McKenne of Boulder; Thomas Purdy of Denver; and Joel Fedder Schmidt of Denver.

Five are from Texas. They are: Patricia C. Coughlen of Fort Worth; Georgia A. Graham of Corpus Christi; Carol Anne Hale of Houston; Christen Randerson of Houston; and Jo Carol Rowley of Dallas.

From Missouri are: Richard N. Coil of St. Louis; John J. Neukomm of St. Louis; Marianne E. Nick of Florissant; Susan Van Ronzelen of Chesterfield; and Lesley D. Webb of Springfield.

Others include: John Bursall of Mount Herman, Massachusetts; Dorothy B. Bailey of Richmond, Virginia; Gayle A. Hieck of Cincinnati, Ohio; Janet Holaday of Jamestown, North Dakota; Daniel B. Holmes of Weston, Massachusetts; Claudia A. Hunter of Ventura, California; Victor Jacobson of Albuquerque, New Mexico; Susan Mary Ludwig of Grinnell, Iowa; Thomas H. Lyon of Edina, Minnesota; James W. Mayer of Andover, Massachusetts; Lucy F. Monroe of Winnetka, Illinois; Tessa K. Palmer of Burke, Virginia; Nancy L. Pickering of Belleville, Illinois; Sharon L. Robinson of Casper, Wyoming; Nancy L. Robson of Akron, Ohio; Diana Knight Sarnorn of Potter Place, New Hampshire; John Chadron Schiffer of Cayce, Wyo.; Linda Sue Seger of Peshtigo, Wisconsin; Barry Louis Trevey of Portland, Oregon.

Mrs. Teason Retires After 9 Years Service

Mrs. Margaret Teason, secretary of the music department, is retiring as of today after holding the position for nine years. She is known to most students as "Mom Teason," and will long be remembered for the unusual kindness and warmth which everybody felt who was in contact with her. The music students had a coffee hour for her on Wednesday afternoon, and the music faculty honored her at a party on Thursday.

Before becoming secretary of the music department, Mrs. Teason was active in different secretarial positions at Colorado College for many years.

But there is another close connection between her and the college. She is the mother of three alumni: Hugh, a major in business and banking, who graduated in 1942; Ruth, a Spanish major and Phi Beta Kappa member, who graduated in 1943; and Don, who majored in geology, graduating in 1951.

Segregation and World Opinion

By Dee Wilson

Doubtless it is true that the United States does not win friends and influence people in the underdeveloped countries of Africa and Asia through such incidents as Little Rock or Mississippi; however, I protest against the idea that this is the main reason we must hasten the decline of segregation. World opinion is simply not a sufficient reason for undertaking domestic reform. The question that should be asked is

"Does not segregation violate the ideal of equal rights and equal opportunity?" Not "How does segregation look to the Africans?"

Secondly, I think what both Africans and Asians generally do is to take an incident, such as Mississippi, representative of race relations in this country. What is an African to believe if the only time he reads or hears of race relations in the United States is in connection with Mississippi or a Little Rock? I do not think this accidental. Many African or Asian leaders of opinion make sure that this is all their audience hears. To put it bluntly, many Africans think badly of the United States not so much because of race relations in this country, but for various other reasons.

It is easy to concentrate on the bad, the sensational, and to ignore progress and attempts at progress in Africa. If I wish to believe this is not an African people is capable of self-government, and I pick my facts carefully, undoubtedly Senator Allender and I could be fine friends. But it is not fair to pick the worst about someone or something and call this average. An African, seeing only the bad, and, because of his bias, refusing to look further, is no more praiseworthy than the American who looks at Africa in the preceding way.

It is undoubtedly true that Africans and Asians have reason for looking and wishing to look at Western nations like France and England through biased eyes; there is reason to be bitter. It is true to say that there are Frenchmen for Englishmen to hate, Frenchmen, for Frenchmen to hate Germans, for Frenchmen to hate Japanese. But this writer would say that there is an ample supply of hate and bias in the world, without adding to it. I wish to hope both Africans and Americans could look at each other with minimum bias and maximum honesty; too often it is the opposite.

By Gerhard Jansen-Venneboer

I am aware of the fact that the subject I chose for this article is very dangerous for my own personal social life here on campus. However, I hope that everybody, and especially every girl, who reads this article will not consider it as an attack on their social life, but only as a summing-up of the characteristics of dating for a foreigner here in the United States. Nowhere will I call it "ridiculous" or "bad"; I only consider it as different and I surely don't disagree with your way of dating.

There are quite a few differences. A weekend is approaching and it is a poor guy who doesn't have a date for the weekend yet. His friends and "brothers" wonder why he doesn't have a date yet and tell him a hundred times to get one. And this is already one of the first differences—almost everybody needs a date for the weekend. Girls panic if they don't have a date, boys call for hours and hours to get a date, for they need a date. Honestly, I personally love to have a date, but I don't feel every weekend the necessity to have one, especially if I cannot get the girl I want. Obviously, the Americans do really feel this necessity. And this necessity of having a date means that the girls don't choose or select the boy with whom they would like to have a date anymore. They want a date and are waiting for that telephone call during the whole week. You don't want to admit this, but honestly, isn't it the truth?

The fact that the girls seem less selective in their choice of guys may be caused by the completely different circumstances. In Holland we don't have the campus system. Every student lives in his own apartment in the town where the university is located. A campus system brings all the students much closer to each other and everyone considers other students on the same campus as friends. The whole attitude towards each other is more informal than it is in Holland. A date in Holland (I don't dare say Europe) is much more serious than it is here.

Blind dates are hardly possible in Holland, but here it is no problem. Recently, one of my friends arranged a date half-an-hour before a rather formal party for a friend of his from Oklahoma, who was visiting him. The girl didn't have the slightest idea what the guy looked like, but she accepted, obviously because she wanted a date. This is really typical for the dating procedure: the date is important and not the guy. I am really curious whether the girl

Political Interests on Campus Channeled into Organizations

By Bill Hunter

Politics at CC seems to be confined largely to the classroom and the bull-session. There are, however, several organizations on campus to which political interest can be directed.

The past year has seen the addition of a new group, the Center for Practical Politics. The Center was organized to take the place of the Imperative Citizenship Club. The group of students who organized the Center had certain objectives in mind. The immediate goal was to provide a place for students to have meetings, work on various projects, store materials, discuss, etc. More generally, the Center would encourage politically interested students to pursue that interest. Hopefully the Center could eventually develop an academic relationship through which students could work on political projects both independently and for classes. The Center for Practical Politics has been only partially successful. Some of its goals have been achieved, others have not. Yet it is a student organization which could potentially provide an agency for independent, student-led study in the area of politics and government. Such independent but original study, if once tried, might prove worthwhile.

Both the Young Democrats and the Young Republicans have organizations on campus. These groups have been particularly active in general election campaigns, working to elect their party's candidates. Young Republicans and Young Democrats from CC have done precinct door-to-door campaigning, worked in their respective county headquarters, and on election day served as poll watchers and baby sitters.

The idea persists that actual experience, at whatever level, is the way to really learn politics. Both partisan groups are actively connected with statewide Republican and Democratic college organizations.

There is some activity outside these organizations which is significant. The Commitment group, from time to time, stirs some political interest and controversy. In the past, students have traveled to Denver and Cheyenne to participate in legislative seminars of a regional organization. There are, most importantly, the courses and studies offered as a regular part of the academic curriculum.

The character of the CC student body is such that the political interest that exists is likely to be expressed in an orthodox manner, i.e. Young Democrats and Young Republicans. CC students have a fairly homogeneous background and, in general, seem to be moderately conservative. Fervent political feeling on college campuses is generally associated with extreme right-wing or left-wing groups. At larger schools, where the student body is not as homogeneous, the active rightist and leftist groups find recruits. Yet most students prefer to take their politics in small doses and tend to be politically moderate.

No one is coerced or expected to join any group, political or otherwise. Presumably, the college student is free to independently select the activities of particular interest. Because of this independent selection, the activities and organizations on campus reflect the desires and interests of CC students. Political activity at CC is the result of the mild interest of some students and more intense interest of a few. Politics (outside of campus politics) plays a small role in the lives of most students. Yet if any student is interested in politics, there are some organizations and classes available for that interest.

O Come All Ye Critics

Wouldn't you like to be on Kinkinnik Road? Sure you would! Face it, that's just what you've wanted to do all your life. Now is your golden opportunity for success, happiness, joy, a feeling of accomplishment, and all kinds of other wonderfuls.

Students from all parts of the campus (including even Slocum Hall, Shove Chapel, and Bemis Attic) can have this great chance. But hurry and apply now—there are only a few positions left and they're selling like hotcakes. The line will form starting at Rastall desk and continuing into the lounge and music listening room if it is too long to be contained in the hallway. Apply next week or you may miss out—so hurry.

CC Receives Grants from National Science Foundation for Summer Study

Colorado College has received grants from the National Science Foundation totaling $148,375 for the support of three summer science institutes. These institutes, which get under way in June, are tuition-free to 102 high school science teachers and 28 high school students of outstanding ability. In charge of the institutes will be Dr. Richard B. Beidleman, associate professor of zoology and director of the NSF programs at the independent college of arts and sciences here.

Included are the Summer Science Institute for 70 high school science teachers, the Summer Institute in Field Biology at Aspen for 32 high school biology teachers, and the General Science Institute for 28 high school juniors. The high school students will work and study with the high school science teachers. The institute will be in session for eight weeks each. The institute at Aspen gets under way June 10. The other two will start June 17 and will be held on the Colorado College campus.

Programs in biology, chemistry, general science with an emphasis on geology, mathematics and physics will be offered this summer in the institute for high school science teachers. Dr. Beidleman

Antlers Hotel Hosts Winter Carnival Dance

The Winter Carnival Dance will be held in the General Palmer Ballroom of the Antlers Hotel Saturday Night, February 16th. Since this dance will follow the North Dakota vs CC hockey game, the time of the dance is 10:30 p.m. to 1:30 a.m. The girls will have 2 o'clock hours Saturday night. Tickets can be obtained at the Athletic Office and at Rastall Center for two dollars a couple. The dress for the dance will be wool dress and heels for the girls and coats and ties for the boys. B. J. Young and his "Hilltoppers" from Denver will play for the dance.

stated that: "The basic intent of the course will be to encourage teachers to incorporate field biology into their own teaching and to give them the background, enthusiasm, and direction to do so." He said that teachers participating in this institute will be trained in the methods of field biology. However, he made it clear that technique is not an end in itself.

The Colorado College summer institute for 28 high school science and mathematics majors will be operated in close conjunction with the Summer Science Institute for high school science teachers. "It is designed to provide selected high school students an advanced orientation in the broad area of science and give them specialized academic training in the particular scientific field of their interest," Professor Beidleman said. "In addition," he said, "the program will provide them, in some cases, with an opportunity to carry out supervised research in their field of interest, introduce them to geology, and bring them into contact with scientists and science teachers associated with our regular summer science institute.

Al Church, past president of the house, announced his engagement to Jan Afton. Our pledge dance last Friday was a great success, as was our picnic Saturday afternoon with the S.A.E.'s from Boulder. Monday night we played the freshman hockey team at the Broadmoor rink. The unofficial score was 52 to 32 Fiji's favor, but the official score told a different story. With the coming of Winter Carnival all the Phi house is working feverishly to see that Don "King" Sprinkle is made king for a day.

Thursday noon the whole chapter had lunch at the house. Then the pledges were given their mothers in a surprise ceremony. Sunday afternoon everyone helped "Mom" Ritter celebrate her birthday with refreshments and many birthday greetings. The Phi Gams provided rides for us out to the hockey game on Wednesday night.

Delta Gamma
The Delta Gammas at Colorado College have been working very closely with the Colorado School for the Deaf and Blind in conjunction with the National Delta Gamma project. Sight conservation and aid to the blind comprises the largest part of the Delta Gamma Foundation which includes Inter-

Members of the CC chapter Delta Gamma have given some of their time to assist the students at the Colorado School for the Deaf and Blind. Two members have also been aiding aid to a fellow student this campus.

On Sunday the 17th, the Phi house will hold a Valentine party, blind students from the Colorado School for the Deaf and Blind. The Gamma Chapter has officially challenged the Theta house to a formal discussion to be held Friday 25th. The topic will be "Integration in Education." The Sunley and Sally Lents have been selected to represent Delta Gamma in this first debate.

The newly-elected pledge officers are: Carol Roark, president; Stephanie Frost, vice president; J. Pannellian, representative; Leslie Eckert, secretary; Conrad, treasurer; Malissa B. Thompson, standards chair; Jenny Tammany, social chair; Gerry Clark, chaplain; and V. Sells, historian.

Congratulations to all the officers—also to their entire class which has the highest average grade-point average for the other pledge classes on campus.

By now you are furious (I am) and are defending yourself. It is understandable. This is an act of criticism. You are saying that I have never been a political science class before then I would know that you what is going on, and also you discuss current events vehemently. But that is the point. Why is the discussion and the interest confined to only? Could the reason be there you would probably credit for it?

All College Conference Held In Two Weeks at Star Ranch

By Dave Hite

In two weeks a large number of students will attend what has become a traditional event at Colorado College — the All College Conference. What are the goals and functions of such a weekend and why should all students find something of value in the conference?

All College Conference is unique in that it is not a leadership conference but open to all students. For the concern of the Conference is with problems upon which most students have an opinion.

The purpose of the All College Conference is to stimulate a free-wheeling discussion, in depth, on topics of general interest. With a large number of students participating, and many opinions expressed, there can be a thorough discussion of the issues. By holding the Conference off campus each year it is believed that the casual atmosphere will be conducive to a more objective and meaningful exchange of ideas. The discussion topics have always been flexible with the general outline only serving as a guideline to discussion. Each year, students have been encouraged to spend the entire weekend at the retreat not only for the value of the informal discussions in scheduled sessions and over meals but for the enjoyment and fun that the weekend always brings. The final purpose of the All College Conference is to make, if possible, specific suggestions for improvement or change in the various areas of discussion to the College Administration.

This year's Conference will concern itself with a variety of topics. An analysis will be made of the first semester — was it rushed, what happened to a lot of the scheduled extracurricular activities, and what might we look for in the future? How does college education foster a lack of concern for others and how can this be seen at Colorado College? Why does the college student "rebel" against religious institutions? What is the role of Student Judicial Organizations at Colorado College? The form of the discussions will be informal; a small panel of students, faculty, and, in some cases, administration, will make statements to channel the beginning of the discussion, after which the discussion will be open to the group.

The idea of a casual, relaxed atmosphere away from the college campus was carried out in the selection of Star Ranch as the Conference site, Star Ranch, a short twenty minute drive from CC has a prevailing rustic atmosphere. There are facilities for indoor and outdoor sports, a number of trails for walking, and separate buildings for discussions, meals, and overnight accommodations. Of special interest to those staying overnight is a full program of entertainment for Saturday evening.

It is hoped that students will be able to attend a majority, if not all, of the discussions. A fee of $5.00 will be charged those able to attend only the discussion sessions.

All in all, All College Conference, if the past record holds true, will be a rewarding weekend. With a large number of students in attendance, the discussions can become both more representative of student opinion and meaningful to those participating.

THE DEVIL (Nicholas Piediscali) and Peter Webster, also Joyce Manning and Mr. Pierre de Lattre, discuss existentialism in Loomis lobby.

'Beyond Existentialism'

Pierre De Lattre, a guest of the Religious Affairs Committee for the week of February 10-15, delivered Tuesday an animated lecture on individual man's responsibility to himself for a richer existence. The main points of his lecture involved the significance of decision, "the very otherness of a person" and the lost faith and mystery in religion and love.

Fotheringill Duo Crowned National Pairs Champions

Judianne and Jerry Fotheringill swept to the National Pairs' Championship in Long Beach, Calif., in what Broadmoor skating coach Carlo Fassi termed a "flawless program." The Colorado College pair squeezed out Vivian and Ronald Joseph of Highland Park, Ill., as they won the right to represent the United States in the North American Ice Skating Championships at Vancouver, B.C., and in the World Championships February 27-March 3, in Cortina, Italy.

The other CC students entered in the meet did not fare as well as the Tacoma, Washington pair. Defending Senior Men's Champion Monty Hoyt dropped to third after falling twice during the free skating portion of the event, and freshman David Edwards dropped to sixth in the Senior Men's event from a third place in 1962.

Tommy Litz, of Hershey, Pa., overcame Hoyt's slim lead in the compulsory school figures with a fine display of free skating ability, but the freshman CC student managed to hold on to third and the right to compete in Cortina. Even though the U.S. team is ordinarily permitted only two entries in each event, the World Federation has permitted the Americans to enter three in order to rebuild the skating strength destroyed by a 1961 plane crash in which the entire U.S. skating team was lost.

The Fotheringills' victory over runners-up Vivian and Ron Joseph was the culmination of a long and strenuous effort for both pairs. Each was fighting to take the place vacated when last year's Senior Pairs team was split by the professional ice shows. The CC pair was considered more polished than the Josephs, who practice at DU Arena, but the Highland Park pair were potential upset winners.

In overall meet standings, the Broadmoor Skating Club wound up in third place.

Fac-Staff Squad Limbers Up on Ice

The faculty-staff hockey team has been putting in some mid-night sessions in an attempt to shake the old limbs loose and prepare for the contest against the fraternity winners tonight (Fri., Feb. 16th). Jack Howard of the Business Office is carrying the coaching responsibilities and with this team-that's some responsibility.

Early scouting notes show some exceptional talent among Professor John Lewis, Coaches Frasca, Flood, and Carle and Alumni man Lance Herrick. Freshman Coach Norm Laurence is coming out of the net to start at a winger spot and Father Jepson will join Robert (Hot Potato) Torrens for some mid-ice tactics. Professors Giese and Emerson are rounding out the roster with the "scientific approach." Professors LeLong and Berkove look like a hot combination and they should see a lot of action (from the bench). Steve Spoonamore from the Physical Plant department has added spark to the practice sessions and Don Oden wonders if double runners will be all right.

Cagers Caged In Three More RMC Matches

The Tiger basketball team dropped three more contests last week to run their season record to no wins and 16 losses. The CC five lost to the Colorado School of Mines and suffered two defeats at the hands of the conference leader, Western State, 63-42 on Friday and 64-52 on Saturday. Colorado College is now 0-9 in Rocky Mountain Conference play. The Bengals had a cold night on Friday as they connected for only 15 field goals and were down at the half 33-17. Gregg Smith had game scoring honors with 15 points while Phil Hart sank eight.

CC and Western State battled on even terms in the first half of Saturday's game with the Tigers down only 27-25 at the half. The Mountaineers jumped ahead at the 12:40 mark to outdistance Colorado College by 12 points. The home town crew couldn't find the range as they hooped 19 of 48 while WSC chalked up 26 of 48. Gregg Smith again led CC and Susemihl added 12.

Saturday, February 16 the Tigers journey to the Air Force Academy and on February 18 and 19 the Bengals host Western State College.

Captain Don Stouffer Leads Icers to Victory

Captain Don Stouffer is, in the words of Coach Tony Frasca, "one of the finest captains ever chosen by the CC hockey squad." Although Stouffer has not been a spectacular performer, he has played consistently good and clean hockey throughout the season.

In Saturday night's 6-5 CC win over the University of Denver, however, Stouffer was nothing but spectacular. Grabbing the puck from a DU defenseman near the blue line, Stouffer bounced it in with seconds remaining in the game to give Colorado College its first win over arch-rival Denver in 24 tries.

Stouffer, a senior from Lethbridge, Alberta, will graduate this spring with a major in history. He plans to enter a business profession upon graduation. After one year at Brigham Young University, Stouffer played Canadian Junior-A hockey for a year, when he was brought to Colorado College on an El Pomar scholarship.

During his three years on the varsity squad, Stouffer has crucial factor in holding the Tigers. The games remaining to the Tigers, Stouffer believes, would probably be the toughest so far. Faced with a two-game series on the road against Michigan Tech, the CC squad will have to sweep the Nodak series to come out with no worse than a split with Tech to remain in contention for the WCHA playoffs.

Expressing confidence for the team in the upcoming challenge, Stouffer could not hide a hint of pride in the squad's accomplishments so far this season, and could only agree that Coach Tony Frasca has succeeded in molding the team into a smoothly-running unit of which the entire college can well be proud. Captain Stouffer's play is indicative of the teamwork and balance which has powered the Tigers' their most successful seasons.

CC CAPTAIN DON STOFFER

brought a consistent and cooperative brand of play to the Tigers. He has easily the coolest head on the team, often breaking up a fight on the ice before it can flare into a major penalty.

Looking at Saturday night's game and at prospects for the rest of the season, Stouffer saw the victory over DU as a team win and CC's fore-checking as the

CC INTRAMURALS

4th North Meets 1st South In Intramural Cage Finals

First South and 4th North emerged as finalists in the Men's Residence Hall Intramural basketball league last Saturday. The Socratic 7 and 1st South went down to defeat in the semifinal tilts.

The first match, which saw a once more severely undermanned Socratic 7 and 3rd South went South, was a see-saw battle, 1st South led throughout the first period, but a 3rd South drive early in the second period narrowed the margin considerably. The third period was 3rd South's up to the final seconds, as they gained a three point lead and held it until, with little more than a minute remaining to play, 1st South pulled up to 30-29. Heiner put 3rd South further out in front again 32-29, but Trough countered quickly to make it 32-31. There were only seconds remaining when Tatter got set to shoot a 1-and-1 foul shot that would have put the game far out of reach. But the 3rd South shot bounced off the rim, and Adecock dunked the crucial goal for 1st South to win it, 33-32.

The No. 2 semi-finals game, though it looked suspiciously like an upset at the start, turned out less of a thriller than the south wing match. The Socratic 7 were only six on the bench, and toward the end of the game looked like a few less than five on the floor, as 4th North broke away in the last two periods to take it, 50-34.

The faculty team gained, however, the distinction of being the first to hold a lead over 4th North anytime during a game, and for a while it appeared that the north wing's juggernaut might be faltering rather severely. The Socratic 7 jumped to a 10-4 lead midway through the first period, and for a time the underdog-loving crowd jamming the wings was decidedly pro-4th North. The tide of the game soon shifted, however, as 4th North pulled up to 10-9 at the end of the period and, tightening both their passing and shooting, went ahead in the second, never to be seriously challenged for the remainder of the tilt. Flood and Carle powered the faculty with 14 and 12 points respectively, and Franke paced the temporarily worried 4th Northerns with 16.

Because of Winter Carnival, there will be no intramural games tomorrow. Play resumes February 23 with the championship match between 4th North and 1st South, after which the league will move through another complete round of basketball competition. When both rounds have been completed, possibly by mid-June, winners of each will meet in a sort of grand championship to determine men's residence hall supremacy.

Zetas Lead Frat Play

Fraternity intramural basketball reached the half-way point last week, with the Zetas remaining the only undefeated team.

Current overall intramural point standings:

Kappa Sigma	18
Sigma Chi	11
Beta Theta Pis	4½
Phi Delta Theta	3½
Phi Gamma Delta	1

Basketball scores to date:
Sigma Chi 38, Phi Delta Theta 26
Phi Gamma Delta 42, Phi Delta Theta 31

Zeta 35, Kappa Sigma 34
Phi Gamma Delta 44, Beta Theta Pi 31

Zeta 35, Beta Theta Pi 25
Kappa Sigma 33, Sigma Chi 29
Kappa Sigma 65, Phi Delta Theta 21

Zeta 45, Phi Gamma Delta 42, OT
Bowling intramurals will be held this Sunday, Feb. 17, in the Games Area.

Beta Theta Pi

The Betas opened this year's basketball season with a game against the Zetas. It appeared to be an evenly matched contest until the Zetas pulled away in the final 31½ minutes of play. The following week it was the same story with the Phi Gams. This time, however, the Betas hung on for an even 31 minutes. In spite of these two losses, the Betas anticipate a winning season, especially with the athletic "find" they have made in Mighty Might Beal Bentley.

On the hockey front, the Betas have been zealous in preparing for tonight's feature clash with the Phi Dets. Watch for a marked improvement over last year's squad: There are five Betas that can stand on skates. If they don't cheat, the Betas should win.

KILBREATH SHARES PUCK with reluctant friend in Saturday night's game.

Clutch Shot by Stouffer Defeats Pioneers Sat. 6-5

By Charles Gibson and Charles Hample

CC ended a 23-game losing streak to arch-rivals DU over the weekend. The second game, must victory was led by Don Stouffer and Jeff Sauer. The win gives the Pioneers a psychological lift for the important series this week with North Dakota.

In the first game the home ice was too great for the Tigers to overcome. The first period was an exhibition in defensive play. The few times that the defenses were unable to break up the attack, Doyle and Unis made excellent saves. Art Berglund scored the one CC goal with only seconds remaining in the period.

The Tigers put constant pressure on the DU defense in the second period, but were unable to score because of the tremendous play of goalie Rudy Unis. The Pioneers scored twice on screen shots and then coasted to a 6-1 victory.

The next night the play-off-minded Tigers dealt DU a serious blow in their bid for the conference championship. The first period saw DU jump into a 2-1 lead on goals by Hamill and Lacombe. The only CC goal of the period was by Jeff Sauer, who scored on a breakaway. The Tigers were placed further behind early in the second period when the Pioneer's Dowhan scored at 2:20. CC continued to put great pressure on the DU defense. As a result Ken Cairns and Jeff Sauer each scored a goal to tie the game at 3-3. Later in the period Dowhan again scored for DU and the Tigers went into the third period trailing 4-3.

Don Stouffer got the first of his two crucial goals of the third period with little less than three minutes gone to tie the score at 4-4. At 6:25 Johnny Simus skated in unassisted from the blue line to score, putting the Tigers ahead for the first time in the game. However, midway through the third period DU's Fragomini scored to tie the game 5-5. For the next 10 minutes CC applied pressure on DU, but was unable to score until Don Stouffer stole the puck from Dowhan and tallied with 20 seconds remaining in the game.

CC must win Saturday's game to stay in contention. North Dakota can expect nothing but trouble on their western trip as CC has gained the confidence of an experienced and mature team. Players to watch on the Nodak team are winger Al McClean and goalie Joe Lech.

Winter Carnival A Big Success

The success of this year's Winter Carnival was most gratifying to all those who had been working on it since last summer. We had been crossing our fingers and wearing good luck charms to try to influence the weatherman to give us some snow and he came through. All the events were well attended and very deserving of this attendance.

Things started with a bang Friday night and with the broomball and hockey tournaments. A strong Zeta team downed the Phi Delta Puckers for the championship. The Zetas were then defeated by a surprising faculty team led by Tony Frasca. The broomball championship game was really tense as the DGs defeated the defending champion Theta ladies by a very close 2 to 1 score.

The ski meet on Saturday was won by the Kappa Sigs. The course was a little rough and many skiers had difficulty with Pete Webster having the most trouble. Colorado College ski team completely overwhelmed Adams State in their first home appearance.

Saturday night after a thrilling hockey game the Winter Carnival dance was held at the Antlers Hotel. Reigned over by Queen Sue Thompson and King Don Peterson the dance went off very well and was a perfect climax to a great weekend.

With the success of this year's Winter Carnival the event promises to continue to grow and become the biggest of all school events at Colorado College.

SUE THOMPSON OF KAPPA ALPHA THETA and Don Peterson of Sigma Chi, Queen and King of the 1963 Winter Carnival.

All College Conference Nears

Amidst the various intrigues connected with the recently defeated and much discussed "Code," many questions have been raised concerning the areas of responsibility and the policies of the Judicial Bodies on this campus. Aimed at promoting a better understanding of these bodies, answering some of the charges leveled at them, and encouraging student suggestions for the coordination and organization of them, "Judicial Bodies" will be presented as the final topic of the All College Conference. The discussion, to be led by a panel consisting of Susan Caudill as moderator, Terry Penville, Dean Lloyd Warner, Dave Hite, Karen McIlvaine, and Irv Hinds, will be held at 2 p. m., Sunday, March 3.

After an introduction by Miss Caudill, presenting the aims of the discussion, the panel will discuss the jurisdiction of organizations (who decides which body will handle a particular case and case procedure), the purpose of these organizations (is it to give students experience in passing judgement on others, or what?), and finally the relationship of the College Administration and the Judicial Bodies (what power is granted by the Administration to the Judicial Bodies, and the limits of the grant of power).

The question, how are CC's standards of conduct evolved, will then be presented for audience and panel discussion. Possible subtopics to be considered in conjunction with this are: There is a feeling on the part of segments of the student body that the bodies are no more than rubber stamps that are tactfully ignored if possible—i.e. drinking, are these societies' standards which CC is simply re-applying to its students; is there a double standard existing within society and college?

The panel will also pose the question to the audience of how can we create effective judicial organization? Do we want a set of "Bace Bibles" of policies and rules for judicial bodies? Should there be more communication among these organizations and between these organizations and the student body? Can the latter be affected through Student Policy Committee coordination, TIGER articles and the Student Handbook, or how?

CC invites and encourages all those interested in listening and/or talking to attend this and the other topics, being presented at the 1963 All College Conference. Registration will continue through Thursday, February 28.

Counselorships Available For Graduate Students

Colorado College students planning to go to graduate school should be aware that they may be able to pay their own way by serving as residence hall counselors or house-fellows.

Resident counselorships or assistantships, under which graduate students live in university housing and advise undergraduates, generally provide between $400 and $2000 for a school year. Most, though not all, of these appointments are open only to unmarried students.

Counselships fall into two types: those available to students in any graduate field, and those intended only for students taking graduate work in Counseling, Student Personnel, etc.

Universities announcing graduate counselorships include the following: University of Utah, Salt Lake City; University of Maryland, College Park, Maryland; University of Miami, Coral Gables, Florida; Ohio University, Athens, Ohio; St. Louis University, Universities of Alabama and South Carolina; Harpur College, Binghamton, N. Y. These positions are open to students in all academic subjects.

Resident and assistantships for women only are available at Mills College, Oakland, California; Con-

Phi Beta Kappa Initiates; Power Speaks on History

A hundred and ten attended Phi Beta Kappa's annual dinner and initiation, this year held on Thursday, February 14, at the Cheyenne Mountain Country Club. Dr. Thomas Ross, President of the Colorado College chapter conducted the initiation of eighteen new members assisted by Dr. Lewis Knapp and Miss Lorena Berger, who gave the initiates their Phi Beta Kappa keys and certificates of membership after which the initiates signed the chapter roll in a book in which, since 1904, other members have left their signatures.

Professor Amanda M. Ellis, assisted by Professor Kenneth Curran and Dr. and Mrs. Richard Bradley, was in charge of the dinner arrangements, invitations, and publicity. Following dinner, Max Power, student government president, last year elected as junior member of Phi Beta Kappa and recently chosen Rhodes scholar, spoke.

"Phi Beta Kappa," he said "is rich in history. Founded in 1776 at William and Mary College in Virginia, a few short months after the Republic, it has members who always have been in the vanguard of our society. The society was carried to New England by Eliza Farnelle, with charters granted to Harvard on December 4, 1779 and to Yale on December 3, 1779. On January 6, 1781, when the British threatened Williamsburg, the Phi Beta Kappa papers were placed in hiding, not again to be found until 1849.

"In 1875, when two women were eligible for admission at the University of Vermont, they were the first women admitted to membership. In 1889 Vassar became the first school for women to have a Phi Beta Kappa chapter of its own. In 1904, chapters were chartered at the University of Colorado and Colorado College. Today there are chapters in 182 colleges and universities."

Since its earliest days, Max Power stated, Phi Beta Kappa has accepted into membership men and women who have become foremost in their fields. "In letters, there have been Washington Irving, William Cullen Bryant, Mark Twain, Longfellow, Lowell, and Emerson; in public life, John Q. Adams, Martin Van Buren, Grover Cleveland, Theodore Roosevelt, Woodrow Wilson, Calvin Coolidge, Franklin D. Roosevelt, and four other presidents. In science, Phi Beta Kappa has had scientists like Samuel B. Morse and Eli Whitney, in business, Mark Hopkins, John D. Rockefeller Jr., and Arthur Vanderbilt.

"And today," Max Power continued, it is no different. We find in politics, for example, Attorney General Robert Kennedy, Justices White, Stewart, and Douglas, and eleven U.S. senators from divergent areas with varied beliefs. In letters, we find William Faulkner, Robert Frost, and don't forget our own Miss Amanda M. Ellis College and university presidents, such as Courtney Smith, Swarthmore, Dr. Robert Stearns, University of Colorado, and our own Louis T. Benezet are included. Among the Nobel scientists are Ernest Larson, who invented the cyclotron, Willard P. Libby in chemistry; Robert Millikan in physics; and Alexis Carrel in medicine.

"As scholars of recognized ability," Max Power added, "we must all pay heed, I think, to the words of Emerson said when he addressed a group such as this in 1837, 'In the right state, the scholar is Man Thinking. In the degenerate state, he tends to become a mere thinker, or worse still, the parrot of other men's thinking. Books are the best of things well used; abused, among the worst. What is the right use? They are for nothing but to inspire.' "But more than that," the speaker concluded, "it is hoped that this honor and all the academic endeavor which it signifies, will serve as an inspiration to you, to create, to pioneer, to build, to lead."

Sondermann Sends Summer Catalogue

Some 13,000 copies of the 1963 Colorado College summer session catalogue will be distributed this week to students in all 50 states. Fred A. Sondermann, director of the summer session, announced publication of the attractive 28-page book which list more than 130 courses in 23 academic departments. A line drawing of historic Cutler Hall against a lime-green background enlivens the front cover. The back cover contains a campus map.

"This is the most complete catalogue in Colorado College summer session history," said Dr. Sondermann. "A new feature this year is that we have included detailed biographical sketches of visiting faculty members. We are proud of the number of distinguished visitors who will join our summer faculty, and we are giving prospective students an opportunity to see the quality of our program," he said.

The catalogues are being mailed to Colorado Springs area high school graduates for 1962 and 1963 who are enrolled in colleges and universities as well as to all 1963 graduates, as a service to those Pikes Peak region students wishing to advance their academic careers during the summer months.

Dr. Sondermann said the catalogue will be available to anyone who desires to receive one. Inquiries should be addressed to him at the Colorado College summer session office.

THINK, THEN ACT

The recent distribution of the Colorado College Summer Catalogue has brought forth a host of protests by students due to the printing of the almost unanimously defeated student standard. The brochure, although stating the code to be only a draft by CC students, clearly implied favorable student support of the standard. Student discontent is warranted over this printing of the code, yet many of their outcries are not. Certainly the administration was at fault in this case but more for inadvertent reasons than the accused, premeditated labels that are circulating throughout the campus.

As stated in Dr. Sondermann's adjacent article, the catalogue was formulated in December long before anyone had anticipated the controversial nature of the proposed precept. A suggested standard was needed, as elaborated by Dr. Sondermann, and consequently, the Student Policy Committee's draft was used. This is not to excuse the use of the code—the administration clearly made a mistake. Nevertheless, talk of conspiracy and fraud on the part of the administration is completely unfounded and unwarranted.

It seems that the prolonged dispute over the social standard has impaired the student-administration relationship. Impatient, spontaneous reactions by both sides are illustrative of this fact. With a campus as small as CC's, personal relationships as close and informal as they are, it is unfortunate that inquiry and understanding only emerge after the damage has been done. Both the administration and students will profit in the future if they think before they act. —HDS

NEW GREEK FRONTIER

Congratulations are to be extended to the Delta Gamma and Kappa Alpha Theta sororities for the initiation of what hopefully will become weekly debating matches between the various sororities. On Monday night these two rivals square off at the Tiger lodge on the topical "Integration in Education" question.

Perhaps there is no better way for the Greeks to lose their often applied "social" label than a commencement of such activities. This editorial urges the Greeks to go beyond this step for there are numerous contributions they can make in addition to their philanthropic and social activities which would enhance the development of CC, such as the inauguration of a Greek sponsored lecture series and the building of individual libraries on particular disciplines.

Such new innovations can only add to the purpose and magnitude of these organizations. —HDS

From the Chair

By MAX POWER—President ASCC

The ASCC Executive Council voted unanimously Monday to affiliate with the newly-formed Colorado Collegiate Association. The cost will be 10 dollars in dues, and the benefits may indeed be great for many of our students.

Among the activities which the association has undertaken are arranging for a charter flight to Europe next summer, cutting the cost of the flight by half for Colorado students; arranging for charter flights from Denver to key airports in the nation at vacation time, again saving students who participate a good share of their airline fare; and the cooperative booking of top-name talent.

Moreover, the CCA is presently moving toward student talent and faculty lecture exchanges, both of which may well enrich our slate of campus activities.

Finally, the exchange of information and ideas, including the exchange of various campus publications, should mutually benefit all members of the CCA.

The CCA is new, and some questions about its functioning remain to be answered. Yet I am willing to assert that our choice to join—a choice made only after much study and after Commissioners Pat Chapman and Dave Holdorf attended a CCA conference—will prove to be a wise one.

LETTERS to the EDITORS

Dear Editors:

This week the distribution of 18,000 copies of the CC summer session catalogue began. The catalogue contains, as a part of a statement of expected conduct, the text of the recently defeated Proposed Standard, along with the affirmation that this was "drafted by Colorado College students."

Although the word "drafted" is technically quite correct, it is also quite clear that the uninformed reader will certainly take the Standard to be representative of the beliefs of CC students. In other words, despite the technicality, the statement in the catalogue amount to having CC students put their signature to a standard which they have defeated.

I will not say that this was the conscious intent of those persons who included the Standard. There are several facts which make this "mistake" understandable. No one anticipated the defeat of the Standard and the type for the catalogue was set up some time ago. However, these factors cannot be taken as excuses; for, whatever the intentions may have been, the net results look in fact like the most cynical kind of attitude toward the CC student body and its supposedly independent organizations. It is the exact antithesis of President Beneze's recent statement: "We need to grow past the parent-child relationship in college."

Indeed we do, and if the relationship of the student body to the administration at this college is not to approach complete disintegration, action must be taken. The fact of what has been done over-rides all the possible intentions. The student body does not control the summer session, but it can demand that its name not be used in causes which it has already rejected. If such an honest demand cannot be met, then we have reached the sorry point where there is very little point left in talking or pretending. A mimeographed statement to the following effect must be inserted in the catalogues: "This Standard was drafted by CC students and rejected by them. Its inclusion in this catalogue represents the views of those persons who inserted it and not those of the CC student body." If for technical reasons this should be impossible, then a very minimum public apology to the students from those responsible is due.

—Bradley J. Snyder

Dear TIGER:

Something must be done, and done fast. I would suggest the installation in prominent places of very loud-speakers broadcasting pertinent facts, and/or short summaries of crisis every quarter-hour. These facts if announced in a ratio progressing from one at the quarter hour to four on the hour would serve a three-fold purpose:

1. To keep the student body continually aware of their ignorance; that is on their toes.

2. To maintain a student body that will always be cognizant of hour of the day, and thereby reminded of the rapid passage of time.

3. To render the student body a perpetual receptor of knowledge. If this plan is accepted with the broadcasts being made between the hours 8 a. m. and 5 p. m. over a four year period the senior class will have had the chance to hear 8,640 facts or anecdotes which I think is sufficient.

It is evident that Sue Caudill and Leigh Reiney are the students best qualified to get a little committee underway.

This cancer of ignorance can only spread 'till the entire campus is a wild fire of pulp and no fiber. I implore each and every student to put his or her best shoulder behind this program.

Deplorably

Jay Hemingway

I regret very much that some students are unhappy about the fact that the Summer Session catalog contains a statement on expected conduct of Summer School students which is very similar to the statement recently rejected by ASCC. I trust, however, that the following very simple explanation of why and how that statement came to be included in the catalog will be satisfactory to those who object to its inclusion:

1. The Summer Session differs in some significant ways from the regular school year. The first of these differences is that there is no student government in operation during the summer. Thus problems which can during the rest of the year be dealt with by various student bodies have to be handled administratively during the Summer Session.

2. A second difference between the Summer Session and the remainder of the year lies in the composition of the student body. Only a minority of Summer Session students are also regular students at Colorado College. (During the two summers, the figure has been in the vicinity of 150 regular CC students out of a total enrollment of approximately 700. We hope to raise this proportion, but are realistic enough to know that our own students will not in the foreseeable future constitute the majority of Summer Session enrollment.) This means that we have a large majority of students who come here from other schools and from other occupations during the regular year; who know very little about the customs and traditions of Colorado College; who have no orientation periods such as that offered to Freshman and Transfer students during the regular year; and who are not here enough to absorb the general standards which are expected and observed at CC during the regular year. Their acquaintance with the College is through the Summer Session catalog, and in some cases such hall regulations as may be given to them when they arrive. I should add that Summer School students are a far more varied group than our students during the regular academic year. They range from the School Seniors to adult graduate students; from the vanguard in fields which are emphasized during the summer to students in other academic departments.

I don't mean to imply that problems of conduct are as serious in the summer than at other times, but simply that different methods are appropriate to acquaint students with CC's expectations and, if necessary, to assure that these expectations are fulfilled.

3. The Summer Session catalog went to press in early December. For the foregoing reasons, it seemed advisable to me to include in it a statement of expected conduct for Summer School students. Rather than try to draft such a statement on my own, I took the then current draft of a statement drawn up by some of our own CC students, became convinced that it covered the situation for the Summer Session. This seemed like a good idea at a time before the statement became controversial and long before it was turned down. I felt I could use the statement as guidance to Summer Session students, and as guidance to myself and my colleagues in administering the affairs of the Summer Session. I would not out that the catalog does not say that the statement was adopted by Colorado College students or that it is in force during the regular academic year.

4. The use of the statement for the Summer Session catalog implies no judgment by me whether I felt, or whether the statement in question is also appropriate to the situation during the regular year. I have not been involved in discussion concerning this question and thus could not form an opinion. The regular academic year is a period when regular students and their duly constituted organizations, administrative officers other than I have the responsibility and the competence to make appropriate decisions.

I trust that the foregoing explains why and how the statement came to be included in the catalog. I would have been glad to explain this in persons to the students who have recently become upset about seeing it there, but so far no one has questioned me personally. Therefore I appreciate the courtesy of the TIGER in letting me make this explanation through its columns. Since the draft statement in question was not adopted by the Student Council, I think it will be best in future years for me to formulate another statement to cover this issue for the Summer Session. I must, however, reserve the right to frame such a statement and implement it during the summer. I shall be happy to have the benefit of students' views on the subject, but in this instance there is no student government during the summer months. I can obviously not share the responsibility for administering the affairs of the Summer Session to the best of my ability.

While we are talking about the Summer Session catalog which this week is being sent to all CC students, may I press the hope that students will look carefully at the curriculum and interesting curriculum and the fine extracurricular characterizing our Summer Session. I hope that many students will avail themselves of the opportunity for enhancing their studies which are offered by the Summer Session.

No Racial Problems in West Africa, But . . .

I come from an "underdeveloped" nation, Nigeria to be exact. For those who probably do not know where this country is (recent Loomis poll is eye-opening), it is at the southwest corner of the western bulge of Africa. It is a typical country in West Africa, where, thanks to tropical heat, the blazing sun of Africa, and abundant mosquitos in the earlier days of colonization, there is no question of white minorities ending it over the owners of the land. Rather, the situation is that the relatively few white people are not subjected to any ill-treatment because of the pigment of their skin. But why do West Africans feel concerned about racial discrimination in the U.S. or in other lands, for that matter? The reasons are many. West Africa, emerging from decades of tropical isolation, has been plunged into a world situation in which she must to participate willy-nilly.

No one asks the U.S. to stop racial prejudice solely because of world opinion. Rather, Africa and Asia expect the U.S. to demonstrate her belief in the fundamental human rights so nicely enshrined in your Constitution. Dee Wilson, in the last issue of the Tiger, thought that Africans and Asians generalize on the race situation in this country only as isolated but unfortunate headlines, incidents, and even surmises of the U.S. for reasons other than discrimination. This, at best, is unfair, but maybe he has his reasons. For one thing Africans are jealous of such a magnificently affluent society. The Americans have been able, at the cost of hard work, sacrifice, and patriotic tenacity of purpose, so grandly to build. And, as one of the holier Americans, he suggests that "expert" opinions like that of Senator Ellender should not be the basis for judging Africans. However, the point is that the racial prejudice in the United States (or in any other place) is not a function of any ideas that Africans or Asians hold, just as the competence of African leaders is quite independent of the tantrums of politicians or experts. The Africans realize it is that undeniable fact that the Western world too often does not live by the principles of justice and fair play which it so ably enunciates and professes. But any interest in or concern for the race relations in the U.S. is an attempt at a naive hopefulness that peradventure the road to justice would be made straight. Misdiagnosis or not, the presence of segregation is undeniable. Some African diplomats have had unpleasant adventures, and it is not anybody's fault that such incidents bedevil much of the honest and constructive steps toward racial understanding. It just happens that "the evils that men do live after them," while "the good is often interred with their bones."

But we know in West Africa that we cannot bomb or blast our way to greatness. It is our will to demonstrate that the picture of African "savages" which characterizes the mental view of some people in this country is nonexistent. There are fears that independent African states would be hostile to white people. These have been proved to be empty shadows in the heads of false prophets. In Ghana, for example, it is estimated that twice as many white people as left in the pre-independence years entered after independence. Contrary to the opinions voiced on house-tops by "experts" on the competence of contemporary African leaders. And in West Africa, there is racial harmony, and a traditional welcome is accorded all foreigners.

Due to the fact that our contacts have been mainly with the Western world, we are more oriented in that direction. We have been told often and again that education is one of the solutions to our problems, and we just have a lofty view of how much education must have done for affluent America. And with this view those who have an opportunity to come to we are impressed with your material development. But then it is tragic and disconcerting to us to find that our hero has such a flaw as racial disharmony which we think should have been easily dismissed by education. And though we hear the South much more publicized, we see the more sinister forms of prejudice in the "holier" areas. So, it is not news headlines alone on which we base our concern for the race situations here or in other places; nor does our concern arise from a feeling of inferiority or superiority. We just find ourselves trying to evolve a system of government which is based on African traditions but which utilizes the best elements from the over-developed countries; but we are reluctant to weave into the fabrics of our system any idea of a race being superior to the other. We do not just want to judge the United States, but because of our admiration of your democratic institution, we expect active adherence to your democratic ideals, especially in the field of race relations. Maybe we are wrong to feel this way, but honestly, that is how we feel.

Meeting on Assemblies Set For This Afternoon

In the last two issues of the Tiger the problem of attendance at assemblies has come up in connection with discussions of campus awareness, the intellectual curiosity of the student, and the expectation of attendance numbers in view of the variety of events offered each week for the edification and/or entertainment of CC students and faculty.

At the beginning of this school year, the Assemblies Committee was faced with a number of criticisms, left over from the work of the preceding years' committee. And in one sense the programs thus planned have been a test of the assembly set-up. The problems of the past were seen as: 1) inadequate publicity; 2) programs which apparently did not interest people; and 3) an almost empty building at most assemblies. With these criticisms in mind, the committee started planning with the immediate goal "to fill Perkins," and a larger budget than in the past to help with programs and publicity. The publicity for nearly all of the year's programs has been ample and the subject matter certainly varied, yet only a few of the assemblies have been very well attended at all, as a recent TIGER cartoon made clear.

Last week Dr. Shaw asked, in effect, whether the goal "fill Perkins" was a valid one. Perhaps too much is offered for the student to take in, and he must be selective in the events which he chooses to attend. Perhaps we need to either plan our programs for small groups rather than crowds, or have fewer, and hopefully better and more interesting, programs to attract the larger number which at present are evidently expected to attend assemblies and lectures.

The assemblies have, in the past, been closely coordinated with IREC, Religious Affairs Committee, and Rastall Coffee Hour programs. The suggestion of a central committee to coordinate functions of all of these groups as well as the faculty and public lectures has been made. The advantages of this

American Teachers Needed for East African Positions

Teachers College, Columbia University is currently recruiting 100 Americans for secondary school teaching positions in Kenya, Uganda, Tanganyika, and Zanzibar.

The Teachers for East Africa program, which is sponsored by the U.S. Department of State's Agency for International Development, has now widely acclaim from educators and government officials. Dr. C. W. McKewet, chairman of the African Liaison Committee of the American Council on Education has called this program the "starting point of the growing success of American education in Africa."

Teachers have been requested in the fields of physics, chemistry, biology, mathematics, English, history and geography. Arts and science graduates and graduating seniors with no teaching experience, professionally trained and certified graduates with no teaching experience, and experienced teachers are eligible to apply for the program. Accepted candidates for the program will receive training fellowship at Teachers College and/or Makerere College, Kampala, Uganda. Upon completion of training, the teachers will receive two-year appointments as salaried education officers in East Africa.

Although preference in selection will be given to applicants who are single, married persons may apply for the program, and if accepted, will receive travel allowance for bona fide dependents.

Applications are available from the Teachers for East Africa Project, Teachers College, Columbia University, New York 7, N.Y.

would include fewer and better speakers, effectively employed for not only one lecture, but also for an assembly and coffee hours as well, thus extending the opportunities for the campus to become informed on matters of interest, without exposing them to a huge variety and forcing selectivity. This coordinating committee, as is yet, only a suggestion. The Assemblies Committee is considering this and its own purpose and function quite seriously at this time, but in order to do this the viewpoints of students and faculty before the committee itself are needed. Thus, the committee is planning a meeting Friday, February 22, from 3:00 to 5:00 p. m. at the Delta Gamma house, 1102 Wood Ave., to deliberate the problems and try to arrive at a solution. The Assemblies Committee is one of the areas of campus life in which students do have the power to make decisions, yet perhaps its time, as well as that of the students, might best be spent on fewer events, possibly scheduled at an hour other than 11:00 a. m. on Tuesdays. Obviously the assemblies are either not wanted, or are wanted in a different way than previously. Perhaps they should be pure entertainment, like the "Freedom Songs of the South" and Karl Wolfram programs of last semester, both well-attended; but the assembly "Beyond Existentialism" with Mr. Pierre de Latre was also well-attended and its appeal was of an altogether different kind.

Foreign Students Are Sometimes Neglected

By Terry Winograd

In this era of constant world tensions, we are constantly reminded of the important role played by the so-called "small nations." This realization has produced a wave of professed concern over our failure to project a favorable image of our nation. This concern must, however, become more personal and active than a righteous indignation over the actions of those in foreign lands. Here at Colorado College we are stamping an impression of ourselves and our way of life on all who come here. Is this impression as favorable as we would like to believe?

A student who finds himself in a strange country with little knowledge of its ways is bewildered and uncertain. Unless someone takes an interest in helping him to adjust, he can easily remain this way. This is the logical responsibility of the group which arranges for him to attend a college—in our case the Foreign Student Committee.

When asked to state their impressions of this group and its accomplishments, the foreign students almost unanimously felt that it is well-intentioned but ineffective. It seems to limit its efforts to making arrangements for students to come to Colorado College. This is a great task and the committee deserves much credit for its completion, but the responsibility cannot end there. After arriving, registering, and moving into a room, a student needs more than hearty greetings and well-wishes. Barriers of custom and of language make it difficult to meet people and become interested in activities and we seem to be lacking in constructive efforts to make it any easier. Even when a foreign student is invited to a function at which he can meet people, he often finds himself left alone not knowing what to do and with nobody interested enough to help him.

This apparent disinterest seems to pervade the entire stay of a foreign student at CC, and is evidenced in many ways. They are an invaluable source of information for many groups of varied interests, but rarely are they given an opportunity to express themselves to students who could profit from such an experience. At times, even their personal interests are ignored, as shown by the failure to make provisions for their residence during Christmas vacation.

The reasons for this scarcity of action by the Foreign Student Committee are many. Meetings are few, and even so most of the time is spent on problems of organization and finance. Many of the foreign students feel they do not play a real part in the committee. Efforts should be made to give them an opportunity to express their opinions on what changes should be taken place. The entire operation of the committee is largely unknown to most of the students at CC. A more active communication should be established to create a general interest, which would be reflected in increased activity of the group.

We must remember, however, that the impression carried away by a visiting student is not that of a committee, but of every individual with whom he comes in contact. One extremely widespread attitude is that of indifference—not only on a general level, but including those living in the same house or on the same wing. Few efforts are made to help foreign students understand our country, or even our college. Some efforts are being made to solve these problems, but it cannot be done without the support of all students. This doesn't mean that everyone should immediately rush up to the nearest foreign student and shake his hand—this is not the type of interest needed. The only value is in a sincere desire to help others and an effort to better understand them. We must make definite plans to improve the situation in the future not only through the Foreign Student Committee, but through the efforts of all individuals and other groups on the campus.

The foreign students here today are the leaders of their nations in the future. The impressions which they receive during this era of their lives will determine their later attitudes. We at Colorado College have not proven adequate to have a beneficial influence on those attitudes, and it is important that we take steps to correct this.

Netherlands Exchange Program

By Gerhard Jansen-Venueboer

On March 9th the Colorado College student will be selected who will take part in the Exchange program with The Netherlands. The student will be offered a scholarship for tuition, room, board, books and excursions for one year. This will be the eighth time the Exchange takes place.

Being an alumnus of The Netherlands College for Representation Abroad ("Nijenrode"), I will write something about the characteristics of this College and about the kind of students (only men) who study there. The technical details for application you will find elsewhere in this Tiger. The requirements for application are:

One needs to be a junior next fall, a minimum scholastic average of 2.00, preferably majoring in Business or Economics.

Nijenrode is a very young college, founded in 1946 by a number of prominent Dutch industrialists. The college is located 10 miles south of Amsterdam. It is unique and well-known in The Netherlands and in Europe because of its revolutionary educational program in which extra-curricular activities play a very important role. Its educational purpose is to educate young people for industry and commerce, especially abroad, and its courses are built on secure foundations and designed according to the strictly practical requirements of business and industrial life.

For American students Nijenrode offers a very special program completely adapted to the difficulties (especially language) of the Americans. There will hardly be any language problems, moreover, in November already you will be able to follow most of the classes in Dutch because of a special course in Dutch which will enable you to control the Dutch language within a short time.

Modern Dorn

Approximately 250 students attend Nijenrode and this is its full capacity. All students are urged to live on campus. The CC student will get his room in the most modern dormitory next year and he will share his sitting room with five more students and his bedroom with two more students. All classes are given in a castle, Nijenrode Castle, parts of which date back to 1270. The various subjects taught are closely coordinated. The focal point of study is the structure, organization and procedure of the typical business enterprise, which is examined in all its aspects except those of a purely technical nature. To this end, the program of study includes the following subjects: Economics, Business Science, Statistics, the study of the relationship between Government and Industry, Law, Psychology, Modern Languages, etc.

The student fraternity, known as the Nieuwe Compagnie van Verre, plays a very important role in the educational program by means of all extra-curricular activities. The American students are expected to contribute very much in these activities.

There will be a lot of time for traveling around during your stay on Nijenrode. Most of the weekends you will be invited by fellow students to accompany them when they go home. (In Holland most students, except for the Americans, have to go to factories and offices, where by courtesy of the management, they gather material for reports and dissertations; the American students are able to travel around to see more of Europe then.)

Unique Experience

I consider this exchange program a unique opportunity for people who want to broaden their horizon and who want to meet new people and to see how people in a foreign country live and work. I believe that study, though very important, is not the most important part of an exchange program. The CC student will be able to live close to 250 students, learn to know how people in Holland live, dress, work and think. I think it will be a great experience and I can guarantee to the CC student who will be selected, that he will have one of the greatest and most interesting years in his life.

For more details about the Netherlands College for Representation Abroad and about the Exchange program, contact me and I will be eager to answer all your questions.

Conductors Course

Netherlands Radio Union is holding its annual conductors course, June 12 to July 18 at Hilversum, with deadline for applications set for March 15, 1963. Entrance examinations will be held June 10. Enrollment is limited to 10 working students not over 35 years of age, who must participate in all lessons; five guest students who are required to take an active part in class work at least once a week, and auditors (no age limit) who are expected to attend all conducting classes.

The American, Dean Dixon, and the Hollander, Willem Hijstek, will head the faculty. Applications and further information may be obtained from the Netherlands Information Service, International Building, San Francisco, or by writing to Netherlands Radio Union Foundation, Music Division, Post Office Box 150, Hilversum, The Netherlands.

International Music Week
The 15th International Music Week of the Foundation Gaudemus will be held at Bilthoven, Holland, September 9 to 14. Young composers and other musicians from all over the world will gather to hear and discuss music selected in competition for choir, chamber music, orchestral and electronic works. A competition for a music-dramatic work for television will be an added feature.

"Aria de Capo" Both Amusing and Terrifying

"Aria da Capo" by Edna St. Vincent Millay is part of the program for the All-College Conference. It will be presented on Saturday night, March 2, at 8:00 p.m. at the Star Ranch. Directing the play is James Fox. Robert Fernie is in charge of special sound effects. Bruce Buck and Malcolm Richards are in charge of program design.

The one-act verse play is about a comedy lampooning a mock tragedy. It is terrifying because it is rigged—i.e. the entire mechanism of the play fits within the "play-within-the-play" framework and actors and audience alike are aware of the grotesque, peeling harlequin on the stage.

The set is simple. A living room and a table, four stools, a phonograph, and a few bits of crepe paper form the props. Columbine (Hadley Taylor) and Pierrot (Norman Colbert), perhaps the "heroine" and "hero" of the comedy that reflects on the tragedy, enter, are seated, and spill their vacuous lives on each other, their ambitions, their frail contributions. ("I'm hot as a spoon in a teacup," Columbine complains to Pierrot.) Corthurnus (Myles Hopper) then enters, the mad referee, drives the other two off the stage and claps the tragedy into being. Thyrsis (Douglas Cowles) and Corydon (Michael Von Helms), two shepherds, are summoned prematurely from their dressing room and begin, innocently enough, their tragic-travesty sequence. The play ends after a few psychotic twistings and turnings by these two and the visions of the exquisitely brutal Columbine (who perhaps is the satire most successfully carried in the play), all coached by the mad Corthurnus. ("Strike the scene! . . . Play the farce. The audience will forget!")

It is, in the end, an amusing play and a forcefully terrifying one. It is short (perhaps 20 minutes) and it is fast. There are no breaks in the action onstage. Aria da Capo is a dreamland of swift madness and is worth seeing, for this, entertainment's sake, alone.

Sophomore Class Meets

The Sophomore class will hold a meeting on Tuesday, February 26, at 11 a.m. in Shove Lecture Room. At this meeting a complete follow-up will be given of Winter Carnival, and future plans for this semester will be discussed. Come! We need you!

ACLU Defends Radicals

Why does the American Civil Liberties Union defend extreme radicals? The program last Tuesday in Perkins Hall was an effort to answer this question as well as to better define the goals of the ACLU. Representing the ACLU were Mr. Ray Davidson and the Rev. Dr. C. Franklin.

The main contention of the speakers was, "In order that America be kept free for Americans, the radicals of the land must be offered the same protection under law as everyone else."

If one exception is made in civil liberties for a single party, the trend may have a more inclusive effect, and soon the limiting of freedoms may even extend to the Republican party.

The freedom of speech and of the press are very important for the preservation of the American way of life. The ACLU thinks the American public is intelligent enough to judge the truth when it is presented to them.

Due process of law must be carried out in all cases. The taking of short cuts in legal procedure endangers the whole foundation of American judicial structure.

The ACLU tries to inform the public of exactly what their rights are when arrested. In Colorado the ACLU finds that full rights are not always granted to minority groups. They try to protect these groups from unnecessary hardship under the law.

Besides trying to maintain civil liberties on the local level, the ACLU lobbies for laws that will reinforce the American tradition and insure equality for all. Although the organization is only 60,000 strong, it has been commended by the last three presidents of the U.S. for outstanding service to the country.

DG's and Thetas To Hold Debate

"Integration in Education" will be the topic under discussion when the Delta Gammas meet with the Thetas this Monday night. The debate, in which two members from each house will compose teams, will deal with the general question of: 1) an evaluation of progress with regard to integration in the area of secondary education; 2) what the position of the Negro is as defined by law (related to education); and 3) contributions to American culture. After the panel discussion questions from the floor will be considered by the opposing teams, and the discussion finally summarized by the moderator, Susan Caudill. The judges for the event will be Dean Worner, Reverend Burton, and Miss Cauvel. Both houses are searching avidly for information regarding the topic to be discussed, and a stimulating evening is being planned.

Boderman to Speak At Unitarian Church

The Adult Discussion Group of All Souls Unitarian Church, will have as their guest, Prof. Alvin Boderman, sociology department, Colorado College, on Sunday, February 24, at 9:45 a.m. The topic for discussion will be "The Organization Man: Well Rounded or Just Adjusted?" bureaucrats, executives, conformity, suburbia and the systems that claim the waking hours of an increasing number of the labor force.

NOTICE

All older students interested in forming a discussion group this semester are urged to leave a note in the Tiger box at Rastall Center expressing their interest. It is important that the reply be within the next week so that plans can be made.

ASCC Notes

Mr. Chapman announced that the Enthusiasm Committee would meet following ASCC to discuss plans for a formal recognition of the hockey and basketball teams at the Playboy Party, Friday evening, February 22.

Dave Hite made a request to the Finance Committee for $100 to be used for cutting the expenses of the All-College Conference, to be held March 2 and 3. A motion was made and approved that $100 be taken from the Picnic fund and be allotted to the All-College Conference to reduce the over-all fee from $5.50 to $4.50 and to assure the attendance of all the foreign students on campus.

Miss Benham reminded the council that applications are out for the positions of Nugget editor and business manager, and for Student Handbook editor. The applications, which can be picked up at Rastall Center desk, are due March 1.

Miss Thompson was pleased to report the "well above average" attendance at Mr. Pierre de Lotbiniere's lecture on "Beyond Existentialism." Friday afternoon, February 22, from 3 to 5, an open meeting of the Assemblies Committee will be held at the Delta Gamma house. All interested students are urged to attend and to discuss the value of the assemblies, and the role they play in the college cultural events.

Within the next two weeks

Assemblies Committee Meeting

Friday, Feb. 22 from 3:00 to 5:00 the Assemblies Committee will meet at the Delta Gamma house to consider the assemblies program for next year. All who are interested are welcome to attend and any suggestions will be greatly appreciated.

ASCC committees are to submit proposed recommendations to the Constitution Committee.

Rastall Center Board will sponsor a Playboy Party in Taylor dining hall, February 22. The Playboy theme will be carried out with the presence of real live bunnies and a night club atmosphere.

Next Tuesday, February 26, is the day for class meetings. The senior class will meet in Olin lecture room. The location of the junior class meeting is undecided, but Mr. DeGeorge stressed that there will be one. Sophomores will meet in Shove Chapel. The freshman class will meet in Perkins to discuss the Slave Day to be held March 15, and the class project.

Starting on the 25th day of February, the standing committees of ASCC will present a 15 minute program on KRCC outlining the functioning and purposes of the committees. This program will be every Monday afternoon at 5:15. The following schedule has been set up:

Our dinner with the Phi Delt Sunday night was wonderful. The food was good and the company even better.

The IGs have challenged us to a debate Monday night on the subject of "Education and Integration." Rather a broad topic, yet there will be many learned minds competing and judging the comments thrown out. Both houses will be present to comment and question, and various faculty and administrative members have been invited to listen and judge.

Last Monday night we had a double serenade with the Sigma Chi. The honored couples were Ray Wilbur and Maxine Gaddis, and Doug Shaw and Martha Stevenson. After the traditional exchange of songs, two beautiful cakes were cut and served with coffee.

Congratulations to Sue Thompson, our Winter Carnival Queen!

Kappa Kappa Gamma

The Kappas will hold a dinner Monday, February 25, and will hold a informal dance with the Delta Gammas on March 1.

Beta Theta Pi

In an attempt to cement positive relations with the Kappa Sigs, the Betas and dates joined forces with the Kappa Sigs and their dates for a Saturday afternoon session of fun and frolic. It was the loveliest February 15 picnic anybody could remember in a long time.

An emergency last minute cancellation and remaking of plans took place Friday night as the hockey victory celebration was deemed a "bit out of place" in view of the outcome. Instead of the planned banquet honoring players and coaches, everybody went home and studied.

Vast and elaborate plans are already in the making for this year's Miami Triad. The things are shaping up so far, party in early March ought to be truly a run of DeMille production.

Phi Gamma Delta

There is little to report at the Phi house this week. We have two new initiates, Don Brown and Gerald Jansen-Venneberg. Also have a new pledge, Bob Kent. In last week's Winter Carnival, Kent Drummond and Rolf H. placed second and third respectively in the ski races. We are looking forward to the coming spring and the activities that will bring with it.

Sigma Chi

On Monday night the Sigma Chi serenaded Ray Wilbur, Maxine Gaddis, and Doug Shaw and Martha Stevenson at the Theta house. The new pledge president is Sherman Maize, who led the pledges in celebrating "Bill Hybl Week" and in holding a shower party for the active Monday morning. Bengals Sweep W - State

Colorado College swept a two-game series from league-leading Western State College last Monday and Tuesday nights, breaking a 21-game losing streak stretching over two years. In the Monday night game, CC trailed 55-47 going into the last minutes of the game, then put on a fantastic rally, capped by Phil Hart's go-ahead basket with seconds to play.

The shooting of Bob Baker gave the Black and Gold an early lead until the Mountaineers knotted the game 11-11 at the 14-minute mark. Western State, with the shooting of Dave Adams and Richard Wilson, steadily marched ahead to a 28-20 intermission margin.

The fired-up Tigers came clawing back at the start of the second half behind the hustle of guard Bill Pelz and the rebounding of Bob Heny. The Mountaineers increased their advantage to 14 points before the Tigers made their spirited comeback. The local cagers climbed to within 4, 55-51, with 4:35 to play. Hart dropped two free throws, followed by Smith's two free throws, to set the stage for the winning marker by freshman Phil Hart.

Accurate foul-line shooting by CC was the deciding factor as they sank 13 of 18 attempts. Western State outshot Colorado College 24 to 22 in baskets, but could sink only 7 of 12 free throws.

Gregg Smith and Phil Hart each tallied 15 points in the Tigers' winning efforts.

The next night the Bengals again proved their worth, as they edged the Mountaineers 61-60. After gaining a slim 28-27 lead at halftime, the second half saw the lead pass back and forth between the two schools. Western State twice held what seemed to be insurmountable margins, but each time the Tigers fought back within reach of the cocky Mountaineers.

With less than a minute remaining, Gregg Smith's arching 35-foot jump shot put CC in front 61-60. As the crowd roared, Western State muffed two chances to go ahead in the final seconds, and CC had humbled the conference leaders for the second time in a row, raising the question of who really belonged in the cellar after all.

In other action last week, the Tigers gained valuable experience by meeting tough Creighton University and the Air Force Academy. Although they lost the contests by 81-43 and 65-41 margins, the team toughened up to score the two impressive league upsets.

Successful 4th North Meets Strong, Determined 1st South

Two extremely high-caliber basketball squads meet head-on tomorrow in a tilt that should prove well worth any spectator's while. The first round of Men's Residence Hall competition moves into its championship phase as 4th North runs into a determined 1st South five which could easily prove genuine challengers to the north wing's supremacy.

The game brings together two teams with markedly contrasting styles of play, two teams which have each achieved a high degree of proficiency in carrying out their own version of a winning strategy.

Throughout the season 4th North has depended on a tight defense and unbeatable rebounding to force their opponents to shoot control off the board's somewhat more difficult. Despite the closeness of 1st South's semifinal win, it would be foolhardy to hazard a prediction of the outcome of the conference contest, and we will only point out again that it should be a game well worth attending. Jump time is 1:00 p.m.

from as far out as possible and to assure that they are allowed only one attempt when they do shoot, before 4th North is back in control. Once on the offense, the north wing again depends heavily on rebound control to compensate for its chronic shooting weakness. It is not uncommon to watch 4th North take 5 or 6 shots at the rim before one finally wobbles in. In last week's semifinal game against the Socratic 7 it looked for a time as though this shooting weakness combined with an inability to hold on to their own passes could mean defeat for 4th North, but the faculty failed to take advantage of the north wing's luckily only temporary lapse.

If there is a team decidedly qualified to exploit the shortcomings and nullify the strong points of 4th North, it is 1st South. 4th North's tight defense could easily prove ineffective against the long-range shooting of Karl Halbach, and freshman Steve Prough should at least make the north wing's

FRAT INTRAMURALS

This week's fraternity intramural action saw the current basketball tournament thrown into a first place tie among the Zetas, Phi Gams, and Sigma Chi. This was due to the Sigma Chi's defeat of the Zetas, 41-39. In other games, the scores were as follows:

Beta 45, Phi Delt 26
Sigma Chi 34, Beta 20
Phi Gam 38, Kappa Sig 34
The intramural bowling tournament was held Sunday afternoon, Feb. 17, at Rastall Lanes. The Zetas scored the highest count in the three game series with a total pin-fall of 2430. The Betas finished second with 2252, and the Kappa Sigs third with 2154.

The next intramural sport for the fraternities will be wrestling, which will be held on March 5 and 7 at 7 p.m. All fraternities should begin planning their teams to be entered in this event.

Led by the fantastic stick-handling of Tony Frasca, the Faculty-Staff team dealt a defeat to the Zetas in the finale of the Winter Carnival hockey tournament. Though he played in only two games, Phi Delt Tom Simonson put on a dazzling display of shooting ability, scoring six goals and leading the Phi Delt into the fraternity finals. Final results of the hockey tournament:

Zeta 2, Sigma Chi 1
Kappa Sig 3, Phi Gam 0
Phi Delt 7, Beta 0
Zeta 2, Kappa Sig 0
Zeta 4, Phi Delt 2
Fac-Staff 3, Zeta 1

BETA THETA PI — The Betas avenged a stingy 5 point defeat at the hands of the Sigma Chi by fighting hard to defeat the Phi Delt 44-21. Although this doesn't alter the actual standings by much, it stimulated a healthy rise in ratings for the Betas: they are now sixth on all-TIGER poll. Spite was the word the next night at the Winter Carnival hockey festivities, but in spite of their spite, the Betas were shut out by the Phi Delt 7-0. The Betas predict that next year there will be trouble on the ice for those facing them, as they plan suit near their goal, thus eliminating the need for a goalie.

SIGMA CHI — Having downed the Betas, 34-30, Tuesday, the Sigs carried this impetus into Thursday night's game with the Zetas. The Sigma Chi defeated the previously unbeaten Zetas 41-39 in a closely contested game. It was "Weasel" Irstfeld's basket with 3 seconds left to play that threw the league into a 3-way tie for first place.

The Zetas avenged their defeat on the ice by defeating the Sigs 2-1. The Sig lines, backed by Bearded Goalie George Burmeister, kept the Zetas scoreless for the first 12½ minutes.

Although losing a ski on the second run, Rick Furman turned in the second best time of the day in last Saturday's ski contest.

Nodaks Shatter Tiger Hopes For Playoffs Berth in WCHA

Colorado College's play-off hopes were dealt a fatal blow in a double loss to North Dakota last week. The Tigers were never able to mount the deadly offense which they showed in the last Denver game until midway in the second game of the Sioux series.

North Dakota moved into an early lead Wednesday night by scoring twice within 11 seconds. The rest of the evening was spent in an unequal battle between the CC offense and the Sioux defense. North Dakota goalie Joe Lech was almost unbeatable. The Tiger shooting was continually on target, but Lech couldn't be beaten. North Dakota's smooth skating crew maintained a steady scoring power, having at least two goals in every period.

The lone CC tally came late in the third period. After taking a pass from Jeff Sauer, Art Berglund skated over the blue line, beat the defenseman, and then from twenty-five feet out placed the puck over Lech's right shoulder into the far side of the net. For the most part the Tiger's play was not as well executed as this. The passing was poor, and they were continually outskated by the Sioux.

The hockey game Saturday night began much like the Wednesday night game. North Dakota built up a 5-1 lead in the first period on rebound and screen shots.

In the second period, however, the Tigers came to life for the first time in the series. Jeff Sauer and Ken Cairns each scored early in the second period to cut the Sioux lead to 5-3. With a little over five minutes left in the second period however, Selman scored on a long slap shot to put North Dakota ahead 6-3 going into the final period.

SUE CAUDILL SUAVELY MODERATES a new first on campus, inter-sorority debate and discussion.

DG-Theta Debate Brings Intellectual Stimulation

Last Monday night the much touted debate between the Thetas and the D.G.'s took place at the Theta lodge on the topic, "Integration in Education." The challenging D.G.'s emerged victorious in a close and fascinating discussion which saw a panel moderated by Sue Caudill discuss the issue in question, and then answer comments from the floor offered by members of both groups. Judges Miss Cauvel, Dean Warner, and Reverend Burton, sagely considered the contributions of both team participants and members of the two groups in making their final decision.

The discussion, to which representatives from the other sororities were invited, proved to be informative, stimulating, and of value to everyone concerned. Rather than a competitive debate, which might have been the result, it was an intelligent discussion concerned with three major areas of concentration, the validity of arguments pertaining to the social and intellectual inferiority of the Negro; the position of the Negro as defined by law; and an evaluation of progress in the area of integration in education, and thus also in society. Judy Hooker, taking a Southern viewpoint which strongly disagreed with her personal views, was probably the most pressed of the panel members, the others being Sally Lentz, Jan Nyquist, and Traer Sunley. All were well-informed and verbally proficient enough to make the topics of interest to the audience, which had done some reading and evaluation on its own in preparation for the discussion.

Although one house did "win" the discussion, this is not the most important factor involved. What was significant was the awareness and interest evidenced by the girls present, and the relevance of a good discussion which, if it did not solve any problems, certainly stimulated interest in the questions raised. The discussion, combined with a dessert, was enough fun and of sufficient value to hopefully make it a precedent for succeeding discussions of the same type, on a competitive basis, between both sororities and, perhaps, fraternities. Certainly this type of an evening was both an entertaining and a learning experience, and as a forum for this new dimension can be added to the fraternity's place in campus life and thought.

Apply for Publication Positions by March 13

Publications Board announces that applications are now open for the positions of Editor and Business Manager of the Kinnikinnik, Colorado College's literary magazine, and for Editor of New Faces, the publication which introduces the incoming freshman class to the campus for the first time.

The Editor of the Kinnikinnik serves in this capacity for two semesters, receiving a stipend of $150 per semester (this amount is divided in the case of Co-Editors). The Business Manager also serves for two semesters, and receives a stipend of $50 per semester. Both people sit as members of the Publications Board.

Editor of New Faces is a new position this year. Requirements for the position are interest and residence in Colorado Springs during the summer, when the Editor will work closely with the Admissions Office. He is also responsible for setting up sale of the magazines next fall.

Applications are due Wednesday, March 13, for these positions, and may be obtained at Rastall Desk. Questions should be referred to Peigi Benham, ex. 284.

Med. School Dean Speaks Here Tues.

Dr. John J. Conger, Associate Dean of the University of Colorado Medical School, will speak at a meeting of all interested students on Tuesday, March 5, at 7:30 p.m. in the WES room of Rastall Center. This meeting is being sponsored by The Faculty Pre-Medical Committee.

Assembly on Laos

Thursday, March 5 at 11:00 in Perkins, the Assemblies Committee will present CC student Va Choumramany, in an assembly entitled, "Laos."

Va will show slides of Laos and talk about his country. One of the highlights of the program will be his playing a genuine Laotian musical instrument.

Faculty Approves Honors Program For Anthropology

An honors program in the Department of Sociology and Anthropology has been approved by the faculty of Colorado College. The first such honors program was established in the Department of History. The new program is entitled "Reading for Distinction."

The program is open to juniors and seniors concentrating in anthropology within the sociology major, with the approval of the department. Candidates must have at least a 3.0 grade point average over-all and in their major, and they must show promise of ability to do independent work in anthropology.

Each candidate for distinction in anthropology will ordinarily develop a project involving field research. This proposal will be submitted to the department for approval during the Junior year. Non-field projects will be considered. The project will be conducted in the summer between the junior and senior years.

During the senior year the candidate will take one or both semesters of Anthropology 339-340, (Readings in Anthropology) for three to four hours credit, preparing a senior thesis, based on the field, under the direction of a member of the anthropology faculty. The deadline for the thesis is May 1.

The program was made possible through a gift from Bruce Grace, who graduated from CC in 1961. He requested that, if possible, the field work be carried on outside the United States. He suggested the work be done in ethnography (the study of primitive cultures) in Mexico.

All College Conference Arrives; Includes Discussions, Recreation

By Caroline Creyke

Organize a "Walk to All College Conference," or, if you prefer to get there on time (1:00 p.m.), form a car pool or take the bus which leaves from Rastall at 12:30.

Registration begins at one and will be followed by a discussion of "What Price Pressure—the first semester in perspective." Leading the discussion will be panel members Marla Bullock, Myles Hopper, Dr. Fred Sondernmann, and Dr. Glen Brooks.

Following a half hour break, President Louis T. Benetz, Brad Snyder, and Max Power—as moderator, will discuss the "Problems of Privatism—Does Higher Education Foster a Lack of Responsibility?"

The remainder of the day has been set down as "recreation"—indoor and outdoor. Interpret this as you will (ping-pong, pool, baseball, volleyball, et multi-eta).

Saturday night will present a strange mixture of Edna St. Vincent Millay, folk singing, and square dancing.

Under the direction of James H. Fox, Miss Millay's play, "Aria de Capo," a comedy lamenting a mock tragedy (in the words of Mr. Fox, "a dreamland of haquin futility and pastoral suicide") will be presented at 8:00 p.m. Due to the lack of a stage this will be presented as theater-in-the-round. Square dancing led by a professional caller, and featuring fiddler Harris Sherman, and a folksong and hoecountry featuring Messrs. Wood and Nichol of the Admissions Office will follow and lead into the night (no hours girls).

For those staying overnight, a reminder to bring your own sheets, blankets and towels (Star Ranch will provide them, however, for a $1.00 charge), or bring a sleeping bag—Don Oden is bringing his!

For those not staying overnight, there will be buses leaving from Rastall at 10:00 a.m. Sunday morning. Led by religion professor, Nicholas Pedersalzi, "Rebellion as an Act of Religious Faith," will be discussed from 10:30-11:45.

Another bus will leave at 1:30 for those wishing to attend the afternoon session—"Student Judicial Organizations." This panel will be composed of Dean Lloyd Warner, Terry Fonville, Susan Caudill, Karen McIlvaine, Dave Hite, and Irv Hinds. The complete bus schedule is as follows:

Saturday: Leave at 12:30, return at 5:00.

Sunday: Leave at 10:00, return 12:00, leave at 1:00, return 3:30.

For those wanting to attend discussion sessions only, there will be a $5.00 charge at the door and you only pay once.

Geiger Reveals Facts About Progressivism

The chairman of the history department, Dr. Louis G. Geiger has brought forth new facts about Progressivism in this country that may tumble some recently developed theories about the reform movement.

Contrary to the opinions of some historians writing today, says Geiger, small-town prejudice was an important factor in bringing about reform. The true nature of the reform movement frequently is misunderstood, he says.

All too often, writes Dr. Geiger in a recent issue of The Journal of Southern History, the efforts of native Americans to rid big cities of corruption has been erroneously labeled fascist and reactionary by later reformers.

He says two aspects of the Progressive era do not receive sufficient attention and when they do they seem to be generally misunderstood.

One of these was the positive role played in the reform movement by Anglo-Saxon Protestants, he said, and the other was the alarmist tactics and oversimplification of issues by the reformers.

He cites as an example of both points Joseph W. Folk of Missouri who destroyed the Ed Butler machine in St. Louis in 1902 and paved the way for reform in the state.

Geiger's article stresses "the positive role in the movement for urban reform that was played by old fashioned moral standards and by the Anglo-Saxon, small-town Protestant Americans' frankly nativistic dislike for the polyglot, non-Protestant turn of the century city."

"This element of Progressivism is usually included among the weaknesses of the Progressive concept," Professor Geiger says. "It is seen as the product of a naive devil theory of history, or at worst, damned as evidence of fascistic tendencies that later gave rise to such movements as the Ku Klux Klan and McCarthyism.

"Overlooked is the fact that rural Puritanism and nativism, now considered so unbelievably reprehensible, were in their way positive ingredients of Progressivism," writes the Colorado College professor. "The frankly held prejudices of the reformers were not entirely based on misconceptions of the realities of their day."

"The relation between the heavy concentration of immigrants in the cities and the break-down of civic virtue was real, not imaginary," he says. "The corrupt connection between unscrupulous bosses, insecure and uninformed immigrants, and self-seeking, lawless corporation managers did exist; small-town, rural society was more virtuous than that of the chaotic new city and less prone to social ills than the jungles of big business and the slum."

"Folk's career demonstrates not only the practicality of simplified sloganeering but also the positive side of the 'Old American' Protestant nativistic distrust of the late nineteenth-century immigrant and the contribution to reform made by the country's distrust of the city," Professor Geiger said. "Folk's assault on the Ed Butler machine in St. Louis had all of these elements, and it provided the setting to arouse Missourians to reform."

LETTERS to the EDITORS

Dear Editor:

The question of the moral code has arisen many questions about the basic conduct of a C.C. student, but this is not the only question involved. I feel that this issue is more than bedrooms and backseats, it is a question of students governing themselves, by their own laws, and hopefully with some degree of fairness. I believe that the issue arose primarily because of some of the ambiguous decisions of the Student Conduct Committee and not so much because the administration deemed it necessary. This code does not dwell in the realms of sin and crime nor is it a great plot by the administration to subdue students by force if necessary. It is a question of student government.

It is a challenge to us the students, in the way we govern ourselves. This code need not radically change our way of living, as on the committee, it need not a 7 to 4 majority of students, it can change drastically social relationships. The effect of this code upon the students seems to me to be one of long range ideas. Will we accept the responsibilities of judgment by peers, based on laws and an understanding which we ourselves have created? If we the students cannot make a conduct committee work then, how can the girls of C.C. possibly wish to have such things as honor dorms and more liberal hours? The least we can have is some sort of working code to govern these new freedoms.

If we the students fail to see that this is more than a question of morals per se, but a question of government, then we must accept without a gripe a second rate student government. We are willing to accept the responsibility which the administration, teachers, and the public are willing to invest in us. We surely must realize that good government does not come quickly nor easily, and that it is easily lost. This government must encompass the complete realm of student life to be effective. Students must be able to answer first to their peers and then to their seniors. We must, however, realize that the authority by which we have this committee was given to us by the president of C.C. and no student body can ever supersede this office without violating the president's own responsibilities to the Board of Trustees and the laws of the State of Colorado. If the A.S.C.C. wants to continue to govern the students of C.C. it must accept this responsibility in this the most basic of issues, or it must not claim the right to govern students at all.

— Thomas H. Ravin

Dear Cutie-Pie Editors:

First of all just let me thank you for the wonderful paper you've been putting out. The articles are really swift and I can hardly wait for Thursday morning to roll around so I can get my TIGER.

But what I really wanted to say is about this student code business. I've read each of your articles about it, since I've always been pretty much in the dark morals-wise. I really swooned over that one by Jim Seaborne—"Morals for Fun and Profit." I think it was. I just can't imagine anything swifter than being practical about the whole thing. So here's my idea.

The College is here to help us out, right? And I've read a few books myself and the outside world seems to be pretty mean. So the way I see it, they should prepare us before we graduate. I mean toughen us up a little. Why don't they do this? Have ASCC appoint one of its spare committees to write down all the rules and morals, the more the merrier. Then when the freshmen come in they have to obey all of them, the sophomores only one

By Ann Doremus

In the past, there has been a scattering of disgruntled remarks about the food served by the College. Mr. Torres, the food service director, suggested that the fraternities residence halls establish committees to serve as a medium through which students could channel their suggestions about the food. The fraternities and Slocum Hall residents established committees which have been functioning all year. Such a committee is now being set up in Loomis Hall in order that the women may also express their ideas.

The Loomis committee asks that you gals utilize the means of voicing your opinions by offering positive and constructive suggestions, comments, and new ideas, for it is by idle talk among yourselves that any improvements be made.

Honor System Best

By Don Wolfgang

At CC we are privileged to live under the Academic Honor System. Naturally, no system is perfect, but after proper reflection most people will agree that the Honor System is far superior to its alternative, the proctor or police system. Anyone who has attended a school run under the latter system, where people are constantly policing the testing area, will assure you it is an inferior method. The Honor System also presents an opportunity for developing an adult attitude, building character and encouraging individual intellectual development. But none of this can be attained unless the system works, and the system cannot work unless each individual believes in it and abides by it.

This system is certainly a mature one and is a very important part of liberal arts education. Under it, the individual faces and learns to cope with what are sometimes decisions.

By following the precepts in the Constitution of the Honor Council, an individual is insuring himself and fellow students of much more than simply a safeguarding of his grades. It is quite obvious that cheating on a test by one individual who is ill prepared is very unfair to other individuals who have devoted several hours in preparation. But idealistic as it may seem, everyone will benefit if this cheating is checked out. Granted, it is very difficult to turn someone in to the Honor Council for it takes real courage and character to live up to this obligation imposed by the system. But the individual doing so, cheating may learn a valuable lesson if he is turned in. It is prevented now from getting away with such things, but probably won't be likely to try similar actions later on in life. He gets himself into serious trouble. Once a person cheats successfully and escapes without a penalty, it is far too easy to continue the tactics and make a habit of it.

But a more important reason for checking this cheating is that it is the only way to preserve the Honor System. If we are aware that we prefer this system to proctor system, then we must be it to endure by assuming a personal responsibility to the system.

If we continue to let cheating go unchecked, then the system is obviously not working and an alternative system must be used.

To carry out his responsibility, the individual must be informed. This means taking it upon yourself to find out any technicalities of the Constitution that are clearly understood. One of the most confusing aspects seems to be that of deciding just what constitutes cheating. It is each individual's responsibility to this out. It may be different in each class, for this is left up to the instructor of the class. A professor may forbid collaboration on homework, while another willingly condone it.

As mentioned earlier, this system is not perfect, but it is the best system. It is the most antagonistic and satisfying system. Because it is imposed by the seniors for the students, it is up to the students to preserve it.

Shove Chapel

Sunday March 3, 1963
11:00 A.M.

Preacher: Kenneth W. F. Burke
Worship Leader: Charles C. Bailey
Sermon Title: "A Man Under Authority"

This Sunday is the last day of the All College Conference. The religion department is contributing to the conference as Professor Nicholas Piedicalzi will lead a discussion at the conference on "Rebellion As An Act of Faith." However, for those students who are unable, for one reason or another, to attend the conference there will be the regular worship service in Shove Chapel. The purpose of the sermon is to discuss the nature of freedom and authority. It is often imagined that a person committed to a particular religious commitment is one who willingly lives in a false and unpleasant manner. The purpose of the sermon is to repudiate this view and to attempt to show that the only authority for a religious person is of love and that of suffering servant.

From the Chair

By MAX POWER—President ASCC

As the new semester progresses, the Election Committee's work will become evident for now is when all those interested members of the student body should begin thinking about running for one of the student body offices. These include the President of ASCC, Vice President, Secretary and the Treasurer. Further, there are the class commissioners of which the three candidates receiving the most votes are seated as President, Vice President, and Secretary-Treasurer of their classes. The campaigns will begin the first week after Spring Break ends as the petitions are due on April fourth for the major student body offices. The campaign for class officers will begin two weeks later. It is a very rewarding experience for anyone to serve on the ASCC Executive Council, and the Election Committee hopes that all eligible candidates will consider running for a student body office.

half (they could hold a drawing to decide which ones), the juniors a quarter and the seniors none.

This should make graduating a lot easier, sort of like settling slowly into a hot bath. Best of all it would give an incentive to date senior girls. I mean the freshman girls might make it to classes more often if the snow weren't so deep. And if we're going to talk about morals and Do's and Don'ts this is certainly a Do. Would you please give this to the Moral Students Committee and if you know anybody who likes older women tell them to call X342.

Yours gushingly
Susie A. Senyor

Dear Editor,

The code of conduct printed in The Colorado College Summer Session Catalog, page 14, was indeed drafted by the students of The Colorado College; however, there is the obvious implication that this code was not only drafted but also approved by the student body. In point of fact, this is not the case. Therefore, would it not be wise to have this oversight corrected?

Benezet Commencement Speech Concerns Privacy vs. Privatism

Editor's Note: This is a cutting of "Privacy Versus Privatism," a speech given by Dr. Benezet at the Loyola University, Chicago, Commencement Exercises on January 7, 1963.

One thing on which all of us in American apparently can agree is that we need more education. In spite of this there is some danger that graduation from college with a Bachelor's Degree is coming to be thought less and less of an accomplishment. If there is one service a Commencement speaker can perform it should be to persuade you students and your parents that college graduation, under proper conditions, is still one of the truly important things happening in America. To be sure, the speaker hangs on to his right to name those proper conditions.

The sheer size of college graduations today—people by hundreds undergoing at one moment the mass conferral of degrees—can make one forget that each one of these hundreds of conferrals ought to mean something important to a unique human being. To convey that real message we shall have to trust to the hundreds of individual families gathered here, and hope that in each home before or after this ceremony a private sort of graduation will have taken place—a ceremony in which those closest to the graduate can give the personal thing that means most to him on this occasion.

Actually, however, the significance of the college graduate is threatened less by modern numbers than by another phenomenon of modern life. This phenomenon lumps together several virtues as well as evils and goes under the general heading of specialism.

Thanks to our current educational efficiency our nation has continued its leadership as the producing genius of the world. It has been bought at a price, however. As the demands of an intricate society force more and more specialties upon higher education, each student follows his professor at least temporarily into a world of isolation. For if the specialist glories in his particular outpost along the frontier of knowledge, he has to console himself against the thought that there is no one else out there to talk to. Thus education currently is producing a race of highly trained people unable to talk to each other about things that should be basic and common to them all. The great questions of life: good versus evil; beautiful versus ugly; long-range wisdom versus short-range expediency; peace versus war; love versus hate; freedom versus authority—questions like these which we used to believe were part of a liberal education are being left out. Courses of general education are in decline just when they are most needed. I don't give much chance for the current excellence theme to save society unless we can identify excellence with a genuine search together for answers to the underlying problems besetting mankind. This, strangely enough, may have very little to do with high grades and brilliant papers in the sciences or the social sciences, or even in the humanities as the specialists carve them up to taste.

The student reaction to current academic pressures has been positive on one hand yet puzzled and at times even better on the other. He realizes he is being tooled for practical survival; he also realizes he is not being made wise or truly more individual. In such a fix, students and not a few adults today are falling prey to a strange new doctrine called privatism. Privatism as I understand it is the denial of responsibility for anything but one's own welfare. As such it is not new at all but the oldest doctrine in the world: it is selfish pride or hubris, which our religion points out as the root of sin. Nevertheless it has been made to appear, like all sin now and then, highly attractive. The privatist says, "I will do what you want me to do in college. I will read my assignments and get my papers in on time. But I will not become involved. Don't ask me to volunteer for student government or the school paper. Don't ask me to volunteer for anything. I will do the work you give me to do but I will live to myself. I will graduate to my eventual $15,000 job and my suburban jungle; I will join only the taxpayer's League." The privatist therefore at the very time he is supposedly being prepared for society is being prepared for non-society — even anti-society.

Three weeks ago on a trip I read three short novels concerning the plight of modern man: William Golding's The Lord of the Flies, E. F. Skinner's Walden II, and The Plague by Albert Camus. Two of them offered a way out; the other did not. All three were depressing but all needed to be read. These contemporary books have one thing in common: not one gives a hint of belief in the Divine. Only one author shows faith in individual man. The behaviorist Skinner is perhaps the most critical of all without meaning to be, for he would have us believe that man will be good only if another man scientific enough to manipulate him makes him good. Not one author suggests that goodness is a virtue which may have originated before man. Man they say created goodness, not the reverse.

The graduates of today have had to pursue their graduation in this climate of social pessimism. Two World Wars, the Cold War, and the misery of half the world's peoples have discouraged us. So we have permitted doctrines like privatism to fill the vacuum. The student is being urged to believe that the privatist is the true individual of the 1960's. Actually he is a frightened man, and apush-over for any enterprising force which, having divided us, can then conquer us.

If four years of college education have meant anything to you beyond training for your first job, they should have given you the makings of that individuality. In a closing moment let me mention a few of these elements.

It ought, first, to have implanted in you a lasting desire to live by thinking. I have no great faith in the large claims of college catalogs that their education teaches people how to think, to think for themselves, to think creatively, etc. I should be satisfied to believe that college education teaches you at least to care for thinking—and to know that in order to think you must seek refuge now and then from the hubbub of society in order to hear your own thoughts.

College and Religious Faith

By Karen Bessensen

God, a Sunday word, a Monday word, a Tuesday word . . . no word at all, a word void or full of meaning, a word explaining life, providing a reason for living or an image to be laughed at, scorned? Does this image or reality semantically juggle the concepts of faith, hope and charity in an effort to confuse or in an effort to link man with his Creator? A round of questions as to why do I have to go, Mother, the Saturday bath, the once-a-week suit and the patent-leather shoes identify upon reflection the usual Sunday morning routine. Religion seems to have been confined to a Sunday "morning" affair and an occasional P.E. gathering. College town, U.S.A. and a smattering of idealism, new challenges to be faced, new goals to be set, a chance to take the world by the heels. High school memories slowly dim, going steady's lost in pins, apron strings are cut and dried but are inner needs satisfied? Complaints of pressure echo from classroom to committee meetings, discussions debating conformity and the individual, man and his society, man and the universe unfold new ideas that flood the mind. Old land patterns are altered if not radically changed by the impact. Security becomes relatives, a form of existentialism becomes a reality. We want to know . . . but what are the real questions a hand, who is answering and by what authority? Is there one truth? Who in the heaven's name is Jesus Christ? "You see, I believe in God . . . but . . . I am different . . . I have my own religion." What does college do to religious faith? Does saying that the latest scientific developments can fully support the theory of evolution negate an omnipotent creator? Is any one truth any more valid than another? Has man's over-intellectualization now reached the point where he himself becomes a god? Is this what college does? Are we taught to accept a truth if and only if it can be fully perceived by man's mind? Are we encouraged to think for ourselves and to seek beyond as individuals to make our personal life meaningful to us and to others? Do college chaplains and college religious activities adequately meet the challenges put before them? Is to believe in a God a social "no-no" for the modern enlightened intellectual? Are we to deny the dynamic force of Christianity in history? At a time when our social, cultural and moral standards are being tried and tested, what has happened to the spiritual element? Is it that all our present needs are so materially and intellectually met that spiritual matters simply do not apply? Has the attitude become, when we need God, we'll call Him and right now we don't need Him? Don't call us, God, we'll call you . . . "I have to study on Sundays . . . The Bible? Yes, I've heard of it." Are these attitudes continued in later life, in the post-graduate days? Does our college experience in the "pocket-vetoing" of God intensify or diminish later religious experiences. These questions and attitudes are but a few of those to be discussed Sunday morning at the All College Conference. The discussion, entitled, "Rebellion As An Act of Religious Faith," will be led by Mr. Piedicalli in an effort to discover what does happen to religious faith in College? Should we be concerned?

Hochman to Speak for Adult Discussion Group

Dr. William Hochman of the History Department, Colorado College, will be the guest speaker at the Adult Discussion Group, 9:45 a.m. Sunday, March 3, at the All Souls Unitarian Church.

The topic for discussion will be "Old Ideals and The New Politics," certain ideals stemming from Jeffersonian principles have undergone change with time and experience.

'Aria' Sung This Sunday

The Experimental Theater present Edna St. Vincent Millay's Aria da Capo this Sunday evening in the W.E.S. room of Bascom Center. This production, following the Saturday performance at the Star Ranch, is presented in an arena style, giving the audience a sense of semi-participation in the antics of Pierrot and Columbine, the brutalities of Thyestes and Corydon the dream and the Cynical, detached omniscience of Corthurnus, the master ceremonies.

Bruce Buck has created an original woodcut conception of man in isolation as a cover theme for the program which Malcolm Richards has carved. The sound effects by Robert Fernie, including excerpts from Bach and Gungl, Schuller, run the gamut of sensations from a summer storm to swordfight. The performance will be exclusively for an imaginative audience that wishes to use wits. Curtain time is 8:00 and admission is free.

Are CC Students Guilty Of Lack of Interest?

by James H. Fox

On Saturday March 2, Max Foster and Bradley Snyder will discuss the question, "Does Higher Education Foster a Lack of Responsibility?" The participants are surely aware that there is no easy answer to the lack of attendance at assembly programs, the small amount of interest in the Experimental Theater, the weak support of ASCC activities, and the conflict between principle and expediency in the defeated Moral Code.

The apparent lack of interest in extra-curricular activities at CC is a result of, among other reasons, the establishment of cliques, fraternity and otherwise. These small, spontaneous groups are somewhat inner directed with limited goals which do not extend beyond the survival and comfort of the group itself. The member's devotion to his athletic or arts subgroup does not attach itself to the entire "Colorado College Family." Perhaps, this is not a tragic situation, but only a predictable result of the gregarious nature of human beings whenever they form a society. After hearing the pessimistic reports of students at an intercollegiate peace conference last weekend, I conclude that apathy is a normal attitude at college these days and that the number of altruistic groups which have formed in the last three years on this campus does credit to CC.

In comparing CC with other colleges and universities in Colorado, it seems that we have more than a sufficient quota of outer-directed leaders. What is lacking is outer-directed followers for whom the cause of a group commitment, like "Commitment," is more rewarding than individual glory which is only enjoyed by the leader. To take a personal example, I enjoy the status of being feature editor, but it is a rather hollow position because I have been unable to scrape up a staff who would be willing to write articles regularly for the feature section. Who am I to blame the hibernating masses!

It is quite easy to lay the blame for hibernation on the fraternities and the bridgeplayers, who are the scape goat for everybody except the Greeks and the Gorenas, but I have already indicated, the sources of the problem go deeper. One reason is the nature of the programs sponsoring outside interests. The complaints in Professor Shaw's letter to the editor two weeks ago are valid. There has been entirely too much "Wolf crying" in advertising of the tumultuous appearances of dull, uninformed speakers. Dr. Shaw's second point, that there are too many events scheduled during many weeks to expect a large attendance at any one event, is also well taken.

Hopefully, the panelists will investigate the channels in which outside interests may be explored. For example, if ASCC has failed to give students a concrete experience of governmental power and procedure, perhaps another organization will realize this knowledge in action. There are a number of dead committees and formal groups which are alive in name only.

In his recent lecture at Loyola College, President Benetz discussed several other sources of the "Lack of Responsibility" at a liberal arts college, namely specialization in higher education, it has become more and more difficult to communicate with and be concerned about the activities outside one's own discipline. The chemistry laboratory and the medieval German literature seminar room are universes next door.

When student athletes, band players, and debaters are made professional by the college, where is the incentive to perform on a non-profit basis? Does Higher Education Foster a Lack of Voluntary Effort?

I mean to emphasize by perhaps exaggerating the situation that Privatism is a problem at CC, and that the discussion this Saturday at the Star Ranch could be a very illuminating evaluation of this situation.

Pressure-Topic Under Discussion

By Marla Bullock

A topic which seems almost on a par with religion and politics as conversation and controversy-starters is that of pressure at CC. The pressure often discussed has many facets: too much studying, too many busy-work assignments, over-programming of activities, too many courses in not enough time, an over-load of papers—the list could go on and on. On the other side are students and professors who say that those complaining of too much pressure are the dawdlers, the bridge-players, the uninterested, and the unambitious. Many people have expressed the opinion that they are finding exactly what they had hoped for in college, and that they are learning and doing a great deal and are still "enjoying life."

In one informal discussion, freshmen stated that they averaged only four to five hours of sleep a night. The "printing press" technique of whipping off papers almost mechanically and without real thought is considered another symptom of too much pressure.

One complaint which many professors should take into account concerns the relatively new program of an optional fourth hour of credit for a course. This could and should be an opportunity for examining an area in more depth and with more creative thinking. Often it means only a second long paper very much like the one required for three hours of credit. To state the same point differently: Do higher academic standards and achievement mean only "more of the same?" Are schools turning out dutiful assignment-producing robots with little initiative and creativity of their own? Is quality being sacrificed for quantity?

If there is pressure, what is the cause? When academic pressure is discussed, grades always come to the fore. Is pressure due to an over-emphasis on grades? Could any changes be made? What about the new academic calendar in regard to pressure? If there is pressure, is it perhaps a good thing?

The Ultimate Question

Inevitably, these questions lead to the ultimate question, "What is education and what are Colorado College and its individual students hoping to accomplish in four years?" Is more time for reflecting, contemplating, browsing, and

Enthusiasm Committee Announces Activities

In any community where associations are wide and varied, there is a need for cooperation, proper direction and a complete communications system set up so that any attempts to coordinate activities can be accomplished with the least amount of conflict. The function of the Enthusiasm Committee is just that. The job varies from spirited pep rallies to a more serious task of keeping in touch with all organizations on campus, and helping them to move in a positive direction for the ultimate benefit of the whole college community.

The highlight of the year centers around Freshman orientation week and the period of agitation. At this time the Enthusiasm Committee has an opportunity to work in a close alliance with the Administration and the Admissions office. We would like to thank all the members of this year's committee for their outstanding response to all of the activities thus far.

Members of the Enthusiasm Committee are Al Church, president of Blue Key; Buzz poe, president of Black and Gold, Gretchen Ferree, Tiger Club, Connie Clay, Thelma, St. Catharine's, Granger, Bobby Tolley, cheerleader, Al Loosli and Pat Chapman, president.

Work and Travel Grants Offered

The National Beryllia Corporation will sponsor a 1963 European Summer Work and Travel-Grant Contest, in which hundreds of dollars in awards will be made for the best illustrations, press releases, essays and sales promotion efforts for the International Student Information Service "Earn and Learn Abroad" program. Entries must be submitted by March 31, 1963.

Awards will be applicable to a London-Paris orientation Seminar Program. The Seminar includes a visit to London and Paris, round trip jet transportation from New York-London, and a paying summer job in Europe, if desired. Students from 16 to 35 years of age are eligible.

For the most part, job openings are in unskilled categories with minimal or no language qualifications. They cover such occupations as farming, construction, and factory work, child care and hotel-resort work. Wages are based on the standard rates in the various countries and may range from room and board in a Swedish, French or English work camp to $190 a month in a West German factory.

Holland Study Offers Experience for Men

The College offers annually a foreign exchange scholarship for study at the Netherlands College for Representation Abroad. The school was established directly after World War II by Philips, Shell, Unilever and other large Dutch firms in the Romantic setting of a medieval Dutch castle called Nijmegen in the center of Holland for the study of business and economics.

After getting settled inside the most which surrounds the castle, the Colorado College exchange student finds himself immediately welcomed into the college society which consists of some three hundred Dutch and Belgian students and four other Americans (the University of Oregon, and De Pauw, Antioch, and Washburn Universities are also represented each year). The American finds it necessary to do a good deal of work in the academic field on his own without outside pressures. The courses themselves range from Comparative Economics to many different languages to Sociology of the Netherlands. More important than the promise of academic work, however, is the unexcelled opportunity which the exchange offers to get to know another country. It's possible to go for months without seeing an American (the American students become half-Dutch by Saint Nicholas Day). The setting is far enough away from city culture, typically Dutch, and yet close enough to Utrecht and Amsterdam to provide the advantages of cosmopolitan life. But most important with Dutch food, Dutch curiosity and Dutch roommates and friends the American is completely immersed in the atmosphere he has come to find out about. Learning Dutch, which is the most important language in Holland and therefore very essential for the American, becomes more of a process of assimilation than of study.

This program can appeal only to a limited group of Colorado College students. First, of course, it is a male college. Second, the program is not cut out for the individual who plans to continue into graduate school after his undergraduate career. Third, the applicant should be interested in business and economics, although a major in one of these fields is not mandatory.

The procedure to follow is to contact Ralph Schmidt, who attended the Dutch school last year. For further information. Then application materials can be acquired from Dr. Sondermann.

Four Students Comment on College Admissions Policy

Dear Mr. Wood,

Recently wide publicity has been given to heightened efforts on the part of the administration to encourage increasing numbers of Colorado residents to enroll at Colorado College. To us as current students there are many obvious advantages to such a policy. We realize, however, that there are disadvantages as well.

For many people a primary consideration in a decision to attend Colorado College has been its very cosmopolitan nature. For us in particular such has been the case and we have been especially gratified to find that our horizons have been truly extended across the nation rather than having been encouraged toward provincialism.

A modification of the character of the college student body may indeed be essential to administrative policy. But we urge you to consider the view, shared by many, that a certain plurality of interests which comes largely from varied geographical and social backgrounds is a necessary part of this college.

Sincerely yours,

C. Bradley Scharf, Seattle, Wash.
John B. Maynard, Tokyo, Japan

Hampton T. Randolph, N. Y., N. Y.
Paul J. Tatter, Denver, Colo.

Messrs: Scharf, Tatter, Maynard, and Randolph:

Thank you for your letter. It pleases us for a number of reasons; among them: it is good evidence of increasing interest and influence on our admission operation by our own students. I have heard college presidents refer to alumni as "perpetuators of the student body." I believe that the currently enrolled student, however, is more influential and has perhaps the greatest stake in this perpetuation.

Already at Colorado College, students are helping us with the many visitors we have; they are visiting their high schools and talking with counselors during vacations; they are writing notes to those we have admitted, and are giving us considerable insight into qualifications of applicants they happen to know. I look forward to the day when a student or two will sit on the Admission Committee at Colorado College. Pomona is one college already doing this.

Another reason we like your letter is that we agree with your points. We believe one of CC's greatest strengths is in the diversity of its student body, and we work very hard at this. We think it is good for a new student to ask, "Where is everybody like me?"

At present, about 34% of our students in the freshman class come from Colorado. Last year, 28% were from this state. The rest come from virtually all the other states and about 20 foreign nations.

Your letter has undoubtedly been prompted by a recent story in the newspapers indicating that we are trying to attract a bigger number of Colorado students. This is true.

One reason for this type of publicity is our continuing (and successful) attempt to destroy false images of the College held by people in the state: "C. C. is not interested in Colorado students;" "C. C. is just for the rich kids;" "C. C. has entrance requirements of 700 Board scores and above, upper 5% class rank!" etc.

We also feel we want more Colorado students than we now have. Check, if you are interested, the numbers of Colorado students represented on Phi Beta Kappa, the Dean's List, student government organizations, the cast of "Guys and Dolls," or any other activity which contributes to the College community, and compare that to the overall ratio of Colorado students to the student body as a whole. There are other, more removed, reasons. Not only are we the only college of our type in the whole state but also we are alone in the eight Rocky Mountain states. This is where we live and this is where we seek most of our support.

Nevertheless, the College has no intention of making this a "local" institution. We are constantly jealous in safeguarding the cosmopolitanism and diversity we hold so valuable. We are thinking of a 40%-Colorado representation ultimately or, perhaps, a 45% representation.

Again, we are pleased to have this articulate expression of student interest in what goes on in admission. Every student at Colorado College ought to be concerned about C. C.'s admission policy and practices, just as every faculty member and administrator ought to be.

Cordially yours,
Richard E. Wood

CALPURNIA, HERE I COME

Now, as the college year approaches its mid-point, one fact emerges clearly: you are all going to flunk everything.

There are two things you can do about it. First, you can marry money. (I don't mean you marry the money itself. I mean you marry a person who has money. Weddings between people and currency have not been legal anywhere in the United States since the Smoot-Hawley Act. Marlboro Cigarettes, on the other hand, are legal everywhere and are, indeed, smoked with great pleasure and enthusiasm in all fifty states of the Union. I bring up Marlboro Cigarettes because this column is sponsored by the makers of Marlboro, and they are inclined to brood if I omit to mention their product.)

But I digress. I was saying you can marry money but, of course, you will not because you are a high-minded, clean-living, pure-hearted, freckle-faced American kid. Therefore, to keep from flunking, you must try the second method: you must learn how to take lecture notes.

According to a recent survey, 123.6% of American undergraduates do not know the proper way to take lecture notes. To illustrate this shocking statistic, let us suppose you are taking a course in history. Let us further suppose the lecturer is lecturing on the ruling houses of England. You listen intently. You write diligently in your notebook, making a topic outline as you have been taught. Like this:

I. House of Plantagenet.

II. House of Lancaster.

III. House of York.

Then you stop. You put aside your pen. You blink back a tear, for you cannot go on. Oh, yes, you know very well that the next ruling house is the House of Tudor. The trouble is you don't know the Roman numeral that comes after III.

They Got to Arguing...

(It may, incidentally, be of some historical interest to point out that Americans are not the only people who don't know Roman numerals. The Romans didn't know them themselves. I suppose they could tell you how much V or X were or like that, but when it came to real cuties like LXL or MMC, they just flung away their styluses and went downtown to have a bath and take in a circus and maybe stab Caesar a few times. (You may wonder why Rome stuck with these ridiculous numerals when the Arabs had such a nice, simple system. Well sir, the fact is that the Emperor Vespasian tried like crazy to buy the Arabic numerals from Suleiman the Magnificent, but Suleiman wouldn't do business—not even when Vespasian raised his bid to 100,000 gold pieces, plus he offered to throw in the Colosseum, the Appian Way, and Charleston Heston.)

(So Rome stuck with Roman numerals—to its sorrow, as it turned out. One day in the Forum, Cicero and Pliny got to arguing about how much is CDL times MVIX. Well sir, pretty soon everyone in town came around to join the hassle. In all the excitement, nobody remembered to lock the north gate and—wham!—before you could say pecca fortiter, in rushed the Goths, the Visigoths, and the Green Bay Packers.)

Well sir, that's the way the empire crumbled, and I digress. Let's get back to lecture notes. Let's also say a word about Marlboro Cigarettes. The makers would be so pleased! And is it not fitting that we should please these honest tobaccoists—these fine men, fond of square dancing, water sports, protein, and tattoos—these times perfectionists who spend all of their days trying to please us—searching everywhere for the best of all possible tobaccos, aging them with patience, blending them with tender, loving care? Marlboros are available in soft pack and flip top box. You will find XX cigarettes in each package.

Sigma Chi

This week Sigma Chi pledged David Wahfield, Steve Kopesky, David Palm, Steve Ebert, Dave Peterson, and Greg Young. Tomorrow the Sigma Chi's go to Denver for Sig Day, held with the Sigma Chi Chapters from the Colorado, Wyoming, and New Mexico areas.

We extend welcome to a newly formed, all purpose organization, the "Wilbur Warriors," whose members include Don Peterson, Penny Zepp, Pete Krouwer, and Don Wilbur. Sigma Chi is proud of their first winning basketball team in several years. The "No Sweat Boys" played the Zeta's this week for the championship.

Kappa Alpha Theta

Last week was full of exciting and meaningful activities leading up to the initiation of our four "old" pledges. Initiated last Saturday afternoon were Judy Hooker, Chris McInerney, Gail Page, and Audrey Snyder.

Our debate Monday night with the D. G.'s was very well attended. "Integration in Education" was discussed by the panel for one half hour and then the panel was open to questions. After the question period was over the judges, Dean Warner, Rev. Burton, and Miss Cavel retired to make their decision, and a lively open discussion followed. Congratulations to D.G.'s for winning the first, of what we hope to be many, inter-sorority debates.

Honored at our combination scholarship-initiation banquet were Jan Nyquist for the highest scholarship in the house, Judy Hooker for outstanding pledge, and Nancy Bowers for outstanding junior.

Kappa Kappa Gamma

Exciting news Monday night at the weekly meeting was the pinning of Crissy Moon to John Van Ness, Phi Delta Theta. The entire chapter wishes to congratulate the two of them and wish them the best of luck.

Tonight, the Kappas and the DG's will hold an informal dance at Bernardo's. Next Monday night the Kappas and the Sigma Chis will hold a serenade in honor of Linda Dunkin and Blake Ozias.

Finally, the chapter wishes to extend its congratulations to Barb Consey who has the lead in two musicals in the near future. She has taken over the lead in Most Happy Fella for the ailing Genny Vaughn. Also, she will be the leading lady in the Air Force Academy's presentation of Hey, Mr. Blue.

Alphi Phi

The Alphi Phi wish to thank the Kappas and Sigma Chi's who helped in the Heart Fund drive Sunday for donating their time to a worthy cause. Sunday evening the pledges and their moms spent an enjoyable evening with a giant sundae at Michelle's. We think the sundae got off better than the girls did but it was such fun!

Delta Gamma

Last week a Valentine party for the children at the deaf and blind school was held at the Delta Gamma house. It was a delightful afternoon and our guests entertained us by singing and playing the piano. Also last week we played hosts to the hockey team at a dessert.

Monday night the D.G.'s wished their house mother Mom Mitchell a very happy birthday with a "surprise hors d'oeuvre birthday party" before dinner.

The D.G.'s wish to thank the Thetas for their kind hospitality and good cookies Monday night when the first of the inter-sorority discussions was held. We also want to thank Miss Cavel, Dean Warner, and Reverend Burton for judging this event and to congratulate Traci Sunley and Sally Lentz who came out on top in this close debate. Both groups asked intelligent questions of the panel and showed a lot of enthusiasm. It is hoped that these discussions will continue.

Tonight, Friday, March 1, the Delta Gammas will join forces with the Kappas at Bernardo's for an informal little frolic to the music of Floyd Frame.

Prof. Michel Engaged In Chemical Research

Dr. Lester A. Michel, professor and chairman of the chemistry department at Colorado College, is trying to determine how temperatures affect the tenacity with which liquids cling to solids in a research project that may make it possible for engineers to extract up to twice as much oil from the earth as now is possible. He has been working on the project for the past year for the Marathon Oil Co. of Findlay, Ohio.

Working with Professor Michel is Michael Orem, a junior majoring in chemistry.

ASCC Notes

The election committee announced that an agenda is in the offing for the election of ASCC executive council. The Election and Enthusiasm committees will be on KRCC on the 25th and the Finance Committee and Rastall will speak on the 4th of March.

Applications for the Editor of New Faces are now open. The stipend for this position is $50. Applications for the Editor and Business Manager of the Nugget and for Editor of the Student Handbook will be open until Friday.

Assemblies Committee announced that out of the open meeting held last Friday came many constructive ideas. Next year the assemblies program will be known as the Colorado College Forum. There will be assemblies at least twice a month but not necessarily weekly. The committee also felt that Olin Lecture Hall was generally a nice place to hold meetings than Perkins. The Assemblies Committee will be selected before spring break to facilitate the organization of next year's program so that the students can be presented with the program at registration. It is felt that the philosophy behind having the assemblies program is to round out the students' education. It is hoped that coffee can be served from 10:45 to 11:00 on assembly days. Applications for Assemblies Committee will be received until March 13. Va Chronoramy will speak on Tuesday, March 5. He will be in Perkins at 11:00 and will play a native musical instrument. This Tuesday at 11:00, all classes will hold class meetings.

Applications for Rastall Center Board will be received March 1-10. Applications and job descriptions will be distributed on March 1.

On Wednesday, the sixth, Rastall Center Board challenges ASCC to a bowling match. Mr. Meis and Mr. Chapman will make the arrangements.

Summer Session Offers Forty Education Courses

Some 45 courses in education, designed for teachers whose pupils range from nursery tots to high school seniors, will be offered during the summer session this year at CC. The summer session gets under way June 17 and continues through Aug. 9.

Prof. J. Victor Hopper, chairman of the Colorado College education department, said these courses would be offered for credit on both the graduate and under-graduate levels. He said 32 professional courses in education and 13 courses in eight other academic departments may be taken for education credit. Both four-week and eight-week courses are available. "In past summers public and private school teachers and administrators have made up the single largest group of students enrolled at Colorado College," said Prof. Hopper. "We place particular emphasis in the summer on a broad range of professional courses designed for educators."

In addition to courses in teaching techniques, organization and administration, and supervision, Dr. Hopper said, the college will offer courses in special education for the mentally handicapped and the mentally gifted and in guidance and counseling.

Nine visiting faculty members will join the education staff in the summer. They are Dr. Leonard E. Baak, of Morningside College, Sioux City, Iowa; Mrs. Rosemarie Wells Campbell, of Colorado Spring; Dr. Lloyd N. Corson, Denver public schools; Dr. Emily Belle Higgins, Allegheny College, Meadville, Pa.; Mrs. Goldie R. Huey, Casper, Wyo., public schools; Dr. Helen W. Painter, University of Akron, Ohio; Dr. J. Carter Parkes, Austin College, Sherman, Texas; Dr. Raymond Taibl, Pueblo public schools; and Dr. Haysler Wieden, Denver public schools.

A number of summer students will be beginning their advanced work in the Colorado College Master of Arts teaching program. "This program is of unusual interest to the classroom teacher, because it can be completed in three summer sessions in the field of English or history and government or science," explained Prof. Hopper.

Prof. Soudermann said that any teachers or prospective education students desiring a catalogue or further information on the summer session also should direct questions to his office.

CC Debators Narrowly Miss Victory in Arizona

The Colorado College Debate Team narrowly missed a victory at the University of Arizona's Desert Speech Meet at Tucson last Thursday and Friday when it's women's division team came within a few points of competing in the quarter-final round. In addition to the women's division team, composed of Sophomore Jo Heller and Freshman Jody Komor, four other CC debaters took part in the large Southwestern tournament.

Komor and Heller finished the first two days of the tournament with three wins and two losses, but their total speaker points kept them from among the small number of three-and-two teams to enter the quarter-finals. Charles Puckett and Max Power represented CC in the Senior Men's division of the tournament, while Dave Bitters and Dave Helms were CC's Junior Men's entry. Neither team reached the quarter finals.

Misses Komor, Heller, and Mr. Puckett also competed in individual speaking contests. Although the team returned without trophies, Prof. Al Johnson, CC's debate coach, reported that all debaters felt that the competition had been keen, the experience rewarding, and the CC debaters generally improved.

In all, some 40 schools from 15 states, including Hawaii, took part in the Tucson tournament.

The CC debaters traveled en route with a coach and team from Adams State College at Alamosa. Stops were made at Lordsburg, New Mexico, Douglas, Ariz., Agua Prieta and Nogales, both in Mexico, and, on the return, Taos, New Mexico.

The CC debaters plan to fly to the annual Tau Kappa Alpha national tournament and convention at Muncie, Indiana, April 8-10.

(Editor's Note: The following announcement concerning Colorado College athletic policy was given to the president of each school in the Rocky Mountain Conference by President Benezet last December.)

By Louis T. Benezet

Colorado College has enjoyed a long and pleasant association with the Colorado colleges with whom she shares membership in the Rocky Mountain Faculty Athletic Conference. Persistent rumor that Colorado College has formulated plans to abandon intercollegiate football has reappeared recently. We believe that our fellow members of the Conference are foremost among those who deserve to know what plans Colorado College is considering.

First of all, we are aware of the increasing disparity of size of Colorado College and the rapidly growing State-supported colleges with whom we compete. When our commitment to the athletic participation by students receiving no financial assistance on any basis other than academic promise and financial need is coupled with our relatively small size, we face serious difficulty competing effectively, especially in the major team sports, within our Conference.

Second, these difficulties have not seemed to us to be insurmountable. Given a common philosophy of intercollegiate athletics, disparity in size alone should not make it impossible for Colorado College to continue competition with its neighboring colleges in Colorado. Nor do we currently have plans or commitments to abandon intercollegiate athletic participation with the members of our Conference.

Third, we are currently instituting a program of athletic competition with a few Midwestern liberal arts colleges similar to Colorado College in size and athletic philosophy. The regularization of schedule with these teams leaves ample room for annual contests in the several intercollegiate sports with traditional Colorado rivals.

Finally, we assure our fellow members that if continuing circumstances should make it seem wise for us eventually to withdraw from the Conference we will first make our decision known to each of the members of the Rocky Mountain Faculty Athletic Conference.

4th North Captures First Round Crown

By Pete Bonavich

Residence Hall intramural basketball knocked off one round and zipped right into another Saturday, but the second round initially met with somewhat less success than the first had enjoyed.

In the first round championship game, 4th North repeated the pattern of play established against the faculty, coming from a first-period deficit to win it going away, 41-21. The game was a defensive exhibition right up to the middle of the third period, with neither team able to muster any sort of offensive onslaught as each concentrated on holding the other's shots to a minimum.

1st South met with early success, employing a zone defense to effectively suppress the north wing, and jumped ahead early in the first period. 4th North recovered their composure in the second period behind the shooting of Bill Evans, as they went ahead by five points at the two-thirds mark, wiping out a 5-point 1st South lead.

The third period was a different game entirely, as 1st South dropped their zone defense, to their immediate regret. 4th North's slowly accelerating offense gradually turned the contest into a rout, despite the still-adroit defensive attempts of the south wing.

Prough, Adeock, and Frinkle paced the 1st South efforts, as Halbach was held to one free throw and was kept out of double figures for the first time this season. 4th North mounted the usual balanced attack, with Milt Frank and Steve Gross each hitting 8, and Bill Evans topping the list with 9.

In 2nd round action Saturday, there was very little action. Arthur House and a varsity-decimated 4th West five forfeited to 2nd South and 2nd North respectively, and 3rd North edged 2nd West, 30-28, behind the shooting of Dwight Kramer and freshman Steve Wollman.

Though we can see little reason to allow 4th North to compete at all in a round which could end in a game with themselves, the 2nd round seems likely to be a repeat of the first right down to the semifinals, as 1st South drew a double bye and the north wing's supremacy shows no signs of faltering.

2nd Round games are to be played on Mondays, Wednesdays, and Fridays at 4:15 p.m. Below are contests scheduled for the week of March 4-8.

CC Freshmen Return From Successful Trip

The Colorado College freshman team returned last week from a successful road trip to Minnesota. Wednesday, February 20th, the frosh flew to Minneapolis and played the Hamline: College varsity the next day.

Despite a large number of penalties for roughness, CC won 8-3 behind the excellent play of Bob Otto and Ron Rishagen, and the good goal-tending of Mike Carter in a game in which CC never trailed.

The next afternoon CC was again plagued by penalties and outcries of "unnecessary roughness" as the junior Bengals defeated Macalister College 3-2 in an overtime game played on an outside rink in sub-zero weather. Bob Otto scored the winning goal, as freshman Steve Ebert broke his wrist to eliminate him from further competition.

Macalister forfeited the game scheduled for the following afternoon on the grounds that CC was playing too roughly. Norm Laurence denied their charges and declared that the freshmen were playing rough, but clean hockey.

An Athletic History Of Colorado College

Editor's Note: This is the first in a series of articles on Colorado College and the Rocky Mountain Faculty Athletic Conference. In several installments over the next few weeks, the author will attempt to examine the historical relationship between the College and the Conference. Most of the information contained herein is compiled from "A Historical Study of Colorado College Athletics and Athletic Policies," by Dean of Men J. Juan Reid.

I. Earliest Beginnings: 1874-95

The long and often stormy athletic history of Colorado College begins shortly after the founding of the college in 1874. The first fall term had hardly begun, with classes being held on the site of what is now the First National Bank of Colorado Springs, before students had organized a baseball team. On September 26, 1874, the "College Boys" met a group known as the Active Club. CC's first athletic contest was a complete disaster, as the Actives romped 9-68. The group from Colorado College was unable to muster enough men for a full team, and recruited three town boys to fill out the roster, but it was of no avail. The following spring, however, CC met and defeated the Actives, 24-21.

Baseball continued to be CC's sole athletic endeavor for the next 8 years, until, in the February 1882 issue of The Occidental, we find football mentioned as an "established sport" at Colorado College. It had been only 6 years since football had first been played under rugby rules and therefore had begun to resemble the game as it is played today. Colorado College was one of the first western schools to try out this controversial new sport. The CCAA

In February, 1882, a group of Colorado College students met for the purpose of forming an organization to govern, organize, and regulate CC athletics. From this meeting came the Colorado College Athletic Association, the organization which was to hold complete responsibility for CC's athletic endeavors for years to come. The Association was created, organized, and administered solely by the students of the College, and this concept of student control over athletics was to be the prevailing one at CC for nearly three decades.

One of the first acts of the infant governing body was to appropriate funds for the purchase of a football, and later 16 men were nominated for spots on the football squad. The first football contest staged under the auspices of the Association was a meeting with the Sigafus Hose Co., one of Colorado Springs' volunteer fire-fighting squads. The game was played on Thanksgiving Day, 1882, with the College Boys victorious, though by an unknown score.

Intercollegiate Play

The period of 1882-85 was marked by a twin emphasis on baseball and football at CC, as the latter sport slowly evolved at other colleges in the Rocky Mountain area. In the spring of 1885, a challenge from Denver University students was received and accepted by the football team. The game was set for April 11, in Colorado Springs, and considerable interest was aroused by the rumored prowess of the DU team, which was publicized as undefeated since its formation. On the afternoon of April 11, after a severe windstorm had subsided, the two teams took to the field before a large crowd, and CC emerged victorious from its first intercollegiate football game, 12-0. There were complaints from Denver representatives that the College Boys were not all college boys, but this was a fact which CC, in the absence of eligibility rules, saw no reason to deny, and students continued to regard the game as a legitimate victory.

It was to be a number of years, however, before Colorado College would engage in regularly scheduled intercollegiate competition. CC and Denver University both withdrew from an embryonic Colorado Football Association in 1889, and the College's football remained on an informal basis, though enjoying a high level of student interest, as the team met local high schools and athletic clubs.

The CIAA

In 1893, an intercollegiate athletic league was proposed, and ten students from Colorado Springs attended a Denver meeting to organize the Colorado Intercollegiate Athletic Association. The delegates drew up a set of eligibility regulations requiring players to attend 5 lectures a week in order

Delta Gammas A Broomball Champions

The Thetas, last year's champion broomball players, were swept from their feet by the Delta Gamma Redlegs during Winter Carnival play. The Theta swatters could stand up against the Gamma's swingers, even the Art Berglund had earlier cost them to victory over the Kappa and the Gamma Phi.

Due to circumstances beyond their control, the Kappas found it difficult to score against the Thetas in the first game of the evening and lost 2-1. The Alpha Phi 2-0. The Delta Gamma Phi 2-0. The Gamma Phi, led by Carol Wright, the Theta's first opponent, the Unattached bowed to the Delta Gammas and continued their fight against referee Marv Parliament.

In their next game, the Thetas placed themselves in the final deciding the Gamma Phi 3-2. Though Delta Gamma coach W. McAlpine couldn't seem to get his girls out of the penalty during the final game, the Thetas managed to slide to a victory over the Thetas and for themselves the new champions.

After taking stock of their injuries, the various teams figured that the only casualties were a sprained wrist, a broken bone and many bruises, which were hardly enough to discourage anyone from playing again next year.

Varsity Baseball Meeting to be Held Next Tuesday

There will be a meeting Tuesday, March 5 at 11 a.m., all men interested in playing varsity baseball. The meeting will be held in the C-Room in the Gymnasium. It should be noted that freshmen are eligible to play under Rocky Mountain Conference rules. All interested freshmen, well as upperclassmen, are urged to attend.

Notice

All men interested in varsity golf are asked to see Dean Berglund next week in his office in Cutler Hall. The season starts in a few weeks and the Dean would like to get an idea of prospects and problems for this year.

To participate and compose a baseball schedule for the league. The Colorado College representatives, because of a lack of funds, promised only to enter a baseball team in the competition but failed even to do that. The Denver University, Colorado State University, Colorado School of Mines, and Colorado Agricultural College comprised this first Colorado intercollegiate league.

The Collegian, successor to The Occidental, was incensed at CC's failure to join the league, and the editor struck at the core of the difficulty by demanding, in the 1894 editorial, that the Administration help support the football team financially. This editorial marks the first departure from the long-standing concept of a student-controlled and administered athletic policy. In late 1894, President W. F. Slocum responded to the plea of the Collegian and the Athletic Association by offering to bear $881 of the Association's deficit, provided that students would raise the remainder. It was always the munificence of the Administration which prompted the Colorado College Athletic Association to join the Colorado Intercollegiate Athletic Association.

It is at this point that two significant milestones were reached in the evolution of Colorado College athletic policies: for the first time, Administration and faculty aid to athletics had been requested and received, and the first time the College was engaging in regularly scheduled inter-collegiate competition as a member of a full-fledged athletic conference. The tiny liberal arts institution was about to embark on a new and sometimes glorious course in its athletic pursuits.

CC Grad to Hold Solo Piano Recital

The Colorado College Concert Series will feature the well-known pianist Jo Boatright in a solo recital on Sunday, March 10 at 4 p.m. in Perkins Hall.

Mrs. Boatright is one of the college's most outstanding alumni-artists. She graduated from the music department in 1957 as a fine concert pianist, having won many competitions and solo appearances with the Pueblo and Colorado Springs Symphonies. After three years of graduate study she earned the Master of Music degree from the New England Conservatory of Music in Boston in 1959.

Attending the Boston Symphony summer home in Tanglewood in 1958, she was awarded the prize of "Outstanding Pianist" there and performed as soloist with the Boston Pops Orchestra in the following June. During her years in Boston she also appeared as soloist in Jordan Hall, the Isabella Stewart Gardner Museum and on Educational Television shows. Her numerous chamber music concerts included a public performance with Richard Burgin, the concert-master of the Boston Symphony.

For the last three years she has lived in Dallas, Texas, where she has continued her concert career in solo and joint recitals with her husband, flutist Harvey Boatright. She also holds a teaching position in the Arlington State College which has a student enrollment of over 9,000 and serves the Dallas-Fort Worth area.

She has participated regularly in the Colorado College summer concert series since 1959, culminating her most successful appearance last summer in a special "Alumni Concert" together with Herbert Beattie, bass, and her husband.

This will be her first appearance in the college's winter concert series since she left here in 1957. Mrs. Boatright will perform Beethoven's Sonata op. 81a ("Les Adieux"), Chopin's Sonata in B flat minor, op. 35 and the Sonata for Piano op. 26 by Samuel Barber. These works are a part of the large repertoire she had to present as a contestant in the recent Van Cliburn International Piano Competition at Fort Worth, Texas.

The concert will be free to the public.

Panel to Discuss Vital UN Issues

Issues facing the United Nations in 1963 will be analyzed and discussed by a three-man panel at 7:45 p.m. today (Friday) March 8 at Rastall Center.

Dr. Bentley Gilbert, associate professor of history at Colorado College, will appear on the panel. Other discussants include Mrs. Edward A. Miller, Jr., chairman of the International Relations Club of the American Association of University Women, and Mr. W. Todd Campbell, Editor in Chief at Shepard's Citations, local legal research organization.

Democracy, Sciences, Religion Suggested for 1964 Symposium

By Dr. Fred Sondermann

This is a report to the College community on ideas for the 1964 Symposium. I hope that many students and faculty members will take the opportunity this early in the planning stage to get their own advice and suggestions.

A number of topics have been proposed for the 1964 event. These are listed below, in no particular order of preference, with brief explanatory comments on each of them.

1. The first suggestion that was submitted concerns an area or country-study program. Thus, one could take the Far East, or Latin America, or the Soviet Union, or any other area about which we might like to have more information than we do now, draw up a program which examines many phases of such a country or area—its politics, its economics, the stage of its scientific achievement, its social problems, its cultural products including music, films, literature, drama, etc.

2. Another idea has been to take as the central focus for the 1964 Symposium "Recent Developments in Science." While this would presumably exclude the cultural aspect of this year's Symposium, it could certainly be a broadly gauged approach to the entire impact of new developments in science.

Closely related to this is a program from an English institution which was sent to me, with the suggestion that it might serve as an example of what we could do here. Its title was "Science and the Human Condition" and included lectures on "The Scientific Revolution and Industrial Processes," "The Scientific Revolution and Leisure," "The Scientific Revolution and Education," "The Scientific Revolution and Communication," "The Scientific Revolution and Morals," and "Technology, Science and Wealth."

3. There is some support for a Symposium on "The Mass Communications Media in America." This would presumably include an examination of radio, T.V., the press, periodicals of various kinds, and the movies.

4. A proposal has been made for a Symposium intriguingly entitled "Minority Rule." It is felt that minority rule is, in fact though not in theory, effective in many major operations of society. The question is whether minority rule is compatible with democracy; whether it is undemocratic or perhaps just a-democratic.

5. There is a good deal of support for a Symposium on "The American Negro." This would consider the position of the Negro in American society, politics, economics, art, etc. Some have suggested that the topic be broadened to deal with "Minority Groups in American Society" in general and this is certainly also a possibility.

6. One of my colleagues has submitted a suggestion for a Symposium under the general title "Man's Search for the Ultimate." This would deal primarily with religious questions, but could also include scientific approaches, political ideologies, etc. We could bring to our campus outstanding representatives of the main religious traditions and tendencies, as well as of secular faiths.

7. Yet another suggestion deals with the general area of Freedom in Modern Society which would include freedom for political beliefs, economic preferences, religious practices, personal behavior, scientific exploration, artistic impression and creation, etc. We could try to identify the forces in modern society which assure such freedoms as well as those which would inhibit it.

8. Finally there is a suggestion for a Symposium on "Art, Science and the Individual," which would in a sense take up where we left off this year and would consider such questions as whether artists and scientists have an obligation to reach the public; what the social functions and responsibilities of both art and science are and, assuming that there are such social functions, how both can proceed without losing their exploratory qualities and necessary freedoms.

It seems to me that these ideas, plus others which will hopefully emerge during the next weeks, will give us a good starting point for discussion and tentative recommendations. I would encourage students, faculty and faculty to attend a session to discuss these and other alternatives on Friday, March 8th, at 3:30 p.m. in the WES Lounge of Rastall Center.

Kohn, Visiting History Prof. To Give Two Speeches Here

On Tuesday, March 12, Dr. Hans Kohn, Professor of History Emeritus, the City College of New York, will deliver two major addresses on the Colorado College campus. At 11 a.m. he will speak to an assembly in Perkins Hall on the subject, "UNITED NATIONS IN THE CENTURY OF WORLD WARS," and at 8:15 p.m. he will speak again in Perkins Hall, under the auspices of the International Relations Club and the Public Lectures Committee on the subject, "RUSSIA: PERMANENCE AND CHANGE FROM TSARISM TO COMMUNIST REGIME."

Dr. Kohn is singularly well qualified to discuss both of these subjects. Born in Prague in 1891, he received the degree of Doctor of Law at the German University there. In World War I he served in the Austrian army, was taken prisoner of war by the Russians, and spent five years in Russia where he studied the Russian language and civilization and witnessed the transition from Tsarism to Leninism. In 1920 he returned to Europe and lived in the following eleven years in Paris, London and Jerusalem, writing on imperialism and nationalism in the Middle East. In 1931 he came to the United States where he lectured at many American colleges and at the New School for Social Research in New York, where he has been teaching for the last 30 years.

Professor Kohn was a member of the Princeton staff of Advanced Study in 1943 and in 1945. He was a Guggenheim Fellow in 1940/41. He is an editorial advisor to the Encyclopedia Britannica and co-editor of the Journal of the History of Ideas, of Current History, and of Orbis, a Quarterly of International Affairs. He has received honorary degrees from Colby College and from American International College.

ALL COLLEGE CONFERENCE PANEL includes Myles Hopper, speaking; Marla Bullock, speaking; Dr. Glenn Brooks, slouching; and Dr. Fred Sondermann, scrutinizing, during discussion of academic pressures.

Conference Decides That Pressure Price Not High

By Jean Torcum

The perennial problem of pressure, the topic of the first discussion at the All-College Conference last Saturday, received a worthwhile going over by students and faculty alike. The discussants, including Marla Bullock, Myles Hopper, and Professors Sondermann and Brooks, set the tone for the discussion by throwing out some initial ideas.

Miss Bullock's main objections to the amount of pressure she feels is present at CC center around the argument that we simply do not have time to do all that is called for from all our courses with the amount of real thinking we would like to put into each effort. Her plea was for less quantity and more quality, for less machine-like turning out of assignments and more opportunity to reflect about what we are doing.

Dr. Brooks made three initial points which merit some serious consideration. First, it takes two to make pressure, with the possible exception of self-generated pressure. The college, our professors, put some pressure on us and each of us responds to it in a different way. Pressure then is essentially a relationship which exists between each student and the "institution." Secondly, he suggested that the college has an obligation to place us under pressure because this is what the "real world" is like and it's time we learned about it. Thirdly, Dr. Brooks pointed out that an individual's response to pressure is a matter of conditioning. That is, that we can build up to it gradually, both mentally and physically, and as we become "conditioned" to the presence of pressure we will be better able to work under it.

Dr. Sondermann reminded us that students have always felt pressure and would probably continue to do so for years to come. He complained about academic pressure of one kind or another. He cautioned us to be careful to distinguish what kind of pressure we're talking about, whether it be self-generated or from outside, from parents, faculty, or whatever.

It seems to me that the fruitfulness of such a discussion is not that we may reach any lasting decisions about pressure, as such, but that we may each be stimulated a little to think about our relationship with our education. Each of us must decide for ourselves why we are here and what are the most important elements in our own education. If we Walt Hecox has been approved by the Executive Council as Parents Weekend Chairman. Song-fest chairman will soon be chosen. It has been suggested by the Executive Council to the Tiger that the school calendar be brought up to date in the following issues.

Hans Kohn will speak Tuesday, March 12. His first lecture will be at 11:00 and his second at 8:15. The topics upon which he will speak are "The U.N. in the Century of World Wars", and "Russia — Permanence and Change from Czarist to Communist Regimes." This man is a foremost authority on these subjects, and all students are urged to hear him.

The Social Co-ordinating and Traffic Committees will have a brilliant performance worked up for KRCC and the Tiger on March 11. The Executive Council has taken the initiative in thanking David Hite and Leigh Rainey for their excellent job with the All College Conference.

Rastall is presenting a coffee hour on the Air Force Academy on March 14. They are also initiating a student faculty luncheon at which informal conversation is encouraged. Should the first of these turn out to be a success on March 14, they will be open to the student public. It is important that you watch this column if you are interested in just talking with some of the professors with whom you may or may not be acquainted.

The Enthusiast program with 280 names on it was much appreciated by the hockey team. The ASCC encourages the college community to see the "Most Happy Fellow" this weekend. It is in keeping with the tradition of an excellent production.

Preacher: Kenneth W. F. Burton
Worship Leader: Karen Lambert
Sermon Title: "The Idea of Creation and Religious Faith"

The theme of this sermon arose in the preacher's mind when he began to prepare a talk for the sophomore Selected Student course on "Creation and Evolution." The question of the origin of the world was one of the great "Cause Celebres" in the last century. Much heat and very little light was generated on the religious side of the question. However, it is an obscure fact that a number of very responsible theologians and religious scholars enthusiastically welcomed the new scientific findings. In this sermon the preacher hopes to show what is the Christian doctrine of creation is concerned about and its relationship to the central affirmations of the Christian faith concerning the person of Jesus.

Applications for the Colorado College foreign exchange scholarship, which provides for study at the Netherlands College for Representation Abroad will close March 13. Interested male students should contact Ralph Schmidt for further information. Application blanks may be obtained from Dr. Fred Sondermann.

Question of European Destiny

By Rudolf Giesinger

All free countries of Europe are now facing the great question of establishing an economic and political union. The political life of Europe is occupied by serious questions towards European unity: The United States of Europe.

The consequence of World War II was a political, military weakness of Europe. The Communist threat to freedom and culture forced free Europe to build a strong European union in order to survive. The European countries have recognized that they can no longer compete with the great powers of the world in economic affairs as long as their resources and riches are split and their exchange of goods is honored by thousands of miles of customs-frontiers. A small state can no longer afford expensive programs of scientific research. The European nations feel that they are all in the same boat and that, as a consequence of history, they have grown together into one community of fate. The bitter experience of the inglorious periods of mutual hatred and distrust among the European nations, which led to their present weakness, convinced them of the necessity of a supernatural community.

Unity in Variety

All these reasons induce Europeans to prepare for a full integration following the model of the U.S.A. However, the formation of a European union is a much more complicated and lengthy matter than American can imagine. It is too easy to consider states like Ohio and California, Illinois and Texas, for they are still much more similar than nations such as Norway and Italy, or Spain and Great Britain. Nearly every nation of Europe speaks its own language, has its own history, and cherishes a nationally different culture with deep-rooted customs and manners. These cultural riches in such manifold distinctiveness in a narrow location are unique to Europe. In building the unity to come, we must never give up our nationally distinct characters.

There can only be a unity in variety, for cultural multiplicity is the true nature of Europe. In that respect, the unifying of the European countries is a tremendously difficult task which cannot be solved within a few years. It is rather a procedure in which one or two generations must be involved before that union will rest on a supernatural conviction and attitude of all European peoples.

The United States of Europe would undoubtedly be an essential factor of peace. What tremendous effect would be produced just by the existence of the hopes of the oppressed peoples of Europe for their withheld freedom would be revived considerably. A European Union would work against the Soviet efforts to extinguish the last sparks of hope and resistance in Eastern Europe.

Value of Freedom

The idea of freedom is higher than the idea of peace. Indeed a unified Europe could raise its voice effectively for the oppressed people behind the Iron Curtain. We are free and it is our moral duty to speak out for those who are not. Much has already been done towards European unity. The Common Market is the most effective element of these endeavors. It has the goal of deepening the ideas of European unity in the consciousness of the younger generation, to prepare for that union to come. It aims at forming a supernatural attitude and removing the prejudices and resentments among European peoples.

Common Market

Moving to the present day, about Great Britain's entry into the Common Market, which the headlines of newspapers are full of. But General de Gaulle, not without agreement by German Chancellor Adenauer, is resolutely opposing Britain's pretending to be a full member at once. It is an equal vote with other members who have already worked out such a union for ten years, considering that the goal of the Common Market lies beyond commercial matters since it aims at political union in the near future. Britain — tied with many other states to its Commonwealth at the same time — would be rather than a driving force to that end. As a matter of fact, British foreign policy of the 10 years has resulted in a partial alienation from the Continent.

In conclusion, only a united Europe can become conscious of again of its whole strength. It is a goal for the sake of which in order to proceed to a determined and systematic policy of international responsibility. The European countries can no longer as themselves successfully as separate states. Only a united Europe can regain their importance as a political, cultural, and military factor.

Therefore the destiny of Europe is tightly connected with the question of success or failure in the formation of a strong union. In fact, the United States of Europe are a goal for the sake of which we must set back national interests, a goal worthy of the greatest sacrifices.

Conference Decides

direction by scheduling third meetings on Friday afternoon. The dismay of many students at the time conflicts as a new. Perhaps all college policy will be far more successful.

A second suggestion was made to professors to give a little more forethought to planning the semester's work, considering the shortness of the semester and our new calendar. In order to solve the problem of having two or three thousand years of the history of Western civilization to cover in one week, a far from optimal academic situation.

Mr. Hopper further suggested that the value of extra credit would be increased if students taking the extra hours were required to do more than simply write one more term paper. The concept behind the extra hour is proposed to make the student do a higher quality and of more intensity.

Some of these suggestions will help us to reach a more satisfactory situation. But let us strive to keep a close relationship between faculty and students so that our problems of overwork may be avoided before they arise.

From the Chair

By Henri A. Meis and Joseph L. Moore

Rastall Center has several functions: it serves as a community center for all members of the college family—students, faculty-administration, and guests. As a liberal arts institution, Colorado College is receptive to the concept of a college union, particularly Rastall Center. Not just a building, Rastall Center is also an organization and a program. As the "living room" of our campus, Rastall Center provides services and conveniences for all members of the college family and presents a cultural, social, and recreational program aiming to make free-time activity a factor concurrent with the academic learning process.

Rastall Center is governed by a board of eleven: seven students, two faculty members, the Director of the Center, and the Director of Student Activities. The latter two are permanent ex-officio, non-voting members. The faculty members act not as advisors but as regular members of the board.

The student who works on Rastall Center Board is most probably doing so because he desires to contribute his ideas to the planning of extra-curricular activities which stem from Rastall Center. Fortunately, the student member of Rastall Center Board finds that he not only has the opportunity to present ideas but can also gain much from the interchange of ideas which evolve from Rastall Center Board meetings and activities. Because each student member of the Board has a specific job or role, he has a responsibility not only for his area but also to coordinate his area with the others represented on Rastall Center Board.

The retiring Board selects members for the new Board from those students who have applied. We feel this system is best suited to the special needs of the Board in that students best qualified for the specific positions on the Board are, in this way, most likely to be selected. The student who is really interested in continuing to make Rastall Center a unifying force in the life of the college—the student who believes that what Colorado College does educationally in the hours outside the classroom is of major importance—is the student who can best serve Rastall Center as a member of Rastall Center Board.

Common Market Proves Successful After Five Years

By Walt Hecox

On January 21, 1963, Edward Heath, Britain's chief Common Market negotiator, said to a U.S. official: "It is only a matter of days before the question is settled in our favor." This was the matter of British membership in the European Economic Community (EEC). Yet a week later the French had apparently vetoed British membership. Imagining for a moment that this unfortunate rejection had not occurred, what effect would the European Economic Community have had on the United States economy?

As originally organized, the European Economic Community was thought by most people outside of Europe to be a "Paper Tiger." Britain rejected membership twice in what she thought was an awkward economic organization doomed to failure. Soon after its actual start in 1967, criticism began to grow and fear of a continually growing economic giant. In 1964 the Common Market led the world in international trade, second in car production, and third in steel production. The rise from non-existence as an economic entity to the world's third largest economic power in the space of five years gave proof of the EEC's success.

The reaction by the United States was reeled in the Trade Expansion Act of 1962. Congress provided the President with wide executive power to slash all present tariffs by fifty per cent, and to eliminate tariffs on goods eighty per cent of whose production was accounted for by the U.S. and the negotiating country.

Only with Britain a member of the EEC could this bill be of much significance since eighty per cent of the production of most goods could not be accounted for without adding England's production to that of the other six countries. The success of this bill depended entirely upon a reciprocal tariff cut agreement on the part of the Common Market, which would in turn lead to all non-Communist nations receiving the same tariff reduction on the particular goods negotiated. As a protective measure the bill provided power to raise U.S. tariffs in response to foreign discrimination against American goods.

If the Common Market had agreed to cooperate in cutting tariffs on certain goods, additional prosperity for all countries involved would have occurred. Initially, reduction of tariffs would have resulted in the elimination of some inefficient industries, previously protected and stabilized by high tariffs. The increased productivity on the part of those American companies which were competitive would more than compensate for this loss. The President possessed power to relocate and compensate workers and employers displaced by such tariff reductions. Foreign goods would also have been cheaper to U.S. consumers who could have purchased more of the imported goods and still have received additional spending power because of the increased production of goods exported.

National boundaries are arbitrarily divisions which do not correspond to the unequal endowment of the factors necessary for production. A free flow of goods, services, workers, and capital would result in complete specialization by each area in the production of those goods in which it was most efficient. Any hindrance to the movement of goods or capital promotes continued inefficiency. Therefore, there is no economic justification for a tariff. Other policies, such as direct government subsidization of important but inefficient industry, would achieve more efficiently what the tariff is presently doing.

The much talked about balance of payments crisis and the resulting gold outflow could partially be curbed by increased exports on

Va Declares Laos Land of Contrast

Sophomore exchange student Valouna Choumramany spoke to the Colorado College students about his country, Laos, Tuesday, March 5, at 11:00 a.m. in Perkins Hall.

Laos, said Va, is an underdeveloped country, exporting almost nothing. But it produces enough rice in one yearly crop to feed its people. Fish in Laos' many rivers provide food for even the poorest. The Mao tribesmen of Northern Laos and the Kha of the South speak their own languages and live isolated lives ignorant of problems outside their own immediate regions, in sharp contrast with the educated people of the city, who enjoy Western music and are subject to Western influences.

Laos is a constitutional monarchy with executive power in the hands of a Tribune appointed by the King and approved in a popular election. If the people fail to approve the Tribune, the King must appoint another.

Children are required to attend school from the ages of six to twelve. Education through high school takes thirteen years. The examinations are extremely difficult, and about 40% of the students fail. Only the most brilliant student can complete school. This, Va feels, is a serious defect in the Laotian educational system.

Buddhism and ancestor worship are the main religions of Laos. Each Laotian man becomes a Buddhist monk for a short time in order to learn well the principles of Buddhism.

Va played two Laotian musical instruments and concluded his program with a series of slides.

HAIL TO THE DEAN!

Today let us examine that most maligned, widely misunderstood, grossly overworked, wholly dedicated campus figure—the dean.

The dean (from the Latin Deancere—to expel) is not, as many think, primarily a disciplinary officer. He is a counselor and guide, a haven and refuge for the troubled student. The dean (from the Greek Deanos—to skewer) is characterized chiefly by sympathy, wisdom, patience, forbearance, and a fondness for homely pleasures like community singing, farina, spell-downs, and Marlboro Cigarettes. The dean (from the German Deangemacht—to poop a party) is fond of Marlboros for the same reason that all men of good will are fond of Marlboros—because Marlboro is an honest cigarette. Those good Marlboro tobaccoes are honestly good, honestly aged to the peak of perfection, honestly blended for the best of all possible flavors. Marlboro honestly comes in two different containers—a soft pack which is honestly soft and a Flip-Top box which honestly flips. You too will flip when you try an honest Marlboro, which, one honestly hopes, will be soon.

There is not a dry eye in Utah

But I digress. We were learning how a dean helps poor, troubled undergraduates. To illustrate, let us take a typical case from the files of Dean S. . . . of the University of Y. . . . (Oh, why be so mysterious? The dean's name is Sigafios and the University is Utah.)

Wise, kindly Dean Sigafios was visited one day by a freshman named Walter Aguincoourt who came to ask permission to marry one Emma Bleuchim, his dormitory laundress. To the dean the marriage seemed ill-advised, for Walter was only 18 years old and Emma was 91. Walter agreed with the dean, but said he felt obligated to go through with it because Emma had invested her life savings in a transparent raincoat to protect her from the mist at Niagara Falls, where they planned to spend their honeymoon. If Walter called off the wedding, what use would the poor woman possibly have for a raincoat in Utah? The wise, kindly dean pondered briefly and came up with a brilliant answer: let Walter punch holes in the back of Emma's steam iron. With steam billowing back at the old lady, she would find a raincoat very useful—possibly even essential.

Whimpering with gratitude, Walter kissed the dean's Phi Beta Kappa key and bastedened away to follow his advice—and the results, I am pleased to report, were madly successful. Today Emma is a happy woman—singing lustily, wearing her raincoat, eating soft-center chocolates, and ironing clothes—twice as happy to be candid, than if she had married Walter. . . . And what of Walter? He is happy too. Freed from his unwanted liaison with Emma, he married a girl much nearer his own age—Agnes Yucca, 72. Walter is now the proud father—stepfather, to be perfectly accurate—of three fine, healthy boys from Agnes's first marriage—Everett, 38; Wilhelm, 43; and Irving, 55—and when Walter puts the boys on a lead and takes them for a stroll in the park on Sunday afternoon, you may be sure there is not a dry eye in Utah.

And Dean Sigafios? He too is happy—happy to spend long, tiring hours in his little office, giving counsel without stint and without complaint, doing his bit to set the young, uncertain feet of his charges on the path to a brighter tomorrow.

Diverse Interests Alter Topic

By James H. Fox

Is Colorado College only a factory which produces bachelor degrees with only the usual amount of interaction and a vague awareness of one's position on the assembly line, or is there such an animal as the Colorado College faculty?

The discussion last Saturday at the Star Ranch did not concern itself with this topic, as it might have with the alluring title, "Does Higher Education Foster A Lack of Responsibility?" Although inorganic as a result of diverse, unrelated interests among the participants from the floor, several concrete and philosophical ideas were thrown up for consumption.

President Benozet suggested three broad goals for the liberal arts community: The individual's advancement in his major field; his acquisition of a general education; and his realization of an orientation towards his life's work.

For many students, this orientation is a constant intellectual curiosity and a desire for enlightenment. The worst kind of a Privatist is the individual student who retards the growth of a small liberal arts community like CC, by refusing to take part in the development of learning in the most significant sense of the word. He is both physical and spiritual dead weight, demanding the time and energy of the faculty and his fellow students and offering nothing in return.

"Nothing will come of nothing." Why are we here, besides doing our small job in the assembly line of higher education? If CC is an organism, of which we students are cells, what is the purpose of this creature beyond survival?

Hochman to Lecture For Discussion Group

Dr. William Hochman of the History Dept. will be the guest speaker at the Adult Discussion Group of the All Souls Unitarian Church on Sunday, March 10, at 9:45.

The topic will be "The New Politics and the Crises of Leadership." The roots of contemporary political leadership are found in 1840 and what new patterns of leadership have emerged today?

Tragicomedy on Tour

By Jim Dyson

During the past week Jim Fox directed a group of college actors in a fine production of Edna St. Vincent Millay's Aria da Capo. In all, three performances were played to receptive audiences. The show opened at the Black Cat Coffee House Friday night; on Saturday it moved to the All Souls Conference and terminated its tour Sunday night in the spacious ASCC Room on the college campus.

Aria da Capo is a work in experimental theater and as such provides great latitude for direction. Some of the ideas initiated by the director in this production are fresh to the CC environment.

The play was done in the round with musical effects. The actors oftentimes almost mingled with the crowd and created a very relaxed atmosphere.

The play is written with a social message. However, just what this message is is another problem entirely. The main theme is simple enough, "The world is a stage and all the people are but actors on it, etc." Where one goes from here is based on the past experience of the beholder. The over-active mind can ruin a play of this type by trying to make something of it that it simply is not. It should be viewed for entertainment and any other value gained is merely a reward keeping one's mind open.

The blocking for this play, adequate and the concepts of acting added to the lines.

In the first scene, Hadley Lor and Norman Colbert were tortured. The parts seemed to be for such extreme exaggeration the situation would remain unrelatable to the audience and let the people out front remain completely objective. The rendition, however, was a characteristic that did not remove the audience from the situation but rather it presented a carefully drawn, understandable pair of personalities.

The actors seemed directed toward unreality and were along by some tastefully selected music but they never broke reality barrier. Although the first part of the work was not handled well, the exact movement and poise of both actors turned the scene into something approaching modern ballroom dancing.

Corthurnus, played by Mr. Hopper, provided the transition between the first and second part of the play. Corthurnus is more or less the Big Daddy director of life. The part calls for a cool, collected, and detached characterization. Mr. Hopper achieved all these qualities in his interpretation, and also injected a bit of ham into the role. When Hopper clapped his hands and quoted a stern voice, "Strike the scene it was hard to keep a straight face.

The second scene is a farce within the context of the play. Douglas Cowles as Tim and Michael von Helms as Cordon starred in this section.

The interplay between these actors was definitely the point of the evening. In this setting of a comic farce had to be overcome by the actors were working on a tragic theme. They overcame this difficulty by convincing the audience that a moment or two they were living a true tragedy.

The pacing of the entire show was excellent. At no time did the show die from slow, tired lines, ineffective pauses. Bob Farnie was able to coordinate the sound of the action without a single hiccup and his special effects enhanced the show.

Seldom is a cast of this size assembled which works so well together on the stage. Aria da Capo was indeed an entertaining experience, and a credit to those who performed in it.

Dean Worner-Student Panel Consider CC Judicial Bodies

The Sunday afternoon session of the All College Conference was devoted to Student Judicial Organizations. Jo Heller moderated the panel in the absence of Sue Coadill. Panel members included Dean Worner, Erv Hinds, Karen McIlvaine, Terry Fonville, and Dave Hite. The panel attempted to provide those in attendance with a better understanding of the judicial organizations. Terry Fonville briefly portrayed the development of student participation in these organizations as well as to outline their authority, power, purpose, and jurisdiction.

Following the initial statements of panel members with respect to the above topics, the panel attempted to answer questions and charges which have been leveled at the Student Judicial Organizations. The first question raised was concerned with the basis for the decisions of Honor Council, Student Conduct Committee, and AWS Judicial Board. It was determined that these committees base their decisions on precedent and rules incorporated in their constitutions. The next question considered the decisions of the SCC. It was established that only in cases involving the suspension or withdrawal of a student are the decisions of the committee referred to the members of the administration. Dean Worner stated that because on occasion a decision involving expulsion has been modified it does not mean that the recommendation of the SCC was not considered. Another question was concerned with the recourse a student had after a decision by the SCC. A student definitely has recourse through the president of the college.

The members of the panel raised a question about the number of Judicial Organizations. Erv Hinds stated that there are 12 separate functioning judicial organizations on campus at present. Karen McIlvaine felt that perhaps some of these organizations could be combined. She felt that if nothing more something should be done to increase the student's understanding of these committees.

In an attempt to clear the air and to give the students present a better understanding of the administrative position, Dean Worner raised a most vital question. "Why should students be involved in student government on this campus?" The present question is whether or not the students are willing to assume the responsibility which goes with truly substantive organizations.

Dean Worner then presented some most enlightening statistics on the number of cases involving suspension since 1956 which had been referred to the administration by the SCC with recommendation from the committee. Four percent of the student body has been involved in these cases. The Dean reviewed the instances which called for suspension in an attempt to clarify the issues involved and the reasoning behind the decisions. He stated that the administration has neither an ethical nor a legal defense for turning over the final authority in these decisions to the students.

Monday night, the Phi Delta Theta dessert at the DG house in honor of Pete Webster and Manning. After the ceremonial effort to stimulate intellectual formalities, a debate was held on the subject of whether or not should be mandatory that grounds crew attend all functions of the Symposium. We were fortunate to be able to enlist the services of Puccini Maserati as moderator. A high school forensics champion Ken Hanson, a two-year term on a full debating scholarship from Minneapolis, articulated the affirmative. Everybody All-Conference debater last year, Doc Kilbreath, successfully defended the negative. Again we were fortunate in having Cathy Cook as one of the judges. Saturday the Phi Deltas are being forward to the Miami Triad picnic and dance to be held at Palmer House. We wish to congratulate Joyce Manning, year's Phi Delt Triad Queen.

Bengals Wind Up Successful Season

Colorado College closed out its most successful hockey season of the last several years by dropping the last two games to tough Michigan Tech. In the first game CC was outplayed 6-3 and so lost its mathematical chance to enter the playoffs. The second game, a more even contest, saw CC pull up to a 4-4 tie before going under, 6-4, and falling into a fifth-place tie with Michigan State, a team the Bengals beat earlier this season. With these final losses, the C season record stands at thirteen wins and eleven losses.

An Athletic History Of Colorado College

THE CCAA: 1895-1905

Athletics at Colorado College received new impetus when CC joined the Colorado Intercollegiate Athletic Association in the spring of 1895. The baseball team responded to its first taste of league competition by capturing second place in the Association, and competition was scheduled in football, tennis, and track.

During its first full year of conference play, 1895-96, the tennis team was fairly successful, and both the baseball and tennis teams captured the Association crowns. The football squad was less successful, failing to win against any of its three league opponents.

Since the major athletic emphasis at CC was decidedly in favor of football, demands immediately arose for the hiring of a paid coach. When the captain and coach of the 1896 team announced that he would not return in the fall of 1896, the Colorado College Athletic Association announced the hiring of a Mr. Converse as coach at the generous salary of $15 per week. Converse proved inept, and two townspeople were selected as coaches. The precedent of a salaried football coach from outside the college had been established.

One more major precedent was established immediately after CC's entrance into the Colorado Association. Faculty members were added to the Colorado College Athletic Association Executive Board.

Entrance into the Colorado Intercollegiate Athletic Association brought the ever-present specter of financial anxiety back to CC athletics, as teams were obliged to schedule expensive away games. The Athletic Board, which was still formally excluded from Administration aid and relied on subscription drives to supplement admissions receipts, again went into the red, and no track team was organized for a number of years.

Early in 1898, the Athletic Board voted to sink further into debt and construct an athletic field surrounded by a quarter-mile track, a baseball diamond, and grandstand seats totaling 500.

The new playing field, together with the success of the 1898 football and baseball teams, led to an increase in athletic emphasis, although as usual football received the lion's share of adulation. Increased emphasis at other schools as well as at CC also led to considerable controversy within the young conference. In 1897 when a rule was adopted limiting participants to 4 years of Association competition, Colorado University objected strenuously and withdrew from the league for nearly a year.

The successful 1898 football team was a harbinger of bigger things to come for Colorado College gridiron play. An eastern coach was hired for a $250 season fee. The new coach worked the team hard, and CC took the Association championship in 1899 and in 1900, depending heavily on several transfer students who received room and board aid.

The college, intoxicated with its football success and with three consecutive baseball championships, suddenly found itself elevated to the stature of a major athletic power. The recruiting and eligibility practices followed by the school were, however, far from purely amateur. Several members of the 1899-1900 gridiron championship teams were listed as "special students," those not pursuing courses leading to a degree. The Denver newspapers complained loudly about CC's practices, and at the spring Colorado Intercollegiate Athletic Association meeting, new eligibility rules were adopted aimed specifically at the college.

The 1901 football team won all but one game, but unfortunately the single loss was to Colorado University in the championship contest, and the 1901 Association crown was to be the last for Colorado College.

After 1901 support for football lagged at CC, partly because of the chronic financial disabilities of the CCAA, partly because of a simple lack of team wins. In 1904, when Colorado University refused to reschedule a game to avoid a conflict with two of its Association partners, the school was threatened with expulsion and chose to withdraw. The following season was to be the last for the Colorado Intercollegiate Athletic Association, though it was a successful one for Colorado College. When CC refused to play off a tie for the league championship with Colorado School of Mines, Mines withdrew from the Association, forcing its dissolution.

The failure of the CCAA represented more than the simple inability of athletic squads to maintain satisfactory relations. The failure of this first Colorado intercollegiate league represented as well the abandonment of semi-independent, student-controlled athletic competition, and set the stage for more extensive support and control by faculty and administration. After a somewhat chaotic interregnum, intercollegiate competition in the Rocky Mountain region was to be reestablished on a firmer if no less controversial basis.

Basketball Team Finishes Season Fifth in Rocky Mtn. Conference

By Bill Mracek

The Tiger basketball squad closed out their 1962-63 campaign last week by winning one and dropping three to give CC a 3-13 Rocky Mountain Conference record which placed them fifth in league standings. The local five lost two to Adams State 102-89 and 82-68 at Alamosa, and then split their last home series against Colorado State College with the Tigers taking the first 68-65 and CSC capturing the second 108-79.

Adams State out-rebounded and outshot Colorado College in both games clinching for the Indians a tie for first in the RMC along with Western State, each showing identical 10-6 records in conference play. Phil Hart and Bob Heiny paced the CC scoring punch with Hart pouring in a two game total of 41 points and Heiny with 37.

Last Friday night the Black and Gold, guided by Gregg Smith's 22 markers held off a late CSC effort to give the Tigers their third win of the long season. CC was on top throughout the entire game and led by three at intermission, 37-34. The Bears fell behind by ten midway through the final half and deployed a full-court press which almost put the Greys five on top. Bob Heiny canned 16 points in addition to bringing down 14 rebounds. Saturday night's affair was strictly Colorado State College as the Bears poured in 56 first half tallies and ended the game with seven players in double figures. Hart took game scoring honors with 24, Bob Baker added 17 and senior Gregg Smith playing in his last CC game accounted for 11.

Coach Red Eastlack's cagers were handicapped all season long with their height disadvantage and their inability to put two sound halves of basketball together. Freshman players Phil Hart and Pete Susemihl did outstanding jobs for CC in their first year. Hart averaged 12.3 points a game and was top rebounder bringing down 19. Susemihl, playing at the forward position, was the team's fifth top scorer averaging 5.7 a game and was third in rebounding. Two junior college transfer students, Bob "40" Heiny and Bob "Cooks" Baker were regular starters in Coach Eastlack's lineup and can be expected to be two of the top players on next year's squad. Heiny averaged 10.4 points a game and snared 16.9 rebounds to place second in that department. Baker, with his 8.9 average was CC's fourth point maker.

Reserves who can see more action next year are Bill Pelz, Dave Herrington and Steve Hildreth.

The Tigers lost through graduation their top gunner in Captain Gregg Smith who averaged 12.9 per game and sparked numerous CC rallies. Reserve forward John Reid also will graduate this spring.

Preparation for Life Education's Mean Goal

Dr. Louis T. Benezet addressed the Texas State Teachers' Association meeting in San Antonio, Texas, on March 8. He told the group of educators that the most important task facing the nation's teachers is to understand and to shape the individual student's goals.

Dr. Benezet, Colorado College President, said this is much more important than technique in teaching or the new emphasis on subject matter.

"The final goal of education should be not merely to fit an individual for some job or career that satisfies him, but important though that is to a stable society. The final goal is to help each individual find the means to a personal integrity which will last him throughout life."

Noting that life is a "drudge" without a philosophy to live by, he said learning should aim at the student's coming to believe in his own worth as a human being and as the creature of an ethical society.

"As we look at the frightening statistics of mounting delinquency, crime and mental disease, we see the casual cause of an anxious society," Dr. Benezet told the teachers. "No amount of academic rigour in the classroom will blow that fact away."

He observed that research in learning psychology apparently has little interest in the old question of how the learner feels about the importance of learning the subject matter.

"And on this I will risk generalizing that individual attitude toward subject matter is considered by many today to be irrelevant," President Benezet said. "Two developments have contributed to this."

"The first is that we have returned to essentialism in education," he said. "By this I mean educators are willing to say again that certain basic subjects should be studied by every pupil, regardless of differences in ability, interests or vocational goal."

"The other development," he said, is that "modern techniques of incentives and reinforcements have caused a widespread belief that there is no more a problem of teaching any discipline to any pupil, given the time, the control and the proper teaching aids."

Dr. Benezet reminded the educators that "knowledge is a process, not a commodity." "Thus whether it is any longer fashionable or not, if we want to understand what learning is and what it can be, we have no course but to approach it there, in a study of those highly individual human organisms we find scurrying around within the universe of our classroom," he said.

He said one of the big problems facing teachers today is finding out why some children want to learn and others do not.

President Benezet said many people have a tendency to speak as if contemporary education was concerned entirely with bright students, who make up only about 10 to 20 per cent of any class.

"In the current emphasis upon academics and superior students we have come to a renewed impatience with the slow learner and the unmotivated learner," the Colorado College president said. "We do again the easy conclusion that some pupils are lazy, or that they come from homes with interest in nothing but security and material comforts."

"Pupils are indeed lazy in many things but I have never known a person who was lazy in everything," he continued. "If we can find the thing he wants to be energetic about doing, we have a starting point."

"There are some of the oldest truisms in teaching, but I find they are being sneezed out by the current pressures on academic performance, and I believe they need restatement."

Five Seniors Receive $1500 Wilson Award

Five Colorado College seniors have been awarded Woodrow Wilson Fellowships for a year of graduate study. The students were among 13 from five colleges and universities in the state to receive the coveted fellowships to study at the graduate schools of their choice. In addition, four students received honorable mention.

The five winners are Gary W. Boucher, Karen C. Kossuth, Jerry L. Macon, Max S. Power, and Bradley J. Snyder.

Boucher, a physics major, is the son of Colorado College Professor Emeritus Paul E. Boucher of 1812 Tejon St. Karen Kossuth is majoring in German; she is the daughter of Dr. and Mrs. L. C. Kossuth of Gunter Air Force Base, Alabama. Macon, majoring in physics, is the son of Mr. and Mrs. James Macon of 4 Anita, Colorado Springs. Power, a political science major, earlier this year was granted a Rhodes Scholarship for two years of graduate study at Oxford University. He is the son of Mr. and Mrs. J. S. Power of 1660 Lincoln in Denver. Snyder, majoring in German, is the son of Mrs. June Snyder of 10225 Scenario Lane, Los Angeles, California.

In addition to one year of tuition, the fellowship winners receive a stipend of $1,500 and dependency allowances.

Students receiving Woodrow Wilson honorable mention are: Arthur L. Dana, a physics major, son of Mr. and Mrs. F. E. Dana of 114 E. Uintah; Terry A. Kidner, English major, daughter of Brig. Gen. and Mrs. Herbert Kidner of 3 Ft. Hunt Rd., Alexandria, Va.; Lynne A. Vincent, English major, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. W. E. Vincent of 1735 Westridge Dr., Casper, Wyo.; and Sandra Weir, history major, daughter of Mrs. William Weir of 4315 52nd St., N.E., Seattle, Washington.

They were among 18 students from nine colleges and universities in Colorado receiving honorable mention.

Professor Neale R. Reinitz, campus representative for the Woodrow Wilson National Fellowship Foundation, said the program was founded to encourage superior students to prepare for a career in college teaching.

Colorado College Tuition Raised

Colorado College President Louis Benezet announced last week that CC will increase tuition and fees by $50 a semester next September. The president said the increase would provide for salary raises, sabbatical leaves, continuance of the winter symposium, additional faculty, library collections, and scholarship aid to students whose financial hardship.

The measure was approved by the College's Board of Trustees at their March meeting. They approved a $25 a semester fee to help meet the rising cost of stu-

Hanya Holm Will Return To Direct Dance School

Hanya Holm, famed New York choreographer, whose most recent success was the dance sequence on the television production "Dinner With the President," will direct the Colorado College School of Dance again this summer.

Miss Holm, who established and has maintained the summer dance school at CC for 22 years, returns to the campus with her own staff of Lover Kostock, Allen Miles, and Molly Lynne, who will replace Mr. Kostock for the last four weeks of the session.

Novices as well as advanced students are invited to enroll for Miss Holm's classes," said Fred Sondermann, director of the summer session. "Eight hours academic credit may be earned by taking the full dance course, with the required course for all dance students scheduled for mornings and the elective courses in the afternoon."

Assembly on Common Market

Tuesday, March 19 at 11:00 in Perkins the Assemblies Committee will present an assembly on the European Common Market. Dr. Kenneth Curran, chairman of the economics department, will be the speaker.

CC Will Initiate Study Abroad Program for Qualified Students

The Colorado College is organizing a "study abroad" program to be initiated during the 1963-64 school year. The program will be open to sophomores, juniors and seniors with a cumulative grade average of 2.00 or better. There is no language requirement.

In the fall semester those who choose to participate in the program will register for a special readings course which will include a paper culminating the program at the time of registration, a deposit of one-half the cost must be made to insure participation.

During the fall semester students will be engaged in the independent readings course, conducted in English, dealing with the general background of the area to be studied. After the first semester's final exams (which, perhaps, may be taken several days early, the groups will fly by jet to New York and then to Vienna, Austria.

In Vienna the group will attend lectures by various local authorities and will interview proponents of different positions dealing with the problem under consideration. The Institute of Foreign Studies has graciously offered their services. This procedure, in combination with archival research, will give the students competent insights and a general understanding of what is to be studied.

At the moment, it has been suggested that a possible topic could be the question of the national expellees residing in Austria and Germany—their impact upon these nations, their political ambitions, and their role in determining national policy towards the so-called satellite countries.

Participants will be expected to take part in all of the sessions both with various local authorities and in symposia in order to discuss and evaluate reactions to the materials.

After approximately 25 days abroad, the group will return to participate in second semester classes at Colorado College. Late registration will be arranged. After returning, and before the end of the school year, each student must submit a paper dealing with a preferred aspect of the entire study plan.

The cost of the program, if present plans with an up-to-date jet airline work out, will be $750. This sum presupposes a minimum of 25 participants and represents transportation costs of $450, hotel and meal costs of $200, a tuition fee of $40, and miscellaneous expenses of $60. This amount does not include any purchases, recreational travel, or other expenditures extraneous to the program. Money for hotels and food should be paid in advance to insure the comfort of those students who may have holes in their wallet pockets. Hotel accommodations will be quite comfortable and students will dine together except when study or recreation plans demand otherwise.

The trip will be, primarily, an educational endeavor. However, there will be quite a good deal of free time (especially on weekends) for touring, skiing, and general sightseeing. Students should be reminded of the excellent nearby ski shops and the fine beer. For those of you who desire interesting educational work, active recreation, and foamy nightcaps, this trip provides a fine opportunity at very low cost. The group will be chaperoned by Dr. and Mrs. Paul Bernhardt of the History department. Students should remember that they are representing our country and our college, and should conduct themselves accordingly.

If you are interested, please contact Nancy Schoup, X292, Carol Wood, X274, Myles Hopper, 5-6223, or Dr. Bernard, X360 (Jackson House) before Spring Vacation.

Musical Proves Success

By James H. Fox

One of the largest and most complex scores of the current American musical comedy scene was the ambitious undertaking of the production staff, performers, and crew of Frank Loesser's The Most Happy Fella last weekend at the Fine Arts Center.

The 36-member chorus accomplished pleasing vocalizations of "Fresno Beauties" and "All Nature Seems to Know." The hard work of Donald Jenkins was particularly successful with Loesser's seven major trios and quartettes. The musical director instilled in the popular "Standin' on the Corner" the vitality, timing, and projection of professional theater. Mr. Jenkins' direction of the four singers of "Lunedi," in Act II, Scene 2, and of the trio in "She Ain't Got No Place to Go," in Act III, Scene 2 was his most artistic product.

Mr. Jenkins also served as the conductor of a well disciplined instrumental ensemble. The Overture was not only the usual melody of the show's tunes, but also, by cleverly using later rhythmic patterns and brief suggestions of the songs to come, it was an interesting composition by itself. The percussion instruments of Henry English added sparkle to the two piano and bass and marked the wrathful obscenities of Cleo. The musicians achieved more success in supporting the singers than in coordinating with the dance routines.

The choreography was sensual but rather uninteresting. Perhaps the music and the opportunities in this show did not provide Norman Cornick with much of a challenge. The modern interpretive dance in "Big D" required a much larger area than the dimensions of the Fine Arts Center stage, particularly with the presence of the chorus who had to edge back for the dancers. The result was an unpleasant cramped effect. Of the dance corps, Mr. Cornick's savage movements and the light grace of Jenine Bramwell and Linda Borgeson stood in sharp contrast to the occasionally awkward and strained motion of the other dancers.

Physical limits produced a similar difficulty for William McMillen, however, his staging of the huge cast was a great improvement over his work in last year's Gyps and Dicks. The larger roles received some open, well motivated blocking. Timing and depth on the part of Messrs. Gianne and Philpott, and Miles. Franklin and Hill were partially a result of Mr. McMillen's careful direction.

Tony is a terribly demanding part both to sing and act, and John Gianne in the title role produced a mixture of technical weakness and emotional strength. Mr. Gianne was more forceful on his feet than in his wheel chair and more skillful in sharing songs like "Happy to Make Your Acquaintance," "Lunedi," and "My Heart Is So Full of You" than in his solos, "Rosabella" and "Mama, Mama." The extraordinary vocal range of the part, requiring many f's and several G's, is too difficult for a normal bass voice. However, the actor of Tony rose to Loesser's melodramatic hook with warmth and compassion.

The singing of Barbara Couey as Rosabella was more satisfying than her acting. "Somebody, Somewhere" and "Let Me Tell You That I Love You" were somewhat lacking in interpretation, but technically adequate. Although Miss Couey possessed a warm, light sense of humor, she did not convey emotional credibility in her shame and her loves for her aging, miserable husband in Act III.

HASTILY SCRIBBLED LOVE NOTE from a lonely bachelor is put to song by a flattered Rosabella (Barbara Couey) as her skeptical fellow waitress (Polly Franklin) looks on.

However, with the understanding that she received the role late in the production, her performance becomes rather impressive.

In the longing wanderlust of "Joey" and the sympathetic "Don't Cry," Ben Lyons as Tony's foreman, Joe, delivered several of the most stirring moments of Act I. Mr. Lyons' portrayal of the simple, narcissistic young man was a more definite characterization than his conception of Sky Masterson.

There is an old adage scribbled on the walls of dressing rooms that comedy is the most serious business. Nevertheless, it is tempting to shrug one's shoulders about Polly Franklin's Cleo and say that her business was easier to execute than the stronger dramatic material of the three principals. Certainly Miss Franklin's delightful low comedy required much more than a straight delivery. In a weary foot sore opening the singing in this feature role was large and plaintive without sounding harsh. The gaiety and polish of her later numbers with Herman may have been the result of a rustic chiroprapist in Napa.

The wide smile and harmless, bright eyes of Romney Philpott as Herman occasionally surpassed Miss Franklin's facial contortions. The pair's recognition of similar citizenship was such a momentous event that the conclusion of "Big D" with the chorus and dancers had to be anticlimactic. Mr. Philpott generated the feeling that he enjoyed creating the friendly yokel through witty, comfortable renditions of "Standin' on the Corner" and "No Chip on My Shoulder," and his triumphant batttery of "Made a Fist."

Although Mary Pat Hill as Tony's fiery, possessive, old fashioned sister, Marie, may have lost her brother to Rosabella, she maintained the best voice in the show. Miss Hill resisted the interpretation of an arch villainess and, instead, found an unhappy and occasionally sympathetic woman.

Dale Spall, in the role of the good natured officious Pasquale, when flanked by his tiny assistants, was almost as huge in his bluffing of Herman as he was in stature. Mr. Spall's strong bass voice and the high tenor sound and equally high keyed energy of William Moon were a vital factor in balancing the trio's numbers. "Benvenuto's" amorous Italian courtesy and the lively, well blended "Abbondanza" heightened the festivities.

The singing of Richard Bradley as Doc in "Love and Kindness" was a little stiff, but his presence as the wise and therapeutic village doctor partially resulted in an equilibrium of positive and negative forces.

In the individual performances of the Ensemble, Dave Clapp's Priest might as well have been adorned hat to shoes via Brooks Brothers, instead of being clad a plain clerical uniform, for all the holiness he communicated for the profession. However, Robert Pittaway's slouching, bored Busdriver, a brief, but sharp characterization, executed almost entirely in pantomime, and William Moninger's special delivery of a mail order bride were charming contributions to the musical. These three smaller roles proved another old saw of the theatre—there are no such things as small parts, there are only small actors!—and are simultaneously indicative of the variety of effectiveness among all the happy characters of The Most Happy Fella.

While David Hand's yard scene was the least stage worthy of his settings, his Golden Gate Restaurant, complete with chandeliers, and his Main Street in Napa were elaborate, realistic, and utilitarian. The interior harn backdrop was simple and huge without overstating its atmosphere. Mr. Hand's lighting design in both of Loesser's musicals has reached professional standards. The change of mood in the fading x-rays at the climaxes of Acts I and II was dramatically timed without dwarfing the principals. The stage crew, under Bishop Nash, produced an efficient technical show.

The fact that almost every character in The Most Happy Fella had at least one costume change reveals the enormous amount of work which went into that part of the production. Under a limited costume budget, Jean McMillen showed her skill and industry. Although Rosabella's clothes and particularly her yellow haw gave Tony's bride a little girl appearance, Miss McMillen achieved stunning effects in the outfits of Cleo, Herman, and Joe.

In spite of minor disappointments, the Drama, Dance, and Music Triumvirate offered the campus an entertaining evening in musical theater.

Kohn Compares Present And Past of Russia

Professor of History Emeritus, Dr. Hans Kohn, delivered a Public Lectureship speech on "Russia: Performance and Outlook from Tsarist to Communist Regimes" Tuesday evening before a near capacity audience at Perkins Hall. The cogent, articulate Kohn spent the major portion of his address reviewing Tsarist history before briefly comparing it to dramatic Russian developments of the past 35 years.

Prior to Peter the Great, according to Kohn, Russia looked toward the East, primarily due to the sweeping invasions of barbaric tribes, foremost among these the Mongols. Russia also envisioned herself as the Third Rome, destined with a messianic mission. It was not until Peter the Great that she looked and lived with the West.

This was perhaps the most significant and vital factor in Russia's development. Dr. Kohn accentuated the fact that the Russian people, until the establishment of the Provisional Government, had never experienced a liberal, democratic state. The creation of the Duma in 1905 was only a draping that covered the totalitarian nature of the Monarchy.

The March Revolution of 1917 was led by republicans and liberals. Yet, their Provisional Government lasted a short, temuous life as the professional revolutionists, inspired by traditional messianic goals, had by November of that year swept Russia back to an autocratic state.

Interestingly, Professor Kohn pointed to a Soviet rejection of the West after the Revolution and rebirth in Russia's eastern orientation. Today the Soviet Union is assimilated back, as Peter the Great had, Western ideas and progress. Yet, Russia remains autocratic and dictatorial before.

In this fashion, Dr. Kohn compared the similarities between present day Russia and the Tsarist country of the past. The weight of his lecture centered around abstention to cite key differences between the two eras. Not without questioner raised the question of Kohn finally distinguish the differences in progress and vitality between the Tsarist and Communist regimes. In the most salient moment of the evening, he pointed out the powerful inertia created by Communists in contrast to the leisurely attitude taken by the Monarchists. Within this factor, the difference between a nation that remained a secondary power for hundreds of years and a nation that has threatened world domination with thirty years.

CC Counseling Center Offers Various Services to Students

Have you ever asked any questions like these? "What shall I do after college?" "What should I major in?" "Can I do something about my grades?" Have you ever wondered: "Is there anyone I can talk to? Someone I can tell who will keep confidential what I say?" "What can I do if I feel blue?" If you ever ask questions like these, you may be a person who could find assistance at the Counseling Center.

The Counseling Center, situated on the ground floor of Ticknor Hall, offers help to student with an almost infinite variety of problems and questions in any area of life. The staff, drawn from several kinds of counseling backgrounds, are all experienced professionals, prepared to give aid with everything from vocational counseling to study help, from the most severe personal problems to those not so disturbing, from testing services to information giving services.

Students come and go in these offices during the hours of 8:30 to 4:30 every day except Saturday and Sunday, making use of the many types of help the counselors can give. It isn't hard to get to see a counselor, because one just asks for an appointment, in person or by phone. Counseling is usually a process of helping you to understand yourself better, and to apply that understanding in ways that will help you function better.

Right now, many people are interested in getting summer jobs. The Center has several sources of information about these jobs, and how to get them, and leads to ideas on choosing an appropriate one.

The Counseling Center is staff and functions, distinctly separate from administrative and faculty offices on the campus. It provides a service tailored to individual needs, on an individual basis.

CD Program Outlined

By Charles Ladd

Recently in an interview, Colorado College Civil Defense Director, Mr. Richard Kendrick outlined the Civil Defense program for the college. He described a brief history of the program and pointed out the aims and intentions of the program. Mr. Kendrick went further to explain how the program functions in the college.

When the Civil Defense program was just beginning in the early fifties, at Colorado College, the program offered the use of certain college equipment to the community. This program was as vague as it sounded. Later in the fifties, the national concept of the Civil Defense program changed, and the college began to take a greater interest in a more thorough Civil Defense program.

In 1960 and 1961, the Federal Government conducted a two phase program on Civil Defense, and from that program, the Government has enabled citizens to be protected from fallout. A fallout shelter will not protect against the blast and other effects of a thermonuclear bomb. The first phase of the program was carried out by surveying all the buildings in the country and finding which of these buildings would suffice as shelters. These buildings were then stocked with supplies. The second phase of the program made money available so that new buildings could provide fallout shelter. The plan of the second phase was to further the protection offered by the first phase.

These buildings, on campus and elsewhere, were equipped with supplies which would last for two weeks provided that the manner of people in the shelters did not exceed the shelter's designated capacity. The food ration is 750 calories per day. This food is in cracker form, and each individual eats twenty-four of these each day. A quart of water is the liquid ration. The medical supplies are sufficient for small injuries. These supplies include a small amount of Morphine, bandages, antiseptics, cough medicine, and aspirin. The shelters are equipped with Geiger Counters in order to calculate the dosage and level of radiation.

Life in a fallout shelter is not comparable to life in a suite in the Waldorf Astoria. The square feet is the amount of space allowed each individual. While there are no blankets at the immediate time, it is hoped that in the future, there will be enough money for them. Of course, it would not be necessary to have blankets for everyone because there would not be enough room for all the occupants to lie down and go to sleep at the same time. Instead, one blanket would be sufficient for every three people. In shifts with one-third of the occupants sleeping for eight hours, the rest would stand. Chemical toilets are odorless and can be used with a sufficient degree of privacy.

One would probably wonder how people would live in a building which is surrounded by contaminated air. Buildings are effective in reducing the amount of radiation. A building with two levels above the ground will allow most of the radioactive dust to be filtered out before the air is breathed. Rastall Center with a 4 to 1 protection factor lets in the basement one roentgen for every hundred roentgens that are outside the building. A building with a 6 to 1 protection factor will allow inside it one roentgen for every thousand roentgens of radioactivity that are outside it. The government is now stocking all buildings with a 4 to 1 protection factor or better.

It is easy to realize the problems that can arise in administering a fallout shelter when it is in use. Mr. Kendrick has taken a course in administering fallout shelters and pointed out that the program is a great one. People can get unruly after a long time in close confinement. Individuals can demand more food and water than they deserve and hurt everybody in the process. Illness can arise. Firmness is needed if people are to survive in a fallout shelter. Mr. Kendrick is trying to initiate a program that will train people near campus to be supervisors in fallout shelters. Students are helpful, but their high turnover rate is a disadvantage in making them permanent shelter directors.

The areas on campus that are presently available and stocked are Rastall Center, Palmer Hall, and Slocum Hall. Very shortly, Tutt Library will have a small amount of supplies. Tutt Library is potentially a good fallout shelter if people had time to pile books against the window on the east side of the basement. Time is a very variable factor when considering the amount of time to get into a fallout shelter. Sometimes, only minutes are allowed for people to get into a fallout shelter while in other situations a few days would be allowed. In such a situation, additional areas could be stocked, and such tasks as piling books against the east basement window in Tutt Library could be carried out. If a thermonuclear bomb exploded in Denver with the winds blowing southwest from Colorado Springs, the extra time would be available.

One might think that because of NORAD, Colorado Springs is a prime target area and that it would be better to save money and let the blast effects of a bomb take its toll. But perhaps a missile could be off target, or perhaps when Norad is under Cheyenne Mountain, Colorado Springs will no longer be a target. Mr. Kendrick feels that anyone who cares about his fellow man will not disregard the program. He points out that with the many lives that Civil Defense could save, the United States could fight back effectively after a thermonuclear attack.

Tutt Library Proves Useful

Students at Colorado College are reading more these days—and they are doing much of it in the college's new Charles Leaming Tutt Library.

Three-quarters of the undergraduate students visit the $1,250,000 library every day, according to Librarian Ellsworth Mason.

Dr. Mason said more than 3,000 books are checked out of the library at any one time. Of these about 1,200 come under the humanities classification, 1,200 are in social studies, 400 in the sciences and 200 are biography. Colorado College students apparently are following the national trend of reading more non-fiction than fiction these days. Of the 3,000 books out at any one time, only about 200 are fiction.

Colorado Springs residents also are using the library, built under a grant from El Pomar Foundation of Colorado Springs and dedicated last Oct. 12. During the first six weeks of this year 950 books were loaned to townspeople. This was an average of 20 books a day.

Dr. Mason said students are spending more time in the new library than they did in Coburn. "I've counted as many as 275 reading in various areas of the library on Sunday afternoons," he said. The Charles Leaming Tutt Library has a seating capacity of 625 compared to 112 at Coburn.

Student Committee Devises Plans To Avoid Annihilation of Students

By John Black

"Why does Colorado College have a civil defense system? Since Colorado Springs is a top priority target we will all die in the first exchange and no civil defense system would be able to save us." These statements and questions are heard quite frequently on the Colorado College Campus. I would like to attempt to give some answers to the critics of the college defense preparations.

During the past semester, a group of students attempted to approach this question with the idea of saving the maximum number of lives in case of a nuclear exchange between the Soviet Union and the United States. We have to admit, that in case of a direct hit on the city of Colorado Springs, the present campus facilities would be of little use. However, the present campus facilities have been approved as adequate protection from fallout should a nuclear exchange exclude Colorado Springs. This exclusion may be possible once NORAD is located under Cheyenne Mountain and practically invulnerable except for a direct hit. Since direct-hit accuracy is almost impossible at this time, Colorado Springs may be spared the horrors of a direct nuclear attack. If such is the case, then the campus civil defense system would be adequate to save the lives of the members of the college community.

The alternate plan of action devised by the student group includes a central committee of students, faculty, and administration members who would be alerted if the world situation warranted the action. This committee would be responsible for watching the "Tension Barometer" for signs indicating a distinct possibility of a nuclear exchange. At such a time, they would order the evacuation of the campus to a relocation center located over sixty miles from Colorado Springs. This center would have been prepared in advance and with a warning time of three hours it would be possible to relocate the entire campus to a relatively "safe" area. After studying the wind patterns, possible blast and firestorm patterns for the Colorado Springs area, the committee was relatively happy with the relocation center.

It must be remembered that we are attempting to save your lives and any preparations taken by the college enhance this possibility greatly. We recognize the problems and are attempting to do something about them. We feel that the evacuation and relocation plan has merit and we hope that it can be implemented in the near future. Hopefully it will never be used but it is better to be prepared and have a chance at survival than to be helpless in an emergency.

Publishers Sponsor Competition

The winner of a unique book review competition will receive a summer editorial job with a major New York publishing firm. Salary, board and winner's round-trip traveling expenses will be paid by the sponsor, Grosset & Dunlap, Inc., publisher of the Universal Library line of quality paperback books. The competition is open to all current undergraduates of accredited colleges and universities in the United States. It will run from March 15 through May 1.

The review of no more than 500 words must be based on one of 24 Universal Library paperbacks specified by the publisher. These are titles used by many instructors as required or supplementary reading literature, history, sociology, the arts and other subjects. Books by James Baldwin, Joyce Cary and others promise the student that his time will be spent fruitfully even if he has no current course in which one of the 24 titles is used.

Colorado Springs CD Errors in Techniques

By Becky Powell

No doubt many of you noticed the big trailer truck backed up to the front of Palmer several weeks ago. The men were unloading Civil Defense supplies for the shelter in the basement. Did you really bother to pay much attention? Generally, we Americans tend to dismiss "civil" thoughts of the possibility of a nuclear war and to a degree this is not bad. However, if any part of the population of the U.S. is to survive an all out nuclear attack, we are going to have to be quite a bit more realistic and objective towards our Civil Defense policies, and the exhibition in front of Palmer is not an example of either realism or objectivity.

Unfortunately Colorado Springs has the dubious distinction of being one of the primary targets in the event of an attack, and in our case bomb shelters will prove to be of little or no use. Because we are so far inland any attack would probably come in the form of intercontinental ballistic missiles carrying up to ten megaton warheads.

The results of such an attack would be that in all probability no one in the Colorado Springs area, including the Air Force Academy and Security, would have any chance to survive. Just how far away from the blast area people could survive would depend largely on whether the wind was blowing radioactive fallout particles and the possible occurrence of fire storms, which are self-perpetuating fires so hot that they suck oxygen from the air above so that everything that is not immediately burned to death suffocates.

It is not the place to spend money on fallout shelter projects, but there are areas where these programs could prove to be much more effective. Bomb shelters, if constructed properly and not haphazardly as many backyard shelters are, can offer effective protection. It is expedient that the populace know how and what to do, and this is the main function of Civil Defense. If we have an educated population, a significant proportion of the population could survive and maintain themselves.

Each of 25 Universal Library editions each and 25 third prizes of 10 Universal Library editions each. The winner of the grand prize will be a regular member of the Grosset & Dunlap editorial staff for nine weeks, from July 1 to August 31, 1963. He will participate in conferences with others of the editorial department, sit in on sessions with authors, agents, artists, book production specialists—in short, he will be in a working laboratory of the book publishing field and be paid a salary of $100 per week, in addition.

Columbia University is cooperating in the project by agreeing to house the student in one of its dormitories. The Columbia authorities have given their support in the belief that the competition has a worthwhile educational objective.

Rules and information about the competition are available at the College Book Store and local book stores, or the student and professor can secure them by writing to "Book Review," Grosset & Dunlap, 1107 Broadway, New York 10, N. Y.

Alpha Phi

The Alpha Phi wish to congratulate Jimmy Tammany, Mary Emanuel, Malissa Davis, Donna Jones, Gervy Clark, and Sunny Jamison for their work in "The Most Happy Fella" and also Betsy Crockett, next year's NUGGET Editor.

We started the week off right by winning both of our basketball games, 10-2 and 19-6, and ended it right with a scavenger hunt held with the Sigma Chi. The pledges gave a delicious spaghetti dinner for their Moms prior to the meeting Monday night, and afterwards the chapter was shown slides depicting pledge sneaks held in the past (we hope they took the hint!).

Next week we are looking forward to greeting Mrs. William Drogemueler, our district governor, who will be visiting us for a few days.

Kappa Kappa Gamma

On Sunday the Kappas had an extremely enjoyable evening with the Phi Gammas. Dinner was served at the Kappa House, after which there was piano playing, dancing and television watching.

Monday night Pam Philippus passed her candle announcing her pinning to Wayne Deucher of Phi Gamma Delta. After the meeting pledges Ann Babcock, Diane Cox, Donna Dent, Pam Philippus, and Susie White gave a very humorous rendition of "Three Kappa Pledges" followed by the entire pledge class singing their new song, "Kappas are the girls who can't say no." We were then given a serenade by the Phi Deltas in honor of Crissy Moon and John Van Ness.

The Kappas are all looking forward to a breakfast with the hockey players on Sunday, as well as a dessert with the Betas on Monday.

Gamma Phi Beta

Friday evening the Gamma Phi filled the bottom room of the Iron Springs Chateau for an informal dance. Floyd Frame provided the music which couldn't compete with the Colorado College talent in the upper room, but did allow couples to get a change in atmosphere by running up and down the stairs.

Carol Shafer, Gamma Phi transfer from CSU, was honored Monday night at a dessert following the traditional Monday night meeting.

Sigma Chi

Crusher Kopecky, Steve Ebert, Morey Peyton and the rest of the Sigma Chi had a roaring time at the Miami Triad last Saturday. Part of the entertainment was provided by Ronnie and the 4 Moons, with the added attraction of Chuck Deaver's singing.

On Sunday night the Alpha Phi had the Sigma Chi's over for dessert and a scavenger hunt. The brothers are looking forward to heading to California in a week to visit Balboa and enjoy the sun and surf. The Sigs also have a new pledge, Tom Copeland. Congratulations are also in line for Sigma Chi's Triad Queen, Martha Stevenson.

Beta Theta Pi

The Betas congratulate Kathy Berthong as Beta queen of the Miami Triad, chosen by process of natural selection. The Triads dance and preceding picnic was a definite success, worth every penny that it cost.

This past Monday the chapter was honored by the visit of District Chief Lee Marx, who reminded us of the importance of a fraternity (we still had a good time at the Triad picnic), and Bob Zimmer, chapter adviser.

Hats off to Robbie Robinson and Steve Livingston, both of whom did a fine job in "The Most Happy Fella."

Phi Delta Theta

Saturday, the Phi Deltas, along with the Sigma Chi and the Betas, warmed up for the annual Miami Triad Dance with a picnic at the Iron Springs Chateau. The dance was held that night at the Palmer House.

Sunday afternoon, in order to complete plans for the chapter's fiftieth anniversary, the Phi met with their local alumni for a dinner at the house.

Monday night, after enjoying a serenade with the Kappas in honor of Chrissy Moon and John Van Ness, the Phi Deltas retired to the house only to find themselves attacked by a screaming mob of Phijs and Kappas. Sigs armed with snowballs and led by Dan Ketchum. It was reported afterwards that the group had later turned on Loomis. It is expected of course that any damage inflicted by the evening's childish endeavors will be the responsibility of the aforementioned assemblage.

Delta Gamma

The D.G.s wish to thank the Phijs for the enjoyable dessert at their house last Monday night. Debonair Dan Ketchum added a bit of color to the evening.

The Delta Gammas are looking forward to getting together with alums this Saturday for the traditional Founders' Day luncheon. Our 80th anniversary festivities will be held at the Palmer House.

Kappa Alpha Theta

Congratulations to Martha Stevenson for being chosen queen for the Sigma Chi at the Miami Triad Saturday night! The Theta Man dance held last Friday night honoring Ken Cairns and Art Berglund as our "Theta Men" was fabulous.

The monthly dinner held on Monday night with two Mormon missionaries as guest speakers was very interesting. The two young men presented a film strip and gave a short talk.

All Thetas five feet ten and over are anxiously awaiting a basketball game Sunday afternoon with all those Phi Deltas five feet five and under.

DONALD JENKINS LEADS THE COLORADO COLLEGE CHOIR featuring Horace Work, Charles Adams, Ben Lyon, and Barbara Couey. They will leave for their spring tour on March 22.

CC Choir in Rehearsal For 1963 Spring Tour

The 58-voice Colorado College Choir is rehearsing now for its annual spring tour to the West Coast. Traveling more than 4200 miles by chartered bus, the choir will start its 13-day tour through nine states on Thursday, March 21.

The main work on the program this year is Ralph Vaughan-Williams' "Mass in G Minor for Solo and Double Chorus." This beautiful 20-minute concert mass was written in 1922 and in 1952 it was performed at the coronation of Queen Elizabeth II. The soloists for the Bass are Barbara Couey, soprano, Charlotte Adams, alto, Horace Work, tenor, and Ben Lyon, bass.

The program also includes Byrd's "Lumen ad Revelationem," Tye's "Come, Holy Ghost," Lassus' "Surrexit Pastor Bonus," Demantius' "Es War Eine Stille," Brahms' "Motet, Create in Me, O God," Lockwood's "David Mourning for Absalom," an Easter Carol called "This Joyful Easteride," the traditional "All Glory, Laud and Honor," and a Negro spiritual called "Ain't That Good News."

The choir will sing at the Casper, Wyoming Elks' Club March 21; the Aldersgate Methodist Church in Butte, Montana, March 22; First Presbyterian Church of Sandpoint, Idaho, March 23; the First Congregational Church of Bellevue, Washington, March 24; and the Lloyd Center Auditorium in Portland, Oregon, March 25.

The choir will be five days in California. March 26 there will be no concert, but the choir will stay in Eureka, California. The next three days concerts will be given in the San Francisco area at the Orinda Community Church in Orinda, March 27; The Church of St. Matthew (Episcopal) in San Mateo, March 28; at St. Peter's Episcopal Church in Redwood City on March 29. March 30 the choir will be in the Los Angeles area to present a concert at the Hillcrest Congregational Church in Whittier.

The choir will also sing in All Saints' Episcopal Church in Phoenix on March 31 and at the Church of the Holy Faith (Episcopal) in Santa Fe, New Mexico, on April 1.

This is the third successive year that the choir, under the direction of Donald P. Jenkins, has toured to California, but it is the first year they have traveled to the Pacific Northwest.

Oskasita Elect Officers

Oskasita held its first meeting this semester the evening of March 5th for election of new officers. The results are as follows:

President, Ann Peters; Vice president, Jill Joseph; secretary, Sheila Bachar; treasurer, Jane Lentz; sergeant-at-arms, Jody Komor; program chairman, Alex Watson; publicity chairman, Alex Watson; master, and is organizing a delegation to perform at the WAA gkhana in April.

The group will go on a trail ride this Sunday, March 17.

Anyone interested in joining may contact Ann Peters, ext. 230 or come to one of the meetings.

26 Students to Work at Navajo Camp

Twenty-six Colorado College students, accompanied by Dr. Kutsche and another advisor, will travel to a Navajo Indian reservation in Arizona during spring vacation to participate in a work camp.

The purpose of the camp is to stimulate understanding between the Anglo and the American Indian while working with them on a community development project. In the past two years other Colorado College work camps have helped to install water tanks and pumps for a constant water supply in residences and have improved surrounding areas by removing debris and planting pine trees. This year's project will remain unknown until the group arrives at the reservation.

For practical reasons, the camp decided to divide into two groups, which will live and work in separate locations. The students will live in provided shelters and cook their own meals. Plans are being made to visit several places of interest on the reservation.

The group wishes to express its appreciation to all five campus societies for generously donating enough money to enable two of the foreign students to go on the trip. The work camp offers them an interesting aspect of America, and their reactions and presence will be valuable to the other students.

Students going on the work camp include Barbara Morgan, Joe Wilcox, Sally Lentz, Ann Peters, Judy Hooker, Tictia Soli, Enrie Le Melle, Jim Clark, Va. Chounarmany, Solomon Nkwane, Susan Caudill, Carol Rymer, Lynda Spickard, Sue Phillips, Harris Sherman, Becky Long, Gretchen Swan, Cammy Riggs, Marilyn Smith, Wendy Millard, Magda Findeisen, Aisha Youssef, Brecharr Hemmaphard, John Hetzel, Mike Pleasants, and Suzanne Armstrong.

Gold Diggers Ball

Why should you gals ask someone to the Gold Digger's Ball? 1) It will be held in Rastall Center, no transportation worries! 2) It costs a mere $1.00 per couple, a small price to pay for 3 hours of dancing and fun! 3) It is informal, you don't have to worry about whether or not you can still fit into that formal! 4) It gives you your big chance of the year to ask that certain boy out! So don't forget, Friday, April 5, from nine to twelve, the Gold Digger's Ball!

ASSISTANT FOOD SERVICE MANAGER Carl Glaser stakes his reputation on the choice cut of meat offered to Robert Torrens, food service manager. Steak is henceforth to be served each Wednesday evening.

CC Gourmets Now to Dine on Steak!

The Food Service Department is pleased to announce a new policy, which has been in continuous effect for the past five weeks. Every Wednesday night, steaks are being served for your dining pleasure. A sincere effort is being made to please the sensitive palate of CC students. Sirloin, filet, T-bone, a thousand steaks a week, sending up a belly rumbling aroma from the CC kitchens every Wednesday evening.

This is indeed an uncommon expense for any college of any size and our student body should indeed be proud of our Food Service Department for making this unique weekday meal available to us.

Area School Teachers Attend Institute at CC

The rapidly changing world of science brings 33 Pikes Peak area elementary school teachers back to the laboratory at Colorado College every Saturday morning to participate in a program designed to keep them abreast of current developments in several fields.

They are attending the National Science Foundation In-Service Institute in General Science conducted at CC under the direction of Prof. Richard G. Beidleman of the zoology department.

The Saturday morning sessions are divided into classroom lectures, laboratory exercises and field work for the teachers, who represent 20 schools.

College professors demonstrate various methods for effectively presenting the material to elementary school pupils, and give lectures on new developments in several major fields of science including biology, meteorology, geology, astronomy, chemistry and physics.

Prof. Beidleman said the course is designed to provide elementary school teachers and supervisors of grades four through six with an up to date orientation in the scientific disciplines; to discuss ways in which scientific concepts and materials may be introduced into the elementary grades; and to afford elementary school participants an opportunity to discuss science teaching problems with regional colleagues and college scientists.

Counselor of Trade Institute Will Interview CC Students

On Monday, April 1, 1963, Mr. Lars Hals-Hagan, Career Counselor of The American Institute for Foreign Trade, will be on campus to talk about the work of that postgraduate school, and to interview students who may be interested in assignments overseas. His visit is of particular interest in view of the fact that 27 students from The Colorado College have taken the intensive course of study given at The American Institute for Foreign Trade. The positions gained by past CC students range in location from Chile to Mexico to Spain. The types of jobs vary from exploration to banking.

The courses of study at the Institute prepare the students for international commerce and associated activities by providing trained personnel to serve business and government throughout the world, and they do much toward helping international understanding. To date, over 1400 graduates have been placed in posts abroad, and an ever larger number are in the services of American corporations in the United States having large foreign interests or affiliates.

The curriculum emphasizes three major fields: language, area studies and international commerce. The course is rigorous, with three work, and the balance on a very full schedule divided between the area studies and the technical side of foreign trade.

Dr. Hans Kohn and the United Nations

By David Greenberg

Hans Kohn was the guest speaker for the Tuesday, March 11, all college assembly. Dr. Kohn, a noted historian and author, spoke on The United Nations and the Age of World Wars. He began his remarks by noting that after each of the two World Wars an international organization has been established, in an effort to promote world peace. The first of these organizations was the League of Nations, which was domto failure by its emphasis on the status quo and almost complete European domination. Dr. Kohn here remarked that it was indicative of the League's nature that it was centered in Geneva, an old, very traditional, European city which has not, for a good many years, kept pace with the changing times. During the years 1938 and 1939 the failure of the League was so complete that no one even thought of appealing to it for averting war as a possibility. In Mr. Kohn's own words, it was "a corpse."

The United Nations, on the other hand, is a "dynamic" organization that has not been dominated by European countries. Whatever its shortcomings, the UN has provided communications between 110 different countries, something unique in the history of nations. It has also played a large role in the relatively smooth transition of many Asian and African nations from colonies to statehood.

Mr. Kohn believes, our greatest hope for world peace. Here again Mr. Kohn returned to his analysis of location. The UN is located in New York City which he believes is "the most dynamic city in the world." Like New York, the UN is a dynamic organization, one that is to meet and accept the changes inherent in the twentieth century. Mr. Kohn closed his lecture by remarking that from what he has seen of the twentieth century so far, it has been an age of "marrow." Yet he feels that it will be remembered as the greatest century ever, because of its historical action in providing a place for discussion and decisions of many nations, both old and new that have come into the forefront of world politics and international relations.

The Colorado College Athletic Committee has been investigating several colleges with whom we might form an athletic conference to replace or complement the Rocky Mountain Conference. Doane College is one such school currently under investigation.

Doane College is a 4-year liberal arts school situated in Crete, Nebraska, about 25 miles southwest of Lincoln, with an enrollment of about 346. It is a Congregational school, and requires that all students take a limited number of religion and church philosophy classes, and attend all chapel meetings. A total of sixteen majors are offered, including science and physical education. To graduate from Doane, a student must have a C-plus average on 128 academic hours. Eligible athletes are required to take 12 hours, and must get at least a C average on 8 of these 12 hours, excluding the so-called "activity hours" given to athletes for playing basketball, football or tennis.

The physical education curriculum includes courses such as "The History and Principles of Physical Education" and "Theory of Coaching Football and Basketball," a course offered both fall and spring semesters.

Doane has six full professors and ten Ph.D.'s on its faculty of 41. The music department claims six members of the faculty while the Phys. Ed. department runs a close second with five.

Doane gives athletic scholarships in addition to its academic scholarships and carries on a vigorous athletic program for its size, especially in football.

Track Team Looks To Spring Season

The CC track team finished its brief indoor season this weekend with the second annual Rocky Mountain Conference indoor track meet at Golden. Colorado College is the defending champion and will be out to retain their title. Coach Flood is placing his hopes on the corps of returning lettermen, although the nucleus of this year's squad is made up of freshmen and sophomores. In the past two years CC has finished second in conference both times, and according to early workouts it looks like another fine year.

In the sprints hopes rest on Mike Magruder, a promising sophomore, who has run a 9.9 sec. 100, and on stalwart returning lettermen Bob Broyles and Norm Liden, who will run the 220, 440, and 880 as well. In the middle distances freshmen Tom Jervis and Lyle Hayes, and sophomore Bob Grant comprise the quarter-milers; Jay Schieler, Bob Schuyler and junior Mike Durfee are strong in the 880; Tony McGinness and Dave Smith, both sophomores, will battle the long distances.

Last year's mile relay team was conference indoor as well as outdoor champions. Two of the members of that team, Broyles and Liden, along with Magruder and Hayes, should provide an even stronger team this year.

The field events this year will see the addition of two new events as far as RMC competition is concerned—the hop-step and jump broad jump and the javelin. Regular broad jumpers Abiodun Afunja, Rick Carrol, and Glen Clifford will be trying the hop-step and jump for the first time.

In other field events Harry Boyd and Steve Sabol, two of the best shotputters in the conference, along with Craig Welch should do well in all weight events. In the pole vault, Flood has been impressed with the early workouts of Mike Sabom and Jim Walman, both freshmen. The field events are rounded out with high jumper Mike Norris and the all-around utility of Farrell Howell.

Hockey Review

By Charles Hample and Charles Gibson

The Colorado College hockey team has completed its most successful season in several years. Coach Frasca cited team play and aggressive spirit as main factors in compiling a 12-11 win-loss record.

The team showed early in the season that they were not the doormats of previous years by sweeping the opening series of the season against McMasters. The Tigers continued their winning ways through the pre-season games, losing only in the finals of the Boston tournament, in overtime, to Harvard.

This pre-season momentum continued into league play as they swept the opening league series with a high-riding Michigan State club.

The team was still in playoff contention as they came into the second Minnesota series at Minneapolis. In the first game of this crucial series with the Tigers leading 5-3, Alex Yankovich broke his leg. The team was forced to play with only two front lines in the third period of the game. Minnesota was then able to wear down the team and win 6-5. In looking back on the season, Coach Frasca said that this was the turning point. The hockey team was never able to regain the momentum they lost in that series, although they were able later to put together their best game of the season in beating DU 6-5 at the Broadmoor arena.

Coach Frasca said concerning the outlook for next year, that although we will lose all of our experienced defensemen, we will have good lines and a good seasoned goalie.

COME TO THE

Kingdom of Breckenridge

FRIDAY THRU SUNDAY,
MARCH 22, 23 AND 24
— for the most colorful winter sports events of the year!

- By a slip of the legal pen in Territorial Times, the Breckenridge area was not officially admitted to the U.S. until 1898. At that time citizens "claimed" the right to be a free and independent Kingdom for 3 days each year. This independence is to be celebrated Friday, Saturday and Sunday — the Ullr Dag Festival.
- This is the first festival commemorating Ullr (Nordic god of winter and "hazel," also Ullr is recognized as "the patron of skiers, the world over. Ullr is Nordic for "days.")
- Friday — fireworks and torchlight parade on Peak 8, Ullr Dag parade down Main Street, with floats and bands, wear a costume!
- Saturday — uphill slalom, 3-legged races, kids' races, ice show and ski clown act, gala Coronation Ball.
- Sunday — dog sled racing and skiing, Open skiing, skating and bowling all day Saturday and Sunday, and over so much more!
- Ski 12 miles of newly-groomed slopes, trails and powder runs, novice to expert.
- Bring your friends for a great time, great food and after-ski entertainment.

Plan now to come up to the Kingdom of Breckenridge — just for the FUN of it!

TEAM-CAPTAIN GREGG SMITH REACHES to take the fall from Colorado State College opponents. Smith has been chosen as a member of the All-Rocky Mountain Conference team.

Smith Named All-Conference

Colorado College guard and captain Gregg Smith climaxed two years of successful play on the Tigers by being named to the All-Rocky Mountain Conference Basketball team. Gregg, who graduated this spring with a degree in education, came to CC in 1953 after playing two years at Pueblo Junior College. In his second year at Pueblo, Gregg was a team guard on a team that won the National Junior College Basketball Championship.

A member of Phi Gamma Delta, Gregg also belongs to Black Gold. He comes from Canon, Colorado where he graduated from high school in 1953.

"Sparrow, or Smitty," as he is affectionately called, has had a highly successful career at CC, leading the team in points in both of his years here. His last game came this year when he scored 25 points against Western State. He finished second in the conference with a 12.9 points per game average. His scoring was and all-around good play who sorely missed next year. When asked about this last season, Gregg stated, "The state didn't turn out as well as I wanted it to, but everyone was real happy about our two wins against Western State."

Baseball Year Opens April 6

Colorado College will open its 20-game baseball schedule on April 6. Jerry Carle, Colorado College athletic director and head baseball coach, said some 35 potential players turned out for the first baseball meeting.

Practice will start immediately, Carle said. The squad will be trimmed to 18 men shortly before the opening double-header against the Colorado State Penitentiary team at Canon City on April 6. The 1963 Tiger Baseball schedule is:

Academics Not Everything Benezet Says in Speech

Colorado College President Louis T. Benezet delivered an address at the Westminster College honors dinner, held on February 14, at Fulton, Missouri.

He stated that "factors such as personal resourcefulness and social initiative can contribute as much as academic performance to success in any field including the academic." He said these factors "complement rather than compete with academics." President Benezet said the college should be a training ground for these factors.

"The individual in college ought to broaden as an individual person of interest and adaptability," he said. "At the same time he ought to grow in his understanding of what community means and how communities need strengthening in order that individuals both grow and to come may gain greater strength from them."

President Benezet questioned the commonly accepted theory that academic honors are the most valid pre-selectors for leadership in society. "I am not content," he said, "that our current academic process by itself will have the most to do with deciding whether life in the remainder of this country will become progressively rewarding or intolerable."

He said personal resourcefulness and social initiative are two factors which keep coming back to us from the rest of the world as markers for success in life. "By personal resourcefulness," President Benezet said, "I mean a range of both mental and emotional qualities having to do with genuine individuality, breadth of mind; breadth of esthetic appreciation; originality and creativity; and a certain hard self-reliance in forming and sticking to one's personal judgments. Qualities like these contribute to any society an interesting and adaptable person." Such a person "learns fast because he has been exposed to a variety of experience. He is widely useful because he can appreciate different contributions and points of view. He has something to give because he has already worked at producing new ideas, and he has leadership potential because he is willing to stand on his own ground, having carefully prepared that ground to stand upon.

"In the other area, social initiative, we look for the person who accepts as given the fact that man lives in, by and for the human community," Dr. Benezet said. "The person we need most today is the man who not only can adapt to social circumstances without compromising his essential individual integrity, but who can actually contribute to the making of forms for the better operation of society."

He noted that there is a surprising resistance on the academic scene to the proposition that education should include social responsibility and the curbing of self. "Everyone wants to be free, but what kind of world will it give us if we produce a generation of intellectuals with no impulse but either to ignore or to tear each other apart in the veritable jungle of intellectual self-service?" He noted that it has become fashionable to consider such campus activities as student government, college publications and class organization a sub-intellectual distraction from the main business of learning.

"We are pursuing academic goals as if we are pursuing academic goals so hard on many campuses that it has become considered a matter of academic survival to reject the time required for community affairs. Yet in view of not only the world's needs, but the structure of society itself I have doubts that such preclusion of community is realistic. The world will not let us be so gloriously preoccupied, even though academic preoccupation may appear to us as the highest of human attainments."

Dr. Berkove Does Research On Writer, Ambrose Bierce

Dr. Lawrence Berkove has returned from a literary expedition into San Francisco with a rich haul in unpublished articles and fictional sketches by the famed American short story writer and satirist, Ambrose Bierce.

Berkove, assistant professor of English, is gathering material for a book on Bierce and his concern with mind and man. Professor Berkove did much of his research with a camera in the San Francisco Public Library, the morgue of a San Francisco newspaper, the library, at the University of California at Berkeley, and in the collections of San Francisco scholars during Colorado College's month-long mid-winter vacation. He is now analyzing several hundred photographs of letters, stories, and articles by Bierce who disappeared mysteriously in 1913.

"I hope to be able to throw new light on Bierce as a serious thinker and literary craftsman," Berkove said. "Bierce is generally considered bitter and grimly facetious, but this is not correct. He was a very serious writer who was profoundly concerned with mankind."

In order to place Bierce's unpublished works into historical context Dr. Berkove has been reading San Francisco periodicals published during the last 30 years of the 19th century. The CC professor noted that most of Bierce's works profited greatly by the sensitive editing of the author. Bierce revised many of the newspaper and magazine pieces when they were collected and re-published.

Professor Berkove, who holds a Ph.D. degree in English from the University of Pennsylvania, joined the faculty at Colorado College in 1962. He previously taught at DePaul University, Skidmore College and at Pennsylvania.

1963 CC Wilson Fellows Are Largest Recent Group

The five Woodrow Wilson Fellows named from Colorado College last week represent the largest such group from CC to win the coveted award in several years.

In the past, Colorado College has received an average of two to three Wilson Fellowships per year out of approximately fifteen applicants. This year's five winners out of thirteen applicants therefore show a surprisingly high proportion.

The fellowships, designed to aid superior students in preparing for careers in college teaching, provide for full tuition at the graduate school of the Fellow's choice plus a stipend of $1,500 and dependency allowances.

Admission to the Wilson program, established after World War II at Princeton University, and now largely supported through Ford Foundation funds, depends concurrently on both faculty recommendation at the undergraduate level and on an interview conducted by the Woodrow Wilson Foundation.

Before a student may make formal application, he must be favorably recommended to the Foundation by a faculty member at his college or university. These applicants are then screened by the foundation, and a small number, usually about one-half, are selected for interviews. Of those interviewed, one-half to one-third are awarded the fellowship, and perhaps another one-third receive honorable mention.

The Wilson Fellowship is one of a number of graduate awards locally administered by the Committee on Graduate Fellowships. Associate Professor of English Neale R. Reinitz, chairman of the committee, said several programs are under the responsibility of the faculty committee, which is concerned with national awards cutting across departmental lines.

Among these awards are: National Science Foundation Fellowships, for which Dr. Richard Bradley is specifically responsible; the Fulbright Fellowships, under the local direction of Dr. Paul Bernart; the National Defense Fellowships awarded under Title IV of the National Defense Education Act, represented here by Dr. Glenn Brooks. The Danforth program is the specific concern of Mr. Kenneth Burton.

Several cases of noisy and often drunken behavior over the past few weekends have been noted in the dining room. Such behavior disregards the rights of other students to eat their meals in a pleasant atmosphere. In the future this behavior by individuals or by groups will be dealt with by the Student Conduct Committee as cases in which penalties will be adjudged.—The Student Conduct Committee

Notice!

You are hereby informed that the Associated Women Students of Colorado College are sponsoring an informal dance entitled the Gold-digger's Ball to be held in Rastall Center on the 5th day of the month of April in the year 1963 from nine until 12 in the evening. All women students are hereby invited to attend with their escorts. The price is $1.00 per couple and tickets will be sold at the door. There will be a band for your dancing pleasure and food will be provided for your eating pleasure. A King will be chosen the first week after vacation to reign over the activities of the evening.

Preparation Underway For Parents Weekend

Preparations are underway for the 6th annual Parents' Weekend, April 25-28. A full agenda is completed which will allow parents an even greater opportunity to see the campus and visit with their student.

The festivities will begin Thursday afternoon with registration and an informal coffee in the evening. On Friday, classes will be open to parents all day and professors will plan classes that will attempt to give parents an insight to their course. Dorms and Creek houses will be open in the afternoon so parents can wander through at their leisure. Students will have an opportunity to show parents another side of CC life by participating in the FAC in the Hub in the afternoon. That evening from 8:00 to 10:00 will be the highlight, for some, of the Parents' Weekend—the long prepared for Song Fest, in which the fraternities and sororities and other campus groups compete.

Saturday classes will be open again to all interested visitors as will be the dorms. At 11:00 will be the Convocation at which President Benezet will speak. That afternoon will provide another opportunity for students to take part in the Parents' Weekend by competing in the Tournament of Cycles. This event may be entered individually or in teams. The afternoon will culminate with a hike at 3:00 led by Mr. Robert Ornes, an expert on the Pikes Peak region. At 4:15 will be the Faculty-Parent-Student dinner followed by entertainment by various students and later by the Blue Key Dance.

This year's Parents' Weekend promises to be an exciting fun-filled four days for parents and students alike. It is hoped that all students will urge their parents to come, for this is the best possible opportunity for parents to visit their student at the same time they can campus, visit classes, and have a very enjoyable time. But it is necessary that we give some of our time to show the visitors as much of the campus life as we can. Whether students have parents present or not we will not hinder them from participating in the FAC and in Song Fest Friday, or the Tournament of Cycles, the Convocation, and church service. Let's take the initiative and turn out in full force for Parents' Weekend, April 25-28.

Committee chairmen for Parents' Weekend are:

Chairman, Walt Hecox; Registration, Ann Courlay; Food Arrangements, Matt Bailey, Linda Wangerin; Convocation and Entertainment, Mark Bellock; Open House and Visitors, Amy Raser; Blue Key Dance, Bill Hybl; Song Fest, Bill Ward, Jim Lucey; Publications and Publicity, Ed McCarrall; Faculty Advisors, Lance Herrick and Don Oden.

LETTERS TO THE EDITORS

I am moved to comment on the articles in last week's issue of the TIGER dealing with college's Civil Defense program, with particular reference to shelters and the alternate plan for evacuation.

The concern with Civil Defense both in the nation as a whole and on this campus in particular is a natural and understandable one. However, proposals resulting from this concern are often dangerously unrealistic.

For example, some people have proposed shelters against the blast effects and heat of nuclear bombs. However, there seems to be no possibility of providing adequate shelters of this type, especially in the large centers of population. Furthermore, the impact of such a program on our economy would probably be greater than that of our present arms program. (For a discussion of this question, see the pamphlet, "A National Shelter Program: Its Feasibility and Its Cost," written by Victor Pasich, Seymour Melman, John Ullman, Otto Klineberg, and other technical experts in this field.)

For this reason, Civil Defense officials have shifted their emphasis to fallout shelters. They have thus drawn our attention away from the dangers of blast and heat. As General Piel, the publisher of Scientific American, put it in a speech entitled, "The Illusion of Civil Defense": "Since fallout is the only effect that Civil Defense can cope with, you find the subject of fallout emphasized in Civil Defense. With public anxiety thus directed to fallout, the administration Civil Defense program promises fallout protection. The federal effort to establish fallout shelters in the central cities will provide such protection if fallout is the hazard to which the population is exposed. If not, these shelters will trap the urban populations in blast and fire."

Now even if the fallout hazard is considered apart from blast and heat (a questionable approach), it is doubtful whether the existing or proposed shelter program at Colorado College and elsewhere is adequate to deal with it. In the Consumer Reports of January, 1962, Ralph Lapp and the editors discuss the requirements for adequate fallout protection, and these are enormous, involving a protection factor of 1,000 (Rastall provides 100) and provisions for at least two months for all occupants (CC shelters provide for two weeks).

As for the idea of evacuation, based upon the reading of a theoretical "Tension Barometer," even if it were feasible this would be an extremely dangerous plan which, if followed by a large enough number of people, might well trigger a "first strike" on our adversary, thus bringing about the very catastrophe we seek to avoid.

My own conviction is that the Civil Defense program as presently conceived increases rather than decreases the probability of nuclear war, by giving either a false sense of security or an "self-fulfilling prophecy." The extreme quantitative increase in the destructive power of weapons since 1945 has resulted in a qualitative change in the nature of war itself. In the fact of this historically unprecedented change, our only adequate defense is to prevent the occurrence of such a war.

America's colleges and universities, including Colorado College, could play a unique role in this endeavor, first by squarely and realistically facing the probable devastation resulting from such a war, and secondly, by wholeheartedly devoting their intellectual energies, both within the classroom and outside it, to the discovery of practical steps toward a warless world.

Dear Editor:

When I came to CC last September, I found that my expectations of this institution were to be disappointed. I expected to find students with whom you could talk and exchange points of view. I thought that you would find students who were interested in some field, and through that interest, be able to transcend the usual generalizations you hear in high school. Perhaps, more than anything, I expected to find people who would think beyond the basic, rehearsed, and obsolete gossip of everyday life.

Instead, upon arrival, I found freshmen being hazed, and the rest of the college (with particular reference to the Black and Gold) hazing the freshmen. We were told that this process of initiation would get us into the right spirit. More specifically, we were told that this would get us into the CC spirit. What is the CC spirit?

Our college spirit, in a word, is non-involvement. We were told by a member of an athletic squad that if we kept our mouths shut, and our eyes closed, we would have a happy four years here. Above all, we were not to learn too much, but rather partake in our wonderfully planned social events until it was time to rush. Then we could forget about reality.

Go into a classroom sometime and listen. Look at the facial expressions. There are no questions of importance being asked. All you can hear is the professor talking to people who are tape recorders. They accept what is said, and later when the test comes, they feed back the same ideas regardless of their own opinions. When someone tries to ask a question, you hear snickers of disapproval behind you. I believe a professor could tell fifty minutes of lies, if he desired, and not even be called down for it in some of the courses I have attended.

It is more important to the CC community to decide whether or not a girl should be allowed to stay in a motel with or without her parents' permission, even though she has a blanket permission to leave school whenever she wants from her parents, than it is to read a common, ordinary newspaper.

The most important subjects (in terms of words spent) in this semester have been fraternities, the morals code, and discussing "who done it to whom." Few people seem to question the pledges they take in that momentous step of joining the utopian brotherhood of "studs," "individuals," or "good guys." Not many people bothered to think out a reasonable argument against the morals (I should say college) code. They merely abused it so badly that it had to die. Few people respect the private havens of their fellow students. No matter how intimate a conversation a person has, it is still censored by all.

This is not an academic spirit. It does not even approach the community I knew and the spirit I lived by in pre-military school. Perhaps our society forces us to colleges to corrupt the thirsty, ideological spirit and to turn to the worship of materialism and stupidity.

I choose to think this is not so. I think if we can find non-conformists, who don't conform to non-conformity; if we can find a new thirst for knowledge in our "affluent society"; and if we can find self-knowledge, we will be a far greater institution.

Gentlemen:

In regard to Mr. Anisgard's letter in the March 15 issue of the TIGER, I would like to make four comments. Please do not interpret this as a defense of the present ROTC program. I don't think the program is perfect, but I do not consider Mr. Anisgard's arguments valid.

First of all, I would like to check the list of Phi Beta Kappa members, assuming of course that he can neglect his duties for a period of cleaning a dormitory and polishing brass. I believe he will find three members of Beta Kappa in the advanced class of ROTC.

As to the comment about the ROTC staff not having college degrees, I ask Mr. Anisgard to consider the fact that ROTC is a training program, not an education course. Besides, the majority of the instructors in ROTC have college degrees. Of the actual instructors who have no college degree, they have some experience to teach in their respective fields.

Regarding choice of the ROTC course in ROTC, when an incoming male student chooses to join CC, he chooses ROTC for years. Therefore, he indeed has a choice. This situation remains less the status quo is changed.

I find Mr. Anisgard's point of total time spent on ROTC at CC. Either he has found some courses at CC or he has not learned how to properly manage equipment.

I realize there are many ways in which we can do most of us do not want to do, only because they are complicated. However, since national defense is of prime importance, I ask that our serving our required time in the service is but a small part of what we can do to show our appreciation for the tremendous love we receive as individuals from great society.

Dear Mr. Clapp:

Since the editors of our Voice have been on their hermitage contemplating highly intellectual subjects similar to the ones mentioned in your letter, i.e., "The All College Conference," "The Common Market," and "The Problem of Lack of Student Interest," they have unfortunately not been able to answer your proposed journal. These bottomless philosophical forays they left for their log-cabin haunts on the top of Pikes Peak were heard muttering the bibliophilic themes as you described in your letter to the editors. I was forced to my desk by the probable subject matter of this week's intellectual pursuit. The arts is an attempt by the editors to answer the question, "whether or not there is any indefiniteness, or real possibility and impossibility at Colorado College," and immediately I am struck by an important question: should and must be ported more thoroughly, not only for student body, faculty and administration, but especially for your floor. Slocum Hall. I acquired a list of the topics of this week's feature other than the feature mentioned above, and discovered that they are inadequate as depicted. Therefore, because I sympathize with the editors who are struggling with more weighty problems, I shall attempt to satisfy your request and fill in the "News" which will be left off the forthcoming issue.

It was learned that:

1) Joe College drank seven one-half beers Saturday afternoon and was still able to be on campus for his date Maude.

It was estimated that there were:

1) 4163 cups of coffee purchased at the "Hub" last week.
2) The athletes of the campus are finding "Tiger's Milk" more practical for physical fitness than their previous prescription peyote.
3) 83 and 3/4 feet of the ROTC driveway was found on the ROTC driveway after the ROTC Ball and

A college community will never mirror the outside world. It will always be a refraction of the strengths and weaknesses of the society it stands apart from. Beyond this, the college itself has an image that it wants to project and this only complicates the picture further.

Of course, the college always hopes to be the opposite of a fun-house mirror—distorting till it creates a better reality. Unfortunately, as Dr. Mason points out in the Opinion column this week, if this is not done with care the institution, instead of improving on the outer reality, will have merely created an incubator to protect its students from it, and thus will ill-prepare them for the shocks that they will inevitably receive on graduation.

However, unlike the egg, the student is not irrevocably wedded to the incubator. He, too, is capable of interacting with the other aforementioned pressures in molding the image of the college to his liking. But it is in this factor that CC is singularly lacking. It is strange how little generalization the student makes from the classroom to the real world. What more classic example of pressure group potentiality could be wanted than the power relationship of the student to the administration and the faculty? What makes this possibility even more real here at Colorado College is that the students will not have to war for recognition of their right to a meaningful voice in school affairs against a recalcitrant hierarchy of school leadership. In fact, in many ways the administration has seemed far more militant and activist than the students, creating an ever-improved faculty and plant. But these improvements are only the machinery for a good academic environment, and so far the students, the essential ingredient, have failed to get the total output from this wealth of opportunity.

Why is this? It is because the student body speaks with a fragmented voice. On few campuses, I believe, do so few words, so badly defined (arty, jock, privatist), divide a college so irrevocably. Also, the student government's communications are so ineffectual in filtering down to the campus that their functioning as far as most students are concerned is as disaffected as a Kafka-esque directory. To see that this situation is not inevitable, it is only necessary to look at the extremely well-organized campus groups in Europe and Latin America to realize that students there do have an effective voice. To those who look at these groups with disapproval because of their nationalistic politics, it must be stated that organization does not necessarily equate with destructivism, and that in many countries, such as Norway, as Thordis Erickson can easily affirm, the students' groups' role has been an extremely constructive one.

I do not want to give the impression that the creation of an effective student organization will be easy on this campus. It will take a great deal of planning and effort by the students themselves, attributes which have been decidedly lacking here. But, if there are people who doubt the fact and the problem of the vestigial nature of student government, let them sit down and list the things that they know that this organization has done for them. Even those actually in student government, I believe, will be appalled at how little they know beyond their specific committees. It is only necessary to compare this with a prevalent theory in Political Science, purporting to explain democratic governmental action, to see the ambiguity of the situation. In this theory, all political action is created by the interaction of pressure groups with the governmental apparatus. Here, there is a government and a pressure group, but no communication between them. Is there any wonder that there is not more action?

As long as this situation is allowed to prevail, students here will find the college world ephemeral, for they will have been unable to harness enough force to move the machinery of the school towards goals which now, because of their fragmentation of ideals, can only seem unreal.

From the Chair

Student Policy Committee

By Jo Heller

The Student Policy Committee was created by the ASCC in April, 1962. Its duties include the formulation of non-academic policies and regulations of Colorado College, the review of policies and regulations of the various judicial organizations, and the publication of these policies as well as the functions and jurisdiction of the various judicial organizations. The committee meets at least once a month to handle the above duties. Its membership is representative of the judicial organizations.

This year, as you know, the committee attempted to formulate non-academic policy in the form of a code or standard. The committee has now decided that it should seek another method of formulating this type of policy. There are several other methods which the committee can use. One of these has been initiated at present to help clarify the jurisdiction of the judicial organizations. The Student Conduct Committee is considering a memorandum presented by the Student Policy Committee.

The Student Policy Committee is compiling a comprehensive and clear statement of the relations of the judicial organizations for publication in the Student Handbook. The committee has also presented a request to the ASCC and the Admissions Office expressing its concern and desire that a panel on the non-academic judicial organizations be presented to the freshmen during their orientation to further clarify the functions of these organizations to the incoming students.

During the first year the committee has discovered one way not to pursue its duty of formulating non-academic policies, but with this experience behind the committee it now has means open to it. The possibility of the presentation of another code still exists, but the committee can also attempt to work through the existing internal structure of the judicial organizations.

Publications Board

By Peigi Benham

The Publications Board, as the governing body of the publications, has the authority to elect or dismiss editors and business managers of the various Colorado College publications, as well as to set up stipends for the different positions. The Board sits in a controlling position with regard to the actions of all the CC publications, which include the Tiger, the Nugget, the Kinnikinnik, the Student Handbook, and the New Faces book. At the Honors Convocation each spring the Board gives two awards, the E. K. Cayford certificate, and the Publications Board certificate, to two students who have worked meritoriously with the various publications.

Official members of the board are three members from the ASCC, of whom one acts as Chairman; the editors and business managers of the Tiger, the editors and business managers of the Nugget and the Kinnikinnik, and a photographic editor. A faculty advisor and the Writer's Workshop chairman sit as ex-officio members of the board.

The board has recently held interviews and made appointments for the Nugget and Kinnikinnik positions, and has selected editors for the Student Handbook and for New Faces. Within the next two months by-law changes will be made and the recipients of the Publications awards will be selected. Chairman of the Publications Board is Peigi Benham, and any questions or suggestions should be referred to her.

Fine Arts Center Presents Short Films

The Fine Arts Center will present an evening of short films, Friday, March 22 at 8 p. m. in the music room. Admission at the door $1.00; college students, 70 cents. There will be one experimental film and several documentaries: "Montage Two: Ephemeral Two" is described by one of its makers, Dick Grove, formerly of the Fine Arts Center here and present director of the Wichita Art Museum as . . . "an experiment in combining visual images, poetry and music into a new kind of filmic whole. It fails, naturally, but scores a few points on the way to non-satisfaction enough to afford us some satisfaction. Poetry, photography, music, and acting are by Wichita (one of whom was only seconds old at the time). Narration is by an interesting "multi-level voice."

A 22-minute film in color called "China Under Communism" was made by John Strohm, author, editor and foreign correspondent who traveled over 7,500 miles through China in 1958—almost entirely without restrictions—observing and photographing all phases of Chinese life; 2,000 feet of uncensored film has gone into this document.

"The Hunter and the Forest," The well-known Swedish director Arne Sucksdorff has created this eight minute film which tells its story entirely through pictures, natural sounds and a musical score.

"The Pirogue Maker," Cited by six major film festivals, this 13 minute color film tells the story of Louisiana's Acadian craftsmen and how they use handmade tools to build a dugout canoe (pirogue) from a solid cypress tree.

"Legend of the Raven," Stone carvings used as character express authentic Eskimo folk art, and music. A 13 minute color film; winner of American Film Festival award.

Ghost Towns of Pikes Peak—in color, pictures the weather-beaten remains of the one thriving mining towns of our region. 12 minutes.

Plus (possibly) two other shorter films.

Five Symposium Topics Proposed

At a meeting on March 8th of interested students and faculty, the 15—some proposed topics for a 1964 Symposium were winnowed down to 5 main choices. The procedure to be followed now is to work out a fairly detailed statement for each one of these choices, indicating how a symposium on each would be organized, what kinds of programs, speakers, etc. could be included.

Then, at a meeting shortly after Spring Vacation, final recommendations will be made, so that we can work during the summer in a preliminary effort to arrange another top-flight Symposium for January, 1964.

The five "semi-final" choices which came out of the March 8th meeting are: 1) The Second World War; 2) The American Negro; 3) The Soviet Union; 4) Extremist beliefs and movements in America; and 5) The impact of automation on American society. Dr. Fred Sondermann, Symposium director, said that any ideas and suggestions on any of these five topics would be more than welcome, and that he would be particularly grateful for any ideas on what kinds of topics to include, possible speakers, cultural events, etc. Several of the topics (particularly No. 1, No. 3, and No. 5) lend themselves to inclusion of materials and speakers from many disciplines and all divisions of the College—the Humanities, Sciences, and Social Sciences.

Celebrated Painter to Be at Summer Session

Colorado College today announced the appointment of Herman Cherry, nationally known painter, as a visiting artist and teacher for the summer season, which gets underway June 17.

Summer Session art classes, which include theory and actual studio work, are offered by the college in cooperation with the Fine Arts Center.

At Colorado College, he will teach two courses in painting, "Fundamentals of Painting and Landscape Painting," an introduction to materials and methods, and an advanced "Painting Workshop." Formerly on the faculty of Columbia University and the University of California at Berkeley, Cherry now is teaching at the School of Visual Arts in New York City. His works have been exhibited at the Metropolitan Museum and the Modern Museum in New York City, the Denver Art Museum, the University of Illinois, Pennsylvania Academy in Philadelphia, Los Angeles Museum, and at European galleries in Paris and Athens. He has had one-man shows in galleries in New York City, Los Angeles, Hollywood, Pasadena, and Oakland.

Details about Cherry's courses and other art classes, including those in interpretation and criticism of art, graphic arts, sculpture, life drawing, modern art, and art teaching methods, may be obtained at the Fine Arts Center, telephone 634-5581, or from the Summer Session Director Fred A. Sondermann, Summer Session Office.

The Author

By Ellsworth Mason

Dante had God's justice, the stuff of conscience and obedience, but that degenerated into Hellfire and is now pretty well burned out. Then there was ethics, grounded in humanitarianism and still bearing a tinge of the Absolutes. Today the humanitarian tradition has pretty well run its course, and its end is as tangled and confused as a great river's delta. As for the Absolutes, we don't even invite them to cocktail parties.

Some people still have God, and some have the Absolutes, some have ethics. But by and large, with the dying of the great idealist traditions, we have shrunken to human law.

Now human law is a system of penalties—at its worst, a tooth for a nail, at its best, a realization that every action has a reaction which might react on the actor. With all its defects, the force of the human group, whether codified or loosely understood, seems to be the last substantial boundary around human behavior.

The loss of reasonable limits would not be so bad if we were not so confused about freedom. If you were to awake suddenly in the middle of a vast desert, you might think for a minute that he had freedom. There would be no speed laws, no legal age limits, no sex mores, no social conventions, no enforced inhibitions. There would also be no automobiles, no beer, no women (or men), no people, nothing worth being inhibited about.

Man is a very dependent being. Organically (shove him under water for five minutes and he does poorly) and socially (isolate him for a while and he goes mad), he is doomed from birth to a remarkable interdependence with many things. This very fact leads him to shape his life in a meaningful way. His search is not for untrammelled freedom, but for freedom, a meaningful interdependence with his physical, social and ancestral environment (meaning all of the past) that sets up a pattern of action, based on a pattern of values, within which he can feel consistently a certain degree of comfort and a certain degree of importance.

To reach a meaningful pattern of values, two things are of very great importance—guides in the form of ideal value systems, and a broadened form of self-control that enables a person to shape his behavior by directing his forces at will to whatever task he assigns them.

Ideals I have indicated no longer exist in a strong and commanding tradition, and the resulting confusion, a vacuum, makes this second element, which used to be called "character," assume much greater importance. The quality is largely the product of behavior learned by incurring penalties, and penalties are a crucial part of the process of maturing.

Unfortunately, a college environment removes penalties from the student's life, and it is very true that it insists that he must mature. It provides agencies to feed, house, protect, instruct, wipe noses and provide bail.

Colleges notice that the student is passive in most of these activities so they whip up a fury of active activities into which students are urged to achieve maturity. But these too are stripped of penalties. You can turn out a lousy newspaper (we're doing pretty well this year for a change) and lose the editorship, and still get an accolade in the yearbook. Merely making decision does not produce maturity; it can actually produce greater immaturity.

The maturing comes from having to back up decisions in a responsible way, and it is extremely difficult in the unreal college world to establish conditions where decisions have this crucially important effect of coming home to roost, of kicking the decider in the chops.

Student affairs are frequently riddled with bad decisions, mismanagement, and neglect and not only does no one care usually no one is aware of these facts. And so, the necessity of maturing in a paternalistic environment in our culture at this point in history places a heavier than usual responsibility on the student as an individual.

In a condition where none urge themselves on him, he must seek out for himself some pattern of values that seem to make general sense, reconstruct them to fit him, and wear them to see how they serve. In a highly permissive culture where individuals are black demons (they frustrate Motherhood), he must establish a system of limitations on his own behavior, and this at a later age than formerly (they were cuffed into us by the age of five, or else we were doomed to be secondaries the rest of our life). And these two very difficult, highly complex, deeply individual processes must go on without a great deal of assistance from the social environment.

Small wonder that they are postponed so often until the years after college, when a series of kicks in the face have convinced us that life is earnest and real and must be shaped if we are not to remain a leaping bundle of impulses.

Basic Questions on Civil Defense

By Harris Sherman

In response to the defense of a Civil Defense program in last week's TIGER, certain basic questions must now be raised. This article intends to be briefly provincial in considering the Colorado Springs Civil Defense program, and then concentrate more on the nationwide concept of Civil Defense and its various implications.

Exception must first be taken to an article written by Miss Becky Powell (last week's TIGER) defending the obsolete notion of effective blast shelters. Miss Powell urged the construction of well-built underground sites capable of defending the citizen against the fire and blast threat of nuclear weapons. The "effective protection" Miss Powell referred to is completely fallacious, and dangerous so, for adequate or even partial protection from a nuclear explosion is totally impossible if the warhead is on target. Miss Powell also ignored the financial considerations that accompany "blast shelter" construction. The formation of such sites would cost infinitely more than the present fallout shelter program, perhaps even matching the money spent on the arms race.

Shelters Offer Solution

The advocates of fallout shelters offer a far more reasonable, expedient, practical solution to the problem. Fallout shelters, as explained by Colorado College Civil Defense Director Richard Kendrick, are not designed to withstand atomic detonation, but rather intended to protect the citizen from aftermath effects, most notably radioactivity. By remaining in heavily protected basements stocked with survival kits, including food and medicine, the individual hopefully could survive, at least, through the critical periods of radioactivity.

Unfortunately, Colorado Springs may not be one of those locations blessed by only the effects of radioactivity. It seems more probable that the city and Cheyenne Mountain Zoo will be under a 300-foot crater caused by a good-sized enemy warhead. For those who consider Cheyenne Mountain an adequate discouragement to adversary warheads aimed at NORAD, they might well consider the use of super-thermonuclear weapons, ranging in the 20-50 megaton category, as a sufficient enemy response to NORAD's retreat under the mountain. Let no one doubt that the complete removal of that beautiful mountain and its zoo will come if a 50 megaton bomb hits anywhere near this area. It is also probable that the modern inter-continental ballistic missiles are notorious for coming quite close to their intended target, at times traveling from 6,000-8,000

Peace Target Area

Colorado Springs is the center of the North American Defense System, and will, by necessity, become a primary target for our potential opponent if he intends to guarantee the success of his second strike capability. Ironically, it would be nice to feel safe in the basement of Palmer while enemy warheads descended around us. Perhaps one missile intended for Colorado Springs might even drift off course. But, if this area remains critical to our defense system, our opponent most likely will send up to five missiles bound for Cheyenne Mountain, significantly reducing their chance of error.

If Colorado College happened to be a small liberal arts institution on the Kansas plains, I would wholeheartedly support a fallout program. But these days, Colorado Springs seems as attractive as Manhattan or Washington.

Nevertheless, one may legitimately ask whether a fallout program is better than nothing. There are two answers to this, both dealing with the Civil Defense idea on a nationwide basis. First, it seems that if the national Civil Defense program were able to provide fallout shelters for every American citizen (which is its goal), this could possibly provide the sense of security and safety we are all looking for. Yet, this very conception of assurance might eventually be the catalyst of a catastrophic nuclear war. One only has to read a Herman Kahn's Thinking About the Unthinkable to visualize the use of thermonuclear weapons as a national policy if the total assets would outweigh the culminating liabilities. Kahn strongly recommends a broad Civil Defense program to cut down on our liability.

False Security

History has repeatedly verified that wars begin when nations no longer fear the consequences of war, or at least contemplate the possible fruits of victory. It is only after dreadful loss of life, property, and time that the belligerents usually become aware of war's absurdity and devastation. If Civil Defense provides enough of a security illusion to justify the increase in the probability of a nuclear war, then the concept becomes a serious detriment to our aspirations for world peace.

One last point must be made. The Civil Defense advocates who rightfully claim that their program provides us with some protection during the interim before the peace is reached. But if it is assumed that if the money presently spent for shelter construction were allocated instead for progress in peace research, the path to peace might be far shorter. For example, present tests on negotiations at Geneva are temporarily halted due to the failure of photographic equipment to conclusively differentiate earthed wives from waves propagated by underground nuclear explosions. This present test is of such extensive research if so much money were spent on the technical questions. Besides the technical questions, there are economic research, there are hundreds of other areas that need elaborate investigation before disarmament can be realized. We have not seriously studied the economic effects of disarmament and how our secondary industries will be transformed and rehabilitated from war-time production. We have not explored the workings and effects of world laws that international legislation. We have not devised adequate methods of extensive inspection to facilitate total disarmament.

Research in peace is in the embryo stages. Here is where the most expeditious path toward peace may be found. The Civil Defense adherents give us some protection in the interim stage—how long is the interim to last? Could this financial assistance be spent in a more beneficial way? Or would a faulty Civil Defense program convince our enemies of our weakness, consequently encouraging aggression? Would our treatment underground force our enemies to use larger, more powerful weapons? These are important questions when considering the validity of any Civil Defense program—questions that should be given before any support can be given.

New Type of Warfare

Candid Opinion on Biological Warfare

By Tony Gaskill

Prior to the end of World War II, there was one subject, atomic warfare, which no one in military circles talked about. Today there is another subject which no one really wants to bring some of the pertinent facts on this subject into the open.

Biological weapons are classed as strategic weapons. That is they are primarily for use against populations rather than armies. They may also be used against the agricultural economy of a country and thus reap destruction in other ways. Thus they have a wide range of destructive versatility.

All biological weapons are selected to meet certain standards. These standards are met by a process of genetic selection using modern techniques. Among the standards are: 1) small amounts of the agent are highly lethal, 2) the disease produced could not be prevented by present sanitation measures or rapid immunization, 3) the agent could not be easily identified, and 4) the agent would not be susceptible to any known antibiotics. Among the disease-producing agents being contemplated for use are those which cause typhus, bubonic plague, Asiatic cholera, small pox, hoof and mouth disease, and potato blight. Again it should be stressed that these agents will be genetically changed so as to make them more lethal than their natural counterparts.

The question we must ask is, is there a defense? Unfortunately, the answer is, at the present time, no. All defenses are based on one of two points, either protection by physical means, i.e. some kind of shelter with filtered air and water or, by either rapid identification of the agent and preparation of effective medical counter-measures. The latter is in direct contradiction to the requirements of an effective agent, and the former method is unavailable to the public at the present time. In any case, the civil defense planners have done very little in this area and at this time do not seem to be working in this direction.

One might ask, is it really possible that these weapons might be used? We know that the Russians are working on this kind of warfare, and we know that their production of weapons of this type is at least as great as our own. It is also clear that these weapons have certain advantages, such as the fact that they do not destroy buildings and materials. They are also cheap to produce and very efficient. As one of our own military officials put it, "Biological weapons are available and ready for use. They are an important part of our weapons system. It would seem timely, therefore, to make preparations for civil defense in this area as well as in the field of nuclear weapons."

Dean Reid Explains Building Expansion

Dean J. Juan Reid and Mr. W. Robert Brotsman recently presented some pertinent information concerning present and proposed building expansion on the campus. Dean Reid emphasized the impact that the new swimming pool and ice rink will have next year on the extra-curricular life of Colorado College students. Five months of the school year the ice rink will be available for varsity and freshman hockey practice, intramural hockey, skating lessons, and recreational skating. During the remainder of the year the area will be used for a variety of activities—tennis, square dancing, concerts, drama, etc. The swimming pool will enable many students to participate in varsity and intramural swimming. In addition to recreational swimming, more specialized activities such as water polo will be possible.

Dean Reid also mentioned the present planning of a new Men's Residence Hall. This will be of the most modern design and will be organized on a suite or apartment style in order to insure additional privacy and convenience.

Mr. Brotsman spoke of additional expansion that is now or soon will be under construction. The $100,000 addition to the heating plant is now being built. Experimental work is now in progress for new campus lighting as is planning for the renovation of Palmer Hall. High priority has been given to future plans for a new humanities building and a new health center. These buildings are being financed through the Ford Foundation matching program. By raising $5.5 million dollars by June, 1965, Colorado College will receive 2.2 million dollars from the Foundation. Mr. Brotsman optimistically reported that over one-third of the money has already been raised.

CC Geology Dept. Keeps Up with Change

Colorado College has revamped its geology curriculum in a long-range program designed to keep on the forefront of rapidly changing developments in the field.

"During the past five years," said Prof. William A. Fischer, chairman of the geology department, we have instituted a program of independent study, broadened the allied science requirements, reduced highly specialized courses, and re-emphasized the importance of field work."

Geology majors seeking a B.S. degree at Colorado College now are required to take between 40 and 44 semester hours of work in the department. In addition to geology courses, the B.S. degree candidates in the department must take eight hours of mathematics, eight hours of chemistry, eight hours of physics, plus eight more hours from one of these three fields.

Each senior in the department is required to conduct at least one semester of independent study. Some field work is necessary for all such projects.

Highly specialized courses have been reduced, because geologists find that industry prefers to provide this kind of training in its own way.

The program is paying off. For example, in the past six years 84 students have received degrees in geology at CC. Of these, 40 percent entered graduate schools to work toward advanced degrees in geology, and 30 percent were employed as professional geologists in oil and mineral industries.

Since 1957, Professor Fischer said, a moderate recession in the mineral industry has made the M.S. and Ph.D. degrees mandatory for professional geologists. Until then, the bachelor's degree was sufficient.

"Basically, the recession in the mineral industries has been good for us," Professor Grose said. "At the expense of quantity, we have gained a decidedly higher quality of students and more dedicated students. Certainly, our geology degree now represents a higher level of scholarship than it did five years ago."

The college had two advantages to start with: an outstanding and well-balanced geology faculty and an ideal location for field work.

In addition to Professor Fischer, a specialist in paleontology and geo-morphology, and Professor Grose, a petrologist and structural geologist, the department has Prof. Richard M. Pearl, a specialist in mineral and economic geology and author of 16 books, and Prof. John L. Lewis, a sedimentation specialist.

Physics Dept. Gains $1,500 Research Grant

The Hewlett-Packard Company has given the Colorado College physics department three electronic instruments valued at more than $1,500. To be used in study research at the independent college, the new equipment includes a digital oscilloscope, a sensitive single-trace oscilloscope, and a radio amplifier.

The equipment was presented to Colorado College by George Fredrick, manager of the Hewlett-Packard plant in Colorado Springs, who said, "We have been pleased to observe the completion of Olin Hall of Science and to see the exciting new opportunities these new quarters have created for our department. We hope the electronic instruments will be valuable in the future development of the facilities."

The instruments are designed for making high speed frequency measurements in such areas as research as plasma physics, atomic and nuclear physics, and solid state physics.

Professor Olson said the new equipment will enable time interval measurement accurate to 1/200 of a second over a wide

Curran Tackles Common Market

In Assembly on Tuesday, March 19, Professor Kenneth Curran, chairman of the departments of Business and Economics addressed himself, admittedly with some reluctance, to the knotty problem of "The Common Market." This is the economic union of six nations of western Europe—France, Italy, West Germany, Holland, Belgium, and Luxembourg—brought into being in 1958 through the Treaty of Rome, the culmination of the efforts of an international group of visionaries who felt themselves to be first Europeans, second members of any nationality.

The immediate aim of this union was the elimination of trade barriers between the member states in the form of tariffs, quantitative restrictions and restrictions of currency. Moreover hindrances to free migration and investment between member states were eventually to be done away with as well. The ultimate goal of the Common Market agreement is the formation of an economic unity, a United States of Europe, as it were.

1970 was set as the year by which all trade barriers between the member states are to have been completely lowered. But, in addition to this, there is a set of four-year targets: by 1962 tariffs were to have been uniformly lowered by 25%, 50% by 1966, and gone by 1970. In that tariffs have already been decreased 50% of what they were in 1958, the Common Market is operating somewhat ahead of schedule. However, existing barriers are to be maintained against the world outside.

To be gained from this economic union is a combination of nations richer than the present sum of its parts. By economic law, if barriers to trade are removed, each nation will tend to specialize and produce only what it can produce best. A second advantage is that a broader market means that business may be conducted on a larger scale. Big business is able to borrow capital more readily and more cheaply, and a broader market means heightened competition, with the subsequent elimination of inferior goods.

The penultimate goal is a political as well as economic union, reducing the possibility of war. The interests of the Common Market are to take precedence over the interests of any single states. This has proven to be the most problematic aspect of the agreement, for France as well as England feel that membership involves the surrender of too much sovereignty. As a result of the supra-national tug-of-war the structure of the common market is a compromise. It consists of the Commission of Nine—the "Brain Trust," whose members are chosen by all six nations, having at heart European rather than national interests—and the council of ministers, a body of six, which by representing the individual interests of each constituent, serves as a brake on the commission.

In face of the superior rate of growth in Common Market countries and the realization that she was quite dependent upon these countries as markets for exported goods, England, which had acted quite lukewarm toward the union at the time of its formation, applied for admission in July of 1961. She had no problem accepting the basic tenets of the Common Market, but her economic ties with members of the Commonwealth and her desire to maintain low domestic agricultural prices made membership problematic. England's attempts to enter were supported by the United States because, since the Common Market countries are our allies, we were eager to see the union strengthened by her presence. More-over without England the Common Market might be dominated by unstable France or unreliable Germany.

Both nations were severely disappointed when recently France announced her veto of British membership. De Gaulle apparently acted out of a variety of reasons: 1) He possibly had a vision of a restoration of Charlemagne's empire before him; without England, France could easily dominate the Common Market; 2) he would like to keep western Europe undefined by the anglo-saxon influences of Britain and the United States; 3) he believed that Europe would fare better as a third force between Russia and the U.S.

According to Dr. Curran, the U.S. must proceed, however, on the assumption that England will eventually be admitted. The other members besides France are eager for this, and opinion in France is not solidly behind De Gaulle in this matter. In order to make the best of the present situation, we must work unceasingly to get England in, and continue to negotiate for a mutual reduction of tariffs between ourselves and the members of the Common Market, seeking to maintain our close ties with those states which are at present our allies.

European Philosophers To Conduct Summer Seminar for Teachers

Eleven leading European philosophers will conduct a seminar in contemporary European philosophy for U.S. teachers and students of philosophy in Oxford, Paris, and Tübingen (West Germany), June 23 through July 17, 1963.

The seminar is jointly sponsored by the American University, Washington, D. C., and the Institute of European Studies, Chicago—headquartered nonprofit educational institution specializing in overseas study programs.

Institute and American University officials described the seminar as an effort to establish an exchange of ideas and working methods between U.S. and European philosophers and keep U.S. participants abreast of the latest trends in European philosophy.

Lecturers and seminar chairmen will include Prof. Jean Wahl of the University of Paris and the Ecole Normale Supérieure; and Prof. P. F. Strawson, F.B.A., M. A. Oson, fellow of University College Oxford.

Other European philosophers on the program are: Stuart Hampshire, University of London; Erich Heintel, University of Vienna; Friedrich Kaulbach, University of Münster-Westfalen; Paul Lorenzen, University of Kiel; Johannes Lotz, Berchmanns College; Anthony Quinton, New College, Oxford; Paul Ricoeur, University of Paris; Walter Schulz, University of Tübingen; and Hans Wagner, University of Bonn.

Lectures will be given most mornings during the program. Each will be preceded by a review and preparatory session for U.S. undergraduate participants. Afternoons will be devoted to informal meetings between U.S. and European philosophers.

Lectures delivered in other languages will be consecutively translated in English. In many cases, English transcripts will be available before each lecture.

The cost of the program to participants will be $100, including tuition, room, most meals and all transportation during the seminar. Transatlantic passage is not included, but may be arranged through the Institute.

Full details are given in an announcement available from the Institute of European Studies, 35 E. Wacker Drive, Chicago 1, Ill. The application deadline is March 29, 1963.

Publications Board Announces Editors

Publications Board announces the selection of Betsy Crockett as the editor of the 1964 annual. Her business manager will be Gerald Dorsey. Both are presently juniors at Colorado College. Betsy has worked on the Nugget for two years in assistant editorial positions, and is presently serving as vice-president of Alpha Phi sorority. Gerald is a member of Beta Theta Pi fraternity, has worked on the Nugget as advertising manager, and presently is serving as business manager for the publication.

Editors of the Student Handbook are Peter Bonavich and James Heckman. Both are sophomores and have worked on the Tiger both in the past and at the present time. Among new ideas which they have for the handbook are, more pictures of the campus, and a section on issues which have interested the campus during the preceding year.

Phil LeCuyer has been selected editor of the Kinnikinnik and Lynda Spickard as business manager. Phil is a freshman and has served as class commissioner and as a member of the Publications Board. Lynda, also a freshman, has worked on the Kinnikinnik this year as assistant business manager, and as business manager second semester.

Carol Wright will edit New Faces, the publication which introduces next year's freshman class

Peace Corps Schedules Placement Tests Mar. 23

Non-competitive placement tests for Peace Corps Volunteers will be given in 823 cities across the nation on Saturday, March 23.

Many college students will be off campus for Spring vacations, and Peace Corps officials hope the wide dispersal of testing locations will make exams available to Peace Corps applicants wherever they are.

The tests will begin at 8:30 a.m. at designated U.S. Civil Service Commission testing centers. On-campus testing sites will not be used except in instances designated by Civil Service.

To be eligible to take the exam, candidates must have either submitted a questionnaire to the Peace Corps, or must bring a completed questionnaire to the test site with them.

Questionnaires may be obtained from campus Peace Corps liaison officers or from any post office.

More than 6,000 successful applicants are now assigned to 50 countries in Asia, Africa and Latin America.

The number of Volunteers has increased 78 percent (from 2,816 to 5,009) since last June 30. The Peace Corps expects to assign 4,000 more Volunteers by the end of this year.

All applicants must be U.S. citizens who are at least 18 years of age. There is no upper age limit. Married couples without dependent children may serve if they both qualify for the same overseas project.

Don't Forget the Goldiggers Ball

The "peyote cult" will be the subject of a free public lecture Thursday, April 4, at 8:15 p.m. in Perkins Hall. Speaking will be Omer C. Stewart, professor of anthropology, University of Colorado. Stewart is the leading authority on this religious organization among the Ute Indians and elsewhere, and has appeared as witness for the tribe in court cases attempting to legalize the use of the peyote cactus.

Engineering Dept. To Be Broadened

Prof. Harold Polk, chairman of the engineering department, announced last week that Colorado College has broadened its pre-engineering curriculum to include electrical, mechanical and civil engineering. Polk explained that pre-engineering students who attend the college for three or four years before entering a school of engineering will now be able to select a field of engineering while still an undergraduate. The engineering students will take courses in drafting, descriptive geometry, mechanics (both statics and dynamics), electric circuit analysis, thermodynamics, and heat engineering, with an elective available in surveying. Also recommended in the revised curriculum are 24 semester hours of mathematics and 24 of chemistry and physics. In addition to this science foundation the student in pre-engineering must complete a minimum of 48 hours in the social science and humanities divisions before he is eligible to receive a bachelor's degree from Colorado College.

CC has formal cooperative agreements with Carnegie Institute of Technology, Columbia University, University of Illinois, Rensselaer Polytechnic Institute, and Stanford University, providing for either a 4-2 or 3-2 arrangement with these schools.

Under the 4-2 program, a student will earn a bachelor's degree in mathematics or one of the other physical sciences at Colorado College and then will spend two years in one of these engineering schools working toward a master's degree in his chosen engineering field. If he decides on the 3-2 plan, he will complete three years at Colorado College and two at one of the five engineering institutions to earn an appropriate bachelor's degree from Colorado College and a bachelor's degree from the cooperating technical school.

Polk noted the increasing importance of a sound liberal arts preparation for professional careers in recent years. "For engineering in particular, which furnishes increasing numbers in positions of leadership an executive responsibility, the need for a strong grounding in general studies, in basic science, in the languages, and in other liberal arts subjects has been amply demonstrated," he said.

Alpha Phi

The Alpha Phi welcomed their district governor, Mrs. William Droegemuller, Sunday evening with a dinner and were most happy to have her.

Many congratulations are in order this week: to the basketball team for winning their third game, 17-4; to the ski team for taking third place on Sunday; to Lynn Miller on her acceptance into Phi Gamma Mu, social science honorary; to Sunny Jamison on her newly acquired assistantship at the University of Indiana; and to Sandy Weir on her honorable mention for the Woodrow Wilson Fellowship.

Although we have no pressing plans beside enjoying vacation, we certainly hope the pledges do!

Kappa Kappa Gamma

Happy Spring Vacation!

It's been a busy week at the Kappa house. Since morning the sisters entertained the hockey team at a breakfast, during which Lucy Christy provided music by playing Char Adams' guitar. Everyone was a little too sleepy to appreciate the effort, but it was fun.

Monday night after a rather amusing meeting, Donna Dent passed a candle announcing her pinning to "that fine upstanding Phi Delt" (to quote that fine upstanding Phi Delt, Dave Hite), Bob Strom. Following that, the Betas were finally allowed in the house. They had been waiting on the front porch for quite some time. Entertainment at the affair was provided by the New Kappa Singers who gave a charming rendition of "Three Jolly Kappas," as interpreted by J.E.K. They then sang a slightly new version of "I Can't Say No." The evening was gay fun, and well worth the wait.

Following a well earned vacation, the Kappas will return to a serenade in honor of Pam Phillips and Wayne Deutscher. The next weekend a delegation of Kappas will travel to Fort Collins for the Province Convention.

The Kappas would also like to extend their heartiest congratulations to Muffie Moore and Kathy Symms who placed first and second respectively in the inter-sorority ski meet. The team placed an overall first. Muffie is on the CC Girls' Ski Team and has been doing very well throughout the season. Congratulations and thanks to both of them.

Founders' Day last Saturday was a huge success. After visiting with our alumni in the Red Carter Room we adjourned to the dining room for a delicious luncheon. Awards were given to an outstanding girl in each class. The recipients were: senior, Julie Bohlik; junior, Lynn Rood; sophomore, Debbie West; and freshman, Linda Wangerin. Entertainment was provided by the Teammates from the Deaf and Blind School.

Our pledges have been very busy this past week. They had a pizza dinner one night for themselves and then Sunday morning planned a Surprise Happiness St. Patrick's Day Breakfast for the actives. Many actives who at first were reluctant to get up at such an early hour were glad they did. Besides good food the pledges sang and put on a skit.

Our Bobbysox Lectures resumed Tuesday when Mrs. Arnest came over and spoke to us on one of her favorite topics.

We wish to congratulate Jo Heller for being elected social chairman of A.W.S. and appointed Secretary-Treasurer of Rastall Center Board.

Gamma Phi Beta

The Gamma Phi held their annual Favorite Professors dinner on Tuesday night. Thirty professors joined with the students in a discussion initiated by Dr. Benetz concerning the intellectual climate of Colorado College. The comments made were of interest to both the faculty and the Gamma Phi because of their straightforward nature.

Congratulations are in order for the president-elect and vice president-elect of AWS, Jean Torcum and Carol Wright.

Kappa Alpha Theta

The Theta-Phi Delt basketball game was a lot of fun! The referees were very fair, and everyone played a good game. Afterwards the whole horde descended upon the Theta house for a spaghetti dinner. It was a fun night and a good dinner. The whole chapter would like to congratulate Linnea Erikson for being such a lovely Military Ball Queen. They would also like to congratulate all those girls going to study abroad next year on various scholarship programs—Judy Hooker, Leslie Beebe, Carol Paige, and Chris McInerney.

Beta Theta Pi

Sheila Krystal is the lovely wearer of Greg Wingate's lavender. We are so happy for Greg because it seemed that for a while he was going to be passed by completely. But now that Greg is taken care of, we must focus our attention on Peter Goodbody, a true find on any girl, who lives up to his name. Don't miss this prize.

Due to the neglect of the active chapter no articles have been submitted to this column concerning fraternity activities. Staggered by Tuition Costs? Ease the Blow With Work

By Sue Caudill

Students who have been staggered by the latest of tuition increases will be happy to know that the college itself provides many part-time job opportunities to lighten the blow. At the present time students may be seen diligently watering the college lawns, and tending the physical campus—sort of a domestic peace corps. Jobs are available on many aspects of the maintenance of the campus grounds.

Mr. Torrens of the Food Service presently employs 95 students as hashers, dishwashers, roustabouts, etc. in both the dining halls and the fraternity houses paying approximately $35,000 per year toward student financial security. Subing for tired or otherwise occupied hashers is also an excellent way to pick up money. Students interested in this line of work should apply early, particularly during first semester when there are never enough subs to be found. Rates are one dollar an hour.

Rastall Center is currently employing seven students at the desk, five in the games area, one custodian, two in the Hub at the noon hour, and one on Sunday evenings. Mr. Blackburn could use more help in the Hub on weekday evenings and during coffee break hour in the morning around 10:00. Slocum Hall pays counsellors and Mr. Oden hires a student to serve as his special assistant each year. There is a possibility that off-campus housing for men may open up opportunities for potential house fathers.

The library hires students both during school year and during the summer. Girls may babysit and iron clothes in their spare time.

Part of the reason behind the tuition increase, the new swimming pool and hockey rink-to-be will provide more job opportunities. Next year there will be a need for life guards, rink rats, and miscellaneous odd jobs which easily could be turned over to students.

The college offices occasionally hire students for secretarial work, particularly during the summer or when the admissions office has extra amounts of paper work. The admissions office also offers jobs to students during the summer.

Any student interested in a part-time job should apply through Dean Moon and Dean Reid. The deans may also be able to help students get jobs in town as well as on campus.

CC Faculty Wives Hold March Tea

The Colorado College Faculty Wives Club held its March tea at 3:30 p.m., Thursday, March 21 in the WES room at Rastall Center on the campus.

Mrs. Paul Jones, chairman of the tea, said all of the faculty wives were invited to attend.

Invited to pour were Miss J. Victor Hopper, Mrs. Van B. Shaw, Mrs. Earl Juhas, Mrs. Robert M. Ormes, Mrs. Fritz Kramer, and Mrs. William Ferguson. Serving on the tea committee with Mrs. Jones were Mrs. Bernard Ernest, Miss Mary Chenoweth, Mrs. Kenneth Curran, Miss Amanda Ellis, Mrs. Hertha Feyock, Mrs. William Fischer, Mrs. Douglas Freed, Mrs. John Hordan, Mrs. Carroll Malone, Mrs. Douglas Meltz, Mrs. Larimore Nicholl, Mrs. Harold Folk, Mrs. J. LEUTENANT BOB AKAM, B.S. IN AVIATION ADMINISTRATION

"If I had it to do over again, would I take Army R.O.T.C.?"

Look at it this way. I like the idea of doing challenging work. That's why I volunteered for Special Forces. So you can see why I felt pretty good when the Army assigned me to Europe! Here I really feel I'm doing something for the cause of my country in these important times. How many jobs can you think of that start you off with this kind of responsibility? My wife's here, too, and she loves it. We get a chance to travel. We meet the people, learn new languages, customs. And there's a pretty active social life on post, too. But above all, I'm an officer with a job to do and with responsibilities to shoulder. I like it that way, and I have a hunch that my leadership training and experience will help me out whatever I do. Take it from me, if you're already half-way towards your commission, see it through. It's a good deal. I know."

Panhellenic Activities

In preparation for a very active semester, Sharon Shackelford, President of the Colorado College Panhellenic Council, appointed the following committee chairmen:

Campus Service—Linda Burtzchi
Fraternity Education—Glenne Eisele
Public Relations—Carrie Jacobson

Projects—Nancy Bowers
Social—Sue Somerville
Booklet—Karen McIlvaine
Officers for this year are:
President—Sharon Shackelford
President-Elect—Sue Halton
Vice-President—Kathy Grant
Secretary—Linda Rood
Treasurer—Myrie Miller
Among the activities proposed are a possible Colorado College candidate for the Miss Colorado Contest, the "adoption" of an orphan under the Foster Parents' Plan, projects to aid the Foreign Students Committee, and an exciting and eventful Greek Week, a project headed by Judy Reid. Last Tuesday the council met with the Inter-Fraternity Council to discuss Greek problems; future joint meetings are scheduled.

Panhellenic is advised by Miss Oden and meets regularly on Tuesday afternoons to plan events and discuss activities. The largest project to date has been the initiation and operation of the deferred rush system, which from every report seems to have been very successful.

Hey, all you CC summer travelers going to Europe this summer, attention! Plans are being made for a reunion in Paris during the last week of June or the first week of July. Anyone who plans to be in Paris during this time should contact Caroline Wood, X110 or Dr. Peterson, X234, in order to set a definite date.

COME TO THE

Kingdom of Breckenridge

FRIDAY THRU SUNDAY,
MARCH 22, 23 AND 24
— for the most colorful winter sports event of the year!

By a slip of the legal pen in the Fort Collins Times, the Breckenridge area was not "officially" admitted to the U.S. until 1938. At that time Colorado retained the right to be a free independent kingdom for 3 days each year. This independence is celebrated Friday, Saturday and Sunday — the Ulir Dag Festival. This is the first festival commemorating Ulir (Thor, god of winter and skiing), although Ulir is recognized as the patron of skiers the world over (Dag is Nordic for "days"). Friday — fireworks, torchlight parade on Peak 8, Ulir Dag parade down Main Street, with floats and bands. Wear a costume! Saturday — uphill slalom, 3-day races, kick races, ice show and clown act, gala Coronation Ball. Sunday — dog sled racing and spring. Open skiing, skating and snow all day Saturday and Sunday (ever so much more!). Ski 12 miles of newly groomed slopes, trails and powder runs, expert to expert. Bring your friends for a great time, great food and after-ski entertainment!

Plan now to come up to the Kingdom of Breckenridge — just for the FUN of it!

Frasca Named Coach of the Year; Becomes Intramural Director

By Sports Editor Jim Heckman

Colorado College took an important step forward in its athletic development by hiring Hockey Coach of the Year Tony Frasca as college-wide Intramural Director. Frasca was voted Coach of the Year by the U.S. Hockey Coaches Association last Saturday night. The same night that he received a coveted trophy, symbol of coaching skill, he announced that he had resigned his job as varsity coach to take the newly created Intramural Directorship. He is to assume his responsibilities beginning next September.

Coach Frasca attributed his success to the excellent, determined play of the 1962-1963 squad, a team that gave CC its first winning record since 1958. Frasca came here in 1958 after being an All-American on two earlier CC hockey squads. In his first five years as coach, Tony compiled a 33 win, 77 loss, 3 tie record working with limited material, and guided by the desire to have a squad balanced with both Canadians and Americans. He came at a time when hockey was being de-emphasized after the highly successful National Championship season of 1957.

In his new role as Intramural Director, Frasca will integrate the variegated intramural programs into a meaningful whole by carefully scheduling all events, and by seeing that all events are properly supervised. Frasca will also be director of the new sports complex and intends to expand the intramural program to include such sports as hockey, swimming, and wrestling. Although his plans are not definite, it seems that he will divide participants in the program along the more natural lines of athletic ability, and not the more arbitrary lines of residence, in a wing or fraternity house. This would be a significant change in that for the first time, students will compete at their natural level of ability and so students will get more out of the intramural program. Frasca will also help to establish the proposed compulsory physical education program, an idea that has been discussed with increasing frequency among administrative circles. Although I personally feel that the burden of ROTC and compulsory physical education would be too onerous for Freshmen, I feel that it is essential that we establish a more substantial program of physical development. I am not sure that compulsory physical education is the answer, however.

CC is finally coming of age, athletically, at least in its treatment of the intramural program. The best sign of good things to come is the appointment of Tony Frasca to handle this program as a full-time job.

INTRAMURALS

The Slocum Hall intramural basketball season wound up play last week with 4th North being crowned as undisputed champions. The victorious wing ended play with a string of eight consecutive wins behind the ball hawking of Phil LeCuyer, Bill Evans, and Milt Franke.

In the second round championship game played on Sunday against 1st South the contest was even at the end of the first period 8-8. Karl Halbach paced the 1st South "fighters" first stanza output with six points while LeCuyer also dumped in six. 4th North regained its winning form in the second period to go on to a 51-11 victory.

Semi-final action played on Saturday was fast and furious as 1st North and 3rd South played outstanding games only to go down in defeat. One semi-final game pitted underdog 1st North against 1st South. John Russell and Dave Palm fired in 20 points but just couldn't match the overall balance of 1st South as Karl Halbach tallied six, Steve Prough five, Bob Korb, and Don Adcock seven as 1st North went down in defeat 29-26.

It took a goal by Steve Gress and a couple of free throws by Milt Frank for 4th North to edge 3rd South in the other semi-final encounters 28-26. Franke and LeCuyer paced the winning teams attack with 10 points each while Craig Miner sank 10 points for the losers.

Named to the Slocum Hall All-Star Team are: Rick Silverman, 1st West with a high 17 point game average; Milt Frank, 4th North tallied 59 markers to place third in total points scored; Dee Wilson, 2nd South who shot 113 points per game; Karl Halbach, 1st South with 56 points in six games; Bob Bohac, 3rd South who tallied 42 points; Phil LeCuyer, 4th North dumped in 77 points to take individual scoring honors; Bill Evans, 4th North with 68 markers finished in second place; Dwight Kramer, 3rd North had a 103 game average; Steve Prough, 1st South shot 7.6 points a game; Paul Tatter and Craig Miner, 3rd South who scored 8.2 and 6.8 respectively per game.

It is hoped that Skip Meis, Slocum intramural director will schedule a championship game between 4th North supplemented by members of the all-star squad with the Sigma Chi, Fraternity Champs. There is little doubt who would win such a contest.

PHIL LeCUYER AND FRIENDS go for the basketball as Hank Randolph, Harry Cazola, and Don Adcock look on in Sunday's championship Residence Halls Intramural League tilt. 4th North copped the contest and the crown.

CU Tromps Judo Team

Colorado College dropped its second judo match by losing to Colorado University 40 to 10. The match was held at the Colorado Springs Judo School, 602 S. Weber, as CU was unable to schedule their gym.

In the first contest E. Parker and Taylor were evenly matched but CC lost in the overtime by a hold-down.

CC's only points came in the next match when Merrell, in the first match of his career, won by throwing Reigel in the first minute of play.

The J. Parker-Avedon match went into another CU hold-down. CC's final loss of the day came in the Lang-Fader match as Fader easily threw Lang.

CC will travel to Colorado Mines this weekend as both teams look for their first win.

Frosh Hockey Squad Finishes 62-63 Season

The freshman team ended an erratic season by losing to the tough DU freshmen, 14-0. In general, coach Normand Laurence was very happy with his team despite its 2-5 season record.

In the four game series with the DU frosh, the young and inexperienced CC team tried valiantly to upset the more mature and experienced Pioneers, but lost all four times by scores of 11-1, 9-1, 7-2, and 14-0.

The last part of February, the team flew to Minnesota for a three game series and swept successfully over the Hamline varsity squad, 8-3, and beat the McCallister starters 3-2. The third game, scheduled with McCallister, was canceled because of complaints about the tough CC style of play. Norm Laurence was very happy with the team's performance on this trip.

Coach Laurence feels that the frosh squad will contribute several valuable players to the varsity team. He had the highest praise for Don Peterson, a player who was consistent, clean and determined in all games this season. Laurence also praised Glenn Blummer, Boh Otto, John Peyton and Steve Ebert for their excellent play. He mentioned that the freshmen defensemen Steve Kopesky, Dave Palm and Whitney will probably be varsity starters on defense next year. Mike Carter, according to the former CC goalie, should give Art Warwick some concern, especially if he improves a little bit more.

Coach Laurence praised the determination and enthusiasm of his frosh charges. He said, "I was very proud of them and I am sure that in the next few years they will give CC a good brand of hockey."

CC Tracksters Take Third At RMC Indoor Contest

Colorado College's defending champions lost the Rocky Mountain Conference Indoor Championship to the Colorado School of Mines. Although CC dropped to third place this year, the Tigers had some stand-out performances that were more than enough consolation for Track Coach Frank Flood.

The big men for CC were McCinnis and Afonia. McCinnis won the mile and two mile runs, and ran the mile in 4:40.5, a meet record. Ahiodun Afonia won the new hop, skip, and jump title with his 43 feet-9½ inches. He placed second in the broad jump, behind Plummer of CSC, who broke Ahiodun's old record of 20 feet-10 inches, a record he made last year.

CC had the greatest successes in the mile run when Owen and Smith tied for third place, behind McCinnis.

At the end of the meet, the School of Mines had accumulated 63½ points to 40½ for Colorado State, 29 for CC, 13 for Adams State and one for Western State.

Fraternity Intramurals

The Betas easily won the intramural wrestling championship last week. Mike von Helms did a fine job in gaining a decision over his opponent. Paul Corner put up a game defensive effort in saving his opponent the trouble of pinning him. Glenn Clifford gave a respectable try in losing by a pin. Gentleman Jim Spicer came through with a pin to beat his opponent. Jim exhibited, it might be noted, nothing but class in his match. Geoff Rivers was awarded the decision in the heavyweight class as his opponent failed to appear for the match.

Strong Memorial Concert Stars Pianist Horaszowski

Colorado College's third annual Strong Memorial Concert is scheduled for Monday, April 15, at 8:30 p.m. at the Fine Arts Center auditorium.

For this special event the college has engaged the world famous Polish-born pianist, Mieczyslaw Horaszowski, one of the most distinguished musical figures in America today.

A close friend of Arturo Toscanini and Pablo Casals, Mr. Horaszowski started his musical career at the unbelievably early age of 5 years when he amazed European critics by his performance from memory of the "Invention" by J. S. Bach. By the time he made his first New York recital appearance in Carnegie Hall at the age of fourteen, this child prodigy had already made several tours of Europe, was soloist with the symphony orchestras of the European capitals and had played a recital before Pope Pius X.

Continuing his concert career in three continents, Mr. Horaszowski was soon established as one of the most outstanding pianist-musicians, and became associated as colleague and friend with the leading international celebrities in music. Among them were composers Karol Szymanowski and Maurice Ravel, violinists Joseph Szigeti and Adolf Busch, and many others. With Pablo Casals he made many tours of Europe, presenting programs of Bach, Beethoven and Brahms. They also recorded the Beethoven and Brahms sonatas together in Europe, and these albums are now highly prized as collector's items.

Besides his career as concert pianist, Mr. Horaszowski is also one of the great piano teachers of this generation. In this capacity he occupies the professorship of piano at the famous Curtis Institute of Music in Philadelphia.

His appearance here has been made possible through a special endowment in memory of Dr. John Henry Strong, a humanitarian, scholar and musician.

Six Professors Given Leaves of Absence

Six professors at Colorado College have been granted leaves of absence for the forthcoming academic year to conduct research, write books, and paint.

On leave during the fall semester will be Prof. Richard M. Peal of the geology department, Prof. Max Lanner of the music department, and Ellsworth G. Mason, librarian and lecturer in English.

Profs. Bernard P. Arnest of the art department, and Louis G. Geiger of the history department will be on leave in the spring.

Professor William E. McMillen of the speech and drama department will be on leave throughout the academic year.

Professor Pearl, author of 15 books in the field of geology, will spend the summer and fall conducting research for and writing a work on crystallography. It will show the so-called topaz crystal structure of certain minerals.

Professor Lanner, noted concert pianist, will spend the semester practicing, working out new concert programs for the college, and attending concerts in New York.

Dr. Mason, one of the nation's leading authorities on Irish novelist James Joyce, will visit libraries in the west and complete work on a book he is writing on Joyce.

Professor Arnest will spend the second semester painting full-time. Many of his paintings were painted in Afghanistan where he spent the summer of 1960 working under a commission from the U. S. State Department.

Professor Geiger, who is writing a history of higher education in the Rocky Mountains and Great Plains, plans to spend a part of the time conducting research and visiting European universities. He is the author of several history books, including "University of the Northern Plains."

Professor McMillen has been teaching drama and directing the college dramatic productions since 1956. He plans to spend the academic year working out a new program in the fine arts.

Fund Drive

Colorado College Raises 40% of Goal In Eight Months of Three Year Drive

Colorado College already has raised more than 40 per cent of the $500,000 necessary to receive $2,500,000 from the Ford Foundation, reports Harold C. Harmon '80, chairman of the Colorado College Campaign. In a report to alumni this week, Harmon noted that while the three-year campaign is only eight months old, more than 40% of the challenge money is assured. "The grand total of gifts and other commitments toward the Ford goal is $2,400,179," he said. Included in this figure is $1,531,000 in cash received, and $869,170 in pledges, bequests in the process of settlement, and other commitments.

The Ford Foundation announced last June that it would give Colorado College $2,500,000 if the college could raise $500,000 by June 30 of 1965. This means that every dollar received by the college from sources other than the government of the Ford Foundation itself will earn the college 40 cents in grant money. Ford money is being used for strengthening faculty salaries, student scholarships and the endowment, and to renovate Palmer Hall and build an addition to the heating plant.

"It is gratifying to see how well the Ford challenge is catching on," Harmon said. "We are fortunate that the campaign got off to a good start. This is important, because although we are nicely on schedule now, we know that the campaign will become progressively more difficult as the final months unfold."

"We are now nearly a quarter of the way into the campaign," he noted, "and already several encouraging trends are beginning to emerge. These include the way the annual fund is shaping up; the good acceptance of the new program of life income agreements; and a continuation of large special gifts." Among the group gifts in the latter are an anonymous pledge by an alumnus for $100,000 toward the new indoor swimming pool and the ice skating rink and an anonymous gift of $75,000 for endowment.

World Law Conference

By Max Power

Ed. Note—This is an introductory article by Max S. Power concerning a World Law and Disarmament Conference recently held in Washington, D.C. In the coming weeks, the TIGER will print several installments of Mr. Power's report of this conference.

The possibilities and problems of the application of world law on a meaningful scale and of achieving some beginning toward disarmament were the central questions dealt with by the Student Conference on World Law and Disarmament, held in Washington, D. C. a week ago. The conference was sponsored by the Student Division of the United World Federalists.

Included among the speakers at the conference were Louis Sohn, professor of international law at Harvard and co-author of WORLD PEACE THROUGH WORLD LAW, Dr. John Toll, prominent University of Maryland physicist, Charles Van Doren and Dr. Thomas Lough, both of the United States Arms Control and Disarmament Agency, U. S. Reps. F. Bradford Morse (R-Mass.) and Donald Fraser (D-Minn.) and Mrs. Marian McVitty of New York, United Nations observer and editor of the INDEPENDENT OBSERVER.

There were a number of recurring themes in the addresses before the conference. First, there was, explicit or implicit, always the assumption that the present situation of opposed, nuclear-armed blocs is dangerous and must be altered for the sake of survival. Second, it was generally held that the United Nations must be strengthened, that it provides, with alterations, the machinery necessary for world peace. Third, discussion arose again and again of the concept of an international police or peace-keeping force.

The United World Federalists, according to Eric Cox of Washington, D. C., field director of the Student Division, hold that there must be acceptance of world law, enforced by international power, to maintain world peace.

In somewhat less theoretical terms, there was considerable discussion at the conference of U.S. and Soviet test ban and disarmament proposals.

The United World Federalists believe not only in informing others of their views but also in effective political action. This theme was stressed during the conference by Cox and by Sanford Zee Persons, the organization's paid lobbyist in Capitol Hill. Particular areas in which the group has moved in behalf of legislation are the Arms Control and Disarmament Agency and the United Nations Bond purchase. The group is also calling for official action which will lead to United Nations charter revision.

A great deal of information about world law, about the status of test ban and disarmament negotiations, and about that political influences upon these things here in the United States was put forward at the conference. The one wholly new idea presented, at least to this reporter, was that of Mrs. McVitty to make individuals responsible under international law. It is hoped that the reports which will be printed in coming weeks about the conference will serve to make this information, in many ways extremely vital, available to Colorado College students generally.

Sondermann to Speak For Discussion Group

On April 7th at 9:45 a.m., the Adult Discussion Group at All Souls Unitarian Church will have as their guest Dr. Fred Sondermann, Associate Dean and Political Science teacher at Colorado College. The subject is "U.S. Foreign Policy," a review of military, trade, and international organizational policies pursued by our government, and what factors are to be considered in present-day relations with other countries.

Lanner Announces Music Scholarship

A scholarship competition for talented and advanced students of music for the Colorado College Summer Session has been announced by Prof. Max Lanner, chairman of the music department.

Professor Lanner said student winners would receive these awards: first place, full tuition scholarship for private lessons and chamber music; first place tie, three-quarter tuition for each winner; second and third places, one-half tuition scholarship.

The competition is open to students of violin, cello, viola, and piano between the ages of 15 and 21.

Applications, accompanied by tape recordings, must be received at the college before April 1. Professor Lanner said further information about the competition is available at his office.

The music department offers a program of courses in music education and applied music designed for the needs and interests of both undergraduate and graduate students as well as professional musicians. As many as nine hours of credit toward an A.B. or M.A. degree may be received for work in the summer music school.

Prof. Lanner said a number of regular and visiting artist-teachers will comprise the summer faculty. A new artist-teacher, Abraham Skornick, principal violinist of the Cleveland Orchestra and former member of the International String Congress, the Oberlin Conservatory, and the Chautauqua School of Music, will arrive on campus in June for the session which opens June 17 and runs through August 9.

Other outstanding visitors returning to the college are Giorgio Giompi, violinist, who is head of the violin department of the Cleveland Institute of Music, and George Befeki, cellist of the Chicago Symphony and the Tre Corda String Trio.

Prof. M. Snyder Invents Machine

Dr. Milton K. Snyder, Associate Professor of Chemistry at Colorado College, has developed a "machine" for teaching freshman chemistry that weighs 13 ounces and costs 40 cents and permits a student to teach himself without the immediate aid of an instructor. Undergraduate science students doing homework frequently come up against problems that they cannot answer correctly and are unable to find out why until they talk with the teacher—often a day or two later. Professor Snyder's programmed teaching device—highly controversial in certain academic circles—was prepared to solve this problem. It is a 164-page book designed to help freshmen in general chemistry deal with the tougher problems in acids and bases.

This is the way it works: The student reads a body of text on the first page and selects one of several multiple-choice answers. Each answer will direct him to turn to a different page in the book. If he selects the correct answer, he will be told why and directed to continue with the second problem. But, if he selects one of the wrong answers, he will be told what he did wrong and sent back to work the problem over again.

"We are having good student reaction," Snyder said. "Students say they find it very helpful in the problem areas." He said the idea in programmed instruction is to permit the student to make a few mistakes and to capitalize on the mistakes to show him where he went wrong.

OPINION

What Our Community Means

By Brad Snyder

The fervor which once surrounded the Proposed Standard seems to be dead and gone. The last twitches of interest seen at the All College Conference. But as a discussion, it was a pretty exhausting one—it has been singularly productive. Most of the people who took part are convinced that there was nothing more to learn than that power is, and if you don't have it you'll just have to keep quiet and wait.

But if one presumes that the Administration isn't making pious noises when it offers responsibility to the students, on the condition that they understand just what responsibility will entail, then there is something to be learned from the discussion about the Standard, something that must be incorporated into any new standard which involves students.

Colorado College exists to serve a certain group of individual aspirations. In the academic field these aspirations range from simply getting a degree, to acquiring a liberal arts background, to the ultimate aspiration of a life devoted to reason and the intellect.

These aspirations have one common factor: their achievement requires discipline. This is nothing more than the recognition that difficult and long-range goals are likely to be easy and immediate temptations, that without a system of discipline to direct effort most people would achieve very little.

As a system, self-discipline is often imperfect. So the individual has recognized that his aspirations are jeopardized by his lack of self-discipline, and when he is determined to compensate for this lack—the community is born. Discipline is institutionalized in the community and thereby rendered relatively impervious to the fluctuations in the individual's powers of self-discipline.

Thus the community is the servant of the individual, aiding him by providing a certain minimum level of discipline. But of course the highest aspirations require more discipline than the community can give. Therefore it aims to demand external discipline into reliable self-discipline. Admittedly this internalization will have only limited success. So there are four possible postures of the individual toward the community: 1) the aristocratic (perhaps mythical) few who are self-disciplined in all situations and have, so to speak, graduated from the community; 2) the larger number who discipline themselves in some matters and rely on community restraints in others; 3) the weak-willed few who always rely on the communal crutch; 4) the very few who never acknowledge the necessity of discipline in realizing aspirations, never, so to speak, sign the contract with the community.

In fulfilling its function the community reviews all acts, both public and private. Punishment is not a moral judgment, but rather a pragmatic judgment, which says that an act, if common, would damage the order of the community and the discipline of its members. The community does deny the possibility that a forbidden act could be committed with the degree of self-discipline necessary to avoid damaging consequences. Nor does it deny the fundamental right of the individual to commit such an act. It merely weighs evidence at hand and says that the chances of such an act being committed with maturity are small—small to the degree that the community cannot base its policy on the assumption that the act would be mature.

This view of community is based on a very realistic understanding of human nature. It is not pessimistic or authoritarian, for in addition to recognizing the anti-social side of men it also assumes in men the foresight to understand that their own welfare is irrevocably tied up with that of others. It could not last long without this foresight. Furthermore, this view is not based on a priori principles, for the organization of the community simply comprises the necessary means of control and give direction to the tension between human instincts and human aspirations. I believe that CC students must consider and digest this kind of realism before they can be prepared to assume the responsibility of fully governing themselves. In the last analysis we must see that there is a great deal of meaning in CC's motto: Scientia et Disciplina.

Chapman Report

By L. N.

Scene: ASCC meeting, President Lax Flower presiding. Lax: Now, ladies and gentlemen, we have heard the commendable reports of the Traffic Committee, the Watermelon Bust Committee, the Cheerleader Selection Committee, the Panty Raid Committee, the Freshman Beanite Committee, and the Committee on Committees. I constantly rejoice at the trust put in us, as students, by an enlightened Administration, to govern our lives here. We now move on, if you will, to discussion and to a vote on a proposed "Code of Ethics." Fats Chapman will describe it for us. Fats?

Fats: Nothing to it, really. Don't see what all the fuss is about. Boils down to this. Thought we'd write down the unwritten law. That is, let everybody know we're doing the same things on campus that goes on outside, pay some respect to good moral without letting it slow down the good old-fashioned hanky-panky. Nothing anybody has to worry about.

Lax: Thank you, Fats. I'm wondering, as it were, if anyone has taken a poll to sound out student opinion on this. Sue Artwell does a lot of this sort of thing. Any opinion on this on our morals issue, Sue?

Sue: Yes, Lax, we did a cunning little survey in one women's dorm. One question was "Have you manipulated yet?"—a kind of indirect and tricky. Best answer we got was, "That's kind of a personal question, but I started when I was thirteen."

Lax: Thank you Sue. That pretty well sums up student opinion. I see Biles Hopping waving his hand in the back. Biles?

Biles (in a loud tone): When I heard about this morals code, I damned nearly dropped my flask! You cannot arbitrarily legislate moral standards for free students. You can't!

Lax: Well taken, as it were. Thank you Biles, as he hand up the letter jacket has his hand up. Yes?

Fellow: Don't pay any attention to what Biles Hopping says. He's just a rotten, beatnik, loudmouth, fuzzy-thinking, Commie fink! Un-

American jerk who I bet never even seen the inside of a locker room. Fink! Beatnik!

Lax: I'd like to hear opinions from other campus leaders. I see Crank Blase' sitting over there. Do you have some words on this, Crank?

Crank: You ought to know by this time that I never take stands. Anyone who thinks he knows the answers is only fooling himself. As Tillich would say . . .

Lax: Many thanks, Crank. I'm wondering now if anyone has talked to President Layette on this question.

Sue: Yes, Lax, and I'll tell you about it if you'll keep your hands on the table. Several of us went to his office. Well, you know how churchy that office is. We were beaten before we started. He talked for about 3 1/2 hours, but he could have said it in one sentence. He's against sin.

Lax: Well, I think we're ready for amendments to the code as it now stands. I'll take them from the floor.

Biles: Strike out the parts about chastity belts.

Crank: Take out that passage about spitting on the floor in buses.

Fellow: Leave out the stuff on package liquor stores and motels. Lax: Thank you, Ladies and gentlemen. With these revisions, our code now reads, "It is a privilege to live in Colorado." Will the fourteen voting members please cast their ballots. (Pause) Ladies and gentlemen the code has been defeated 13-1. But I am enormously pleased at the valuable discussion that this issue has produced. Shall we adjourn to the Playboy Party?

Palm Sunday

Preacher: Professor Nicholas Pielisch

Worship Leader: Mr. Charles D. Wilson

Sermon Topic: "God's Frustrating Messiah"

Matthew's account of Palm Sunday serves as the foundation for the sermon which is a variation of the "suffering-servant" theme of the Bible. God's Messiah comes into history to transform men through justice, mercy and self-sacrificing love. He does not come to destroy man and history. Such a message is frustrating for most people since they are more intent upon destroying the evil in themselves and in society rather than transforming it into good. There is mercy and love in history.

Ron Taylor Named As Exchange Student

Ronald M. Taylor, a sophomore at Colorado College, son of Mr. and Mrs. Amret Taylor of 1113 Lincoln Dr., Enid Okla., has been named an exchange student for the forthcoming academic year at Nijmegen College in Holland, to study international business.

During the same year, Nijmegen College will send a student to Colorado College. Currently attending this school is Gerhard Jansen-Vennebore of Holland.

He is now studying Dutch in preparation for the language problem that will face him at Nijmegen. In addition, he will take a special course in Dutch.

Nijmegen College, founded in 1946, is located in Nijmegen Castle, 10 miles south of Amsterdam. It has an enrollment of some 250 students.

Sigma Chi

This week the Sigma Chis elected their new officers for the coming year. They are: Fred Luft, president; Walter Schultz, vice president; Chuck Cornell, social chairman; Rick Firmine, intramural chairman; Russ Veach, publicity chairman; Chuck Deaver, head hasher; and Ron Rishagen, house manager. On Saturday is our annual Apache Dance which, contrary to rumor, will not be the usual R.F. After a great vacation (except for the warning notices) everyone is settling down to concentrate on their studies.

Alpha Phi

Inspiration week was started this past week and congratulations are due the initiates. Being busy with this project, the chapter hasn't done anything else but would like to congratulate the basketball team who were undefeated champions this year. Susan Halton who was elected vice president of WAA, and the pledges for winning the trophy for the highest scholastic average of all pledge classes.

Delta Gamma

After a restful spring vacation, the D.G.'s rallied back from California, Arizona, and other scenic spots. Five Delta Gammas, Suzanne Armstrong, Sue Caudill, Sally Lentz, Carol Rymer, and Catherine Swan spent the vacation with the work camp on the Navajo Indian Reservation. They all had a wonderful time and even built a house.

After our meeting Monday night Tish Amberg surprised the chapter by passing a beautiful white candle announcing her engagement to Buzz Poe. Congratulations go to the happy couple who will marry in August.

Our whole chapter is looking forward to a picnic with our alumni and their families in Monument Park this Sunday afternoon.

Kappa Kappa Gamma

After a very restful and well-earned vacation, the Kappas returned to a riotous April Fools' Day meeting. A surprise, and very brief, visit by the Sigma Chis and reports of officers specially devised to confuse pledges and unsuspecting actives comprised the meeting. Afterwards, the Kappas sat around and talked or played bridge for a while.

This weekend, the Province Convention will be held in Fort Collins. Sully Arentz, president of the Delta Zeta chapter, will be our official delegate.

Phi Gamma Delta

The Fijis have elected new officers for the coming year. The new cabinet consists of president, Don Brundley; treasurer, Jim Schultz; recording secretary, Bill Peltz; corresponding secretary, Tom Brundley; and historian, Ron Taylor. The house and the new cabinet members are looking forward to another great year. Last weekend we enjoyed very much our dinner with the Kappas on Sunday and our dessert with the D. G.'s on Monday.

We are now looking forward to the big party of the year, Fiji Island, which will be held the first weekend after spring vacation.

Symposium Comm. Meets

All interested students and faculty are urged to attend the meeting of the Symposium Planning Committee on Wednesday, April 10th, at 4:30 p.m. in Room 203, Rastall Center. At this meeting, details of the five suggested Symposium Topics for 1964 will be discussed, and it is hoped that a consensus will emerge on the topic to be finally selected, so that we may proceed with our preparations for this event.

All campus groups, housing units, etc., are invited to send representatives to this meeting.

Torcom, Wright Elected to 63-64 AWS

On Tuesday, March 22, the Women students elected the six Associated Women Students executive officers for the 1963-64 term. They are as follows: President, Jean Torcom, Vice-president, Carol Wright, Recording Secretary, Beth Anneberg, Corresponding Secretary, Diana Vhay, Social Chairman, Jo Heller. NOW YOU CAN BE YOUNGER THAN SHE IS

It is a scientific fact that girls reach emotional maturity earlier than boys. For this reason freshman girls are reluctant to make romantic alliances with freshman boys, but instead choose men from the upper classes.

Thus the freshman boys are left dateless, and many is the night the entire freshman dorm sobs itself to sleep. An equally most situation exists among upper-class girls. With upper-class men being snapped up by freshman girls, the poor ladies of the upper class are reduced to dreary, meaningless evenings of Monopoly and home permanents.

It pleases me to report there is a solution for this morbid situation—indeed, a very simple solution. Why don't the two great have-not groups—the freshman boys and the upper-class girls—find solace with each other?

True, there is something of an age differential, but that need not matter. Take, for example, the case of Albert Payson Sigafos and Eustacia Vye.

Albert Payson, a freshman in sand and gravel at Vanderbilt University, was walking across the campus one day, weeping softly in his loneliness. Blinded by tears, he stumbled upon the supine form of Eustacia Vye, a senior in wicker and raffia, who was collapsed in a wretched heap on the turf.

"Why don't you watch where you're going, you minor youth?" said Eustacia peevishly.

"I'm sorry, lady," said Albert Payson and started to move on. But suddenly he stopped, struck by an inspiration. "Lady," he said, tugging his forelock, "don't think me forward, but I know why you're miserable. It's because you can't get a date. Well, neither can I. So why don't we date each other?"

"Surely you jest!" cried Eustacia, looking with scorn upon his tiny head and body.

"Oh, I know I'm younger than you are," said Albert Payson, "but that doesn't mean we can't find lots of fun things to do together."

"Like what?" she asked.

"Well," said Albert Payson, "we could build a Snowman."

"Bah!" said Eustacia, grinding her teeth.

"All right then," said Albert Payson, "we could go down to the pond and catch some frogs."

"Ugh!" said Eustacia, shuddering her entire length.

"How about some Run-Sheep-Run?" suggested Albert Payson.

"You are callow, green, and immature," said Eustacia, "and I will thank you to remove your underaged presence from mine eyes."

Sighing, Albert Payson lighted a cigarette and started away.

"Stay!" cried Eustacia.

"Was that a Marlboro Cigarette you just lighted?" she asked.

"What else?" said Albert Payson.

"Then you are not immature!" she exclaimed, clasping him to her clavicle.

"For to smoke Marlboros is the very essence of wisdom, the height of American know-how, the incontrovertible proof that you can tell gold from dross, right from wrong, fine aged tobacco from pale, pathetic substitutes. Albert Payson, if you will still have me, I am yours!"

"I will," he said, and did, and today they are married and run the second biggest wicker and raffia establishment in Duluth, Minnesota.

Frasaca Finishes in a Hurry

It may seem odd, but the finest collegiate hockey coach in the nation this year didn't own a pair of skates until he was 17.

As a matter of fact, Tony Frasca, hockey coach at Colorado College and NCAA Coach of the Year, never played a hockey game until he was 13. Even then he didn't play on a regular ice rink until he was a junior in Cambridge High School in Massachusetts.

"I borrowed skates from the neighbors for the first four or five years," Frasca recalled. "There were 10 kids in their family so I usually didn't have too much trouble finding a pair that fit."

Frasca eventually got his own skates. He even got the opportunity to play hockey on an organized team at Cambridge High. But he didn't set the ice on fire—then.

In fact, the experts in the East didn't rate him as an outstanding hockey player. But a few years later they changed their minds when Frasca made All-American.

Last week he hit the top of the ladder a second time in the world of hockey. During the annual American Hockey Coaches Association banquet he was named college "Coach of the Year." The award was made in the place where he started his ice career—in Boston.

The 35-year-old Colorado College ice coach, son of Mr. and Mrs. Tony Frasca, 23 Drew Road, Belmont, Mass., was born in Boston and grew up in the harshly competitive world of the Woldan Street play pits. He grew up with the desire to be a coach but hockey was so far back in his list of sports he could hardly find it.

"Baseball was my favorite. I guess I played a pretty good brand of football, too," Frasca recalled.

"Hockey was sort of a winter stopgap sport and we never played on an ice rink."

"I got bored plenty of time for coming home late with my pants soaked from taking tumbles on the ice," he grinned.

Now Frasca admits he owes everything he has to hockey. But it didn't look that way at first. By the time he graduated from Cambridge High School you could hardly say he had "arrived."

"I was 11th highest scorer in the league and I was pretty proud of it at the time. I had 11 points," Frasca grinned.

Tony spent the next three years working in Boston and playing amateur hockey. He wasn't exactly a hit but he remembers he scored "quite a few points" and got plenty of experience.

The next year Frasca moved west to attend Pueblo Junior College. But a cowboy-on-skates named Cheddy Thompson had been watching the young icer from Boston and convinced him to move 40 miles north to Colorado College. Thompson was coach of the ice team from Colorado College, a team that the hockey coaches ignored until they learned the Colorado College Tigers had whipped them without even working up a sweat.

The Bengals grew even tougher when Frasca hit the ice. Hitting his stride under Thompson's instruction in 1949-50 he centered the Tiger icers to the NCAA championships. Along the way he made more points than any other collegiate hockey player in the nation and was almost automatically chosen to the All-American team.

The next year, Frasca led the Tigers to one of their most successful seasons, although they lost the NCAA crown by one game.

During his senior year, Frasca was put on the sidelines in mid-season with a broken leg. But he led all scorers in the nation before the mishap and his efforts put the Tigers into a position where they won the runner-up spot in the national championships. Despite the fact that he played half a season, Frasca was chosen as an All-American a second time.

That year he was instrumental in winning the "Coach of the Year" award for coach Cheddy Thompson.

Frasca came to Colorado College as ice coach in 1958 after coaching at Calhan, High School in Colorado and South Junior High School in Colorado Springs. After five years at the Tiger ice helm he had his most successful year in 1962-3, winning 12 out of 23 games with virtually the same squad which lost 24 consecutive games the year before.

Frasca now has been promoted to director of an accelerated intramural sports program at Colorado College and manager of the new ice rink here.

But hardly any promotion in his career could be better than earning for the College the Coach of the Year award for the second time.

Denver Symphony Issues Request For Financial Aid

A campaign to raise $175,000 to support the Denver Symphony Orchestra during the coming year is being conducted by 400 volunteer workers under the chairmanship of W. Braxton Ross.

The drive, with headquarters at 600 Colorado Building, 1615 California St., will run through April 18.

Founded in 1921, the Denver Symphony attained professional status in 1945, when Saul Caston became music director and conductor. A prime cultural asset of Denver and the region, the orchestra has brought the city national and international recognition. Supporters of the orchestra believe that, with 15 years of progress on which to build, the Denver Symphony has unlimited possibilities for future progress.

In urging support of the orchestra, workers point out that ticket sales cannot pay the way of the Denver Symphony, or any other symphony orchestra. If the orchestra is to serve its purpose, ticket prices must be kept at levels where the greatest number can enjoy fine music.

Contributions of all sizes are being welcomed in the fund drive.

Debaters to Compete In National Tournament

Four Colorado College students will compete in the nation's top debate tournament April 6-10 at Ball State Teachers College in Muncie, Indiana. Colleges and universities from across the nation will send debate teams to the tournament, sponsored by the Tau Kappa Alpha national forensics fraternity. Accompanying the two Colorado College teams as coach is Robin Rudolf of the history department. The two teams are as follows:

Max Power of Denver and Charles Puckett of Wilson, Okla., and Mary Jo Heller of Denver and David Bitters of Prairie Village Kan.

Knapp Out of Deep Freeze

Neither Alaska's literature nor its weather really compares with those in Colorado, according to a Colorado College professor who spent part of the winter teaching in the cold state in the nation.

"If anything, the literature in Alaska seems to run poetry," said Professor Emeritus Lewis M. Knapp. "For example, Robert Service's works on the Yukon are very vivid."

"There doesn't seem to be any concentration of authors in the new state, such as there is in Colorado Springs where the literary background is extremely rich."

Professor Knapp spent the fall semester at the University of Alaska in Fairbanks as Carnegie visiting professor of English.

Professor Knapp retired from Colorado College last June after spending 23 years in the English department.

He immediately received an appointment for a one-semester appointment in the English department at the University of Alaska. It gave the Knapps their first opportunity to see the 49th state.

"It was well worth the trip," Professor Knapp said.

They traveled up the inland passage last summer and returned by air last January to their home in Colorado Springs. But if anything impressed the professor it was the fabulous scenery and the friendly and courageous people.

"We made friends extremely fast on the campus," Knapp said. He and Mrs. Knapp lived in a modern apartment on the University of Alaska campus and, contrary to many of the frontier pictures drawn of Fairbanks, did their shopping in modern supermarkets.

"I was surprised," he said. "Living costs were not as high as we expected." Professor Knapp estimated the cost of living was about 35 per cent higher in interior Alaska than it would be in the "South 48" as Alaskans usually call the lower states.

"The students are the same, though," he recalled. "You can always find some youngster driving around Fairbanks in an open car when it's 20 below."

He described the faculty of the English department as "excellent" and said that many of them were working on "scientific" books rather than modern literary. Professor Knapp himself is compiling a single translation volume of "Humphrey Clinker," the famous book by Tobias Smollett. Knapp is a leading expert on Smollett.

His studies of 18th century literary figures have made him an authority on Tobias Smollett. He is the author of a book, "Tobias Smollett, Doctor of Manners," as well as numerous articles concerning that period.

He is also something of a literary detective. A few years ago he exposed some forged letters which were supposedly written by Tobias Smollett. But it didn't take any undercover investigations. Professor Knapp to decide if he likes Alaska. In fact he would like to return. But just for a visit.

Prior to joining the Colorado College faculty in 1939 he taught at the University of Colorado at Williams College in Massachusetts. He is a graduate of Amherst College and received his M.A. from Columbia University and his Ph.D. from Yale University.

Gaskill Receives Scholarship

Elizabeth Gaskill of Denver, senior at Colorado College, has been awarded a scholarship to graduate study at Smith College.

Miss Gaskill, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. H. S. Gaskill of Denver, is majoring in history. She will undertake graduate study in the field of social work at Smith.

A member of the Delta Gamma Sorority, Miss Gaskill is the chairman of the religious affairs committee. She was president of the junior class last year, and has been chairman of the assembly committee.

Seay, Shaw, and Champion Given CC Summer Research Grants

Three Colorado College professors, Albert Seay of the music department, Van B. Shaw of the department of sociology, and William G. Champion of the chemistry department are planning to spend the summer on research projects.

They are recipients of Colorado College's Summer Research Grants, announced this week by Prof. Glenn Broad, chairman of the college's Research Committee.

Professor Seay will spend the summer in archives and libraries in France and Italy on two research projects he has under way. One of these involves the publication of a critical edition of the comic works of the 16th century Flemish composer Jacob Arcadelt.

"Many of his compositions went through 33 editions," Seay said. "The problem is to check all of these editions personally to see what the variations were." The first volume of Seay's 15 volume collection is already at the printers.

Professor Shaw hopes his research will provide information about the Sappian-American living in the community.

"Of all the various minority groups living in Colorado, the least studied and least well-known is the Spanish-American minority," he said.

Professor Champion is concerned with the chemical constitution of molecules, an area of study that long has been a subject of speculation and controversy.

He will spend the summer in the laboratory of the new Ohio State of Science trying to find out about this by observing processes taking place during various chemical reactions.

Tournament of Cycles

Noah Webster has defined "spectacle" as: "something exhibited, esp. as unusual and notable; a noteworthy sight; specif., a public display appealing to the eye by its mass, proportions, color, etc.; a device to aid vision or protect the eyes, consisting of two lenses in a metal frame with a bridge, or a nosepiece, and bows; a device with two handles used to move well-boring tools." Admittedly, Colorado College's annual Tournament of Cycles has little to do with well-boring tools, and it has not proven terribly effective in correcting eye astigmatism. Yet despite these flagrant shortcomings, the event qualifies as a most ebullient spectacle.

With a brief but distinctive two year history behind it, the 1963 Tournament of Cycles will be held on April 27, in the midst of Parents Weekend (meaning an abundance of spectators, for the information of those cyclists who thrill at the promise of public glory). As before, the races will be open to any peddle-powered Colorado College student, with separate events for the junkies and racing machines; the course itself stretches two and one-half invigorating miles through the Garden of the Gods. Last year's lap records should prove less than difficult to shatter for the potential field of competitors on campus this year.

Tennis Season Opens at CSC; Prospects High to Retain Title

CC begins defense of its Rocky Mountain Conference title at Colorado State College on April 20. With three members from last year's top four, and with a fine group of freshmen, hopes are high for a very successful tennis season.

Russ Sperry, senior team captain, leads the list of returning lettermen, and is defending singles and doubles champion in the conference. No. 2 man is Cy Dyer, a freshman player who is highly ranked in Rocky Mountain tennis circles. Bill Yost, too, is highly ranked, and is the No. 3 man on the squad. Among the other top players are lettermen Alan Nisgard and Jim Heiberger, and freshmen Duncan McNaughton and Bob Bohae.

Missing only the services of Rusty Bastedo, now studying in Sweden. The defending champions expect to romp through conference opponents, and hope to do well against DU, CU, and the Air Force Academy, schools with subsidized tennis programs.

According to coach Elmer Peterson, the School of Mines, bolstered by foreign students from Monaco

The schedule for the season is as follows:

April 6, DU there
April 10, AFA there
April 17, AFA here
April 20, CSC there (RMC)
April 26, CSC here (RMC)
May 3, CU there
May 4, Mines here (RMC)
May 4, Adams State here (RMC)
May 8, St. Michaels here
May 10-11, RMC meet here
All home matches will be played on the Monument Valley Courts.

BOAC Announces Tours For Students, Teachers

The Golden Bear Air Series, a group of five student tours to Europe, is announced by British Overseas Airways Corporation for departure in June.

Included is a special program for teenagers and prep students (ages 14 to 18) leaving New York on June 21 and returning August 29. It will be led by Mr. and Mrs. Paul Nelson Jr., school teachers in Hawaii.

Other tours, ranging in duration from 44 to 70 days, are designed primarily for collegians and teachers. All-inclusive costs run from $1,312 to $1,795. The last figure is for the prep program.

President Benezet Resigns

Rejuvenates Colo. College During Eight-Year Tenure

President Louis T. Benezet announced early this week that he has accepted a position as President of the Claremont Graduate School and University Center. This position holds the responsibility of operating the Claremont Graduate School, coordinating the efforts of the five undergraduate colleges on the Claremont campus, and establishing new colleges in the future.

Dr. Benezet came to Colorado College in 1955 after seven years as president of Allegheny College. During his eight years here he has brought national recognition to our campus.

He will remain at Colorado College until August, by which time a successor will have been chosen by a committee of trustees, faculty, and alumni.

Louis T. Benezet in his opening address as President of the Colorado College in the fall of 1955, stated that "it should be the goal of the faculty and students to make Colorado College the top liberal arts college in the United States."

After working towards this goal for eight years, let us look back and see what has been accomplished under his guidance.

In an article entitled "Once More Unto the Breach," in Liberal Education magazine of March 1960, Dr. Benezet enumerated what he considers to be the four main problems facing the small liberal arts college today: Money, Enrollment, Subject, and Product.

The financial status of a school is the easiest of these to measure in concrete terms. It is closely tied to the progress of the physical plant, which is more than any other aspect of education directly governed by finances. In 1955, no academic building had been constructed since 1904, most of those standing were inadequate, and the campus was generally unimproved and poorly maintained.

On first arriving, Dr. Benezet began planning improvement of these facilities and the necessary concurrent raising of funds. A new post, that of Vice President for Development, was added to the administration for this purpose, and a concerted campaign was begun to improve public relations. In the course of his first year, President Benezet traveled to eighteen major cities speaking to alumni groups, business groups, and philanthropic organizations. Since then he has traveled constantly, speaking to groups such as these, giving speeches at other colleges, and generally improving the reputation of Colorado College.

Benezet began appearing immediately—by that April Colorado College had received the largest single gift in its history, a $275,000 scholarship fund from the estate of Dr. Benjamin Rastall. Since that time, innumerable small grants have been received, along with tremendously increased alumni donations and local business support. Within the past few years, grants of over a million dollars have been provided by the El Pomar Foundation and the Elgin Foundation, while the Ford Foundation honored Colorado College by making it the only liberal arts college in this area to receive a challenge grant, which may provide up to 2.2 million dollars. In this way, more than ten million dollars have been added to the assets of the college, and the permanent endowment has more than doubled.

The effects of this are obvious to anyone visiting the campus. Rastall Center provides a hub for campus activities, Tuttle Library has replaced dilapidated science facilities housed in modern quarters, many of the older buildings have been internally remodeled, a new sports complex is in the press of completion, fraternities are housed in three new residences, the heating plant has been expanded, and milnor improvements are constantly being undertaken.

A more subtle problem to be faced was enrollment. For many years, Colorado College had the reputation of a "playboy school," and because of this, many of the best students and teachers did not even consider it.

To improve the quality of the student body, many measures have been taken and each year the admission office issues a reasuring bulletin that this year's is the most talented freshman class ever. A great deal of this is due to the changed public image of the college aided to a considerable extent by the national reputation of its president. Dr. Benezet has written articles on education in many journals, including the Saturday Review, and has advised government agencies on matters of education.

Admissions procedures have been modernized and intensified. 1955 was the first year in which college board examinations were required for admission, and in 1957 a minimum grade average was established for students in the college. Increased scholarship aid has also brought better students to our campus. The success of this effort is evidenced in the steadily increasing level of qualification of students accepted.

Along with the increasing qualifications of the students, there has been a notable improvement of the teaching and administrative staff. Every year since 1955 there have been at least eight new staff members added, and while the student body has increased ten per cent, the staff has added more than 50 %.

The average salary for professors has more than doubled since 1955, reducing the lure of offers from larger schools. A program of sabbatical leaves and other opportunities for individual study provide a large element of attraction as does the willingness to try new methods and ideas. The average age of the faculty has dropped considerably, as many young professors with new ideas and energy are being hired to continue the growth and intellectual ferment of the college.

This feeling of constant ferment is apparent in the curriculum of Colorado College. On first arriving, Dr. Benezet began an "intellectual sprucing up," starting the faculty thinking about the liberal arts curriculum and its purposes. He organized discussion groups to discuss curriculum in various fields, and tried to overcome faculty inertia in improving classes. Some of the most apparent results are found in the many new classes offered, and in the addition of several new major fields. A grant from the Carnegie Foundation provided funds to establish a program of science courses for non-science majors, which is now an integral part of the science curriculum.

A selected student program has been established to provide advanced work for capable freshmen and sophomores, while programs of independent study for juniors and seniors are being employed in many fields.

Outside of the classroom, educational opportunities have grown tremendously. The budget for student lectures has been multiplied tenfold, and three endowed lectures are presented each year. The Symposium has proved a success in its two years of existence.

Anthropology Major Offered Next Year

Dean Warner announced last week that CC will offer a major in anthropology beginning in September. Although courses in anthropology have been offered at Colorado College for years, this will mark the first time students will be able to work toward a bachelor's degree in the field.

The new program, approved by the faculty, will be a major within the existing Department of Sociology and Anthropology. It does not call for the creation of a separate department.

Students majoring in anthropology at Colorado College will be required to take a minimum of 24 credit hours in the field. They must take physical anthropology, cultural anthropology, cultural patterning of effect, descriptive linguistics, and a senior seminar in sociology and anthropology.

Teaching the anthropology courses at Colorado College will be Professor Paul Kutsche and Dr. George Mills, lecturer, assistant director of the Colorado Springs Fine Arts Center.

Prof. Kutsche explained that a newly created program of independent work in anthropology will enable especially able students in the field to receive a "Distinction in Anthropology" on graduation.

Kutsche said the student who is a candidate for the distinction will develop a project involving some field research on which he will write a senior honors thesis. Research may be conducted outside the United States.

Teatro Espanol to Give First Performance Soon

The Teatro Espanol has been reactivated, with the return from Spain last fall of Miss Laurie M. Perry, Assistant Professor of Spanish, and will present a two-act comedy on Sunday, April 21, at 2:00 p.m. The play, La Vida Intima, is by the famous Quintero brothers, and deals with the private life of a mediocre musician who has become famous overnight. It is a biting satire on the type of person whose private life is as insignificant as his public one, containing the usual Spanish synthesis of appearance and reality.

Taking part in the play are CC students Susan Arentz, Luis Arce, Fernando Perez, Paul Tatter, Fred Whittick, Harry Lynn, PFC's Doyle Phillips and Cal Norman of Fort Carson, Dr. Douglas Carrizo, resident physician at Penseroso Hospital from Venezuela. Other students assisting with the production are John Eddy, Peggy Hardy, Wendy Millard, and Beth Finkle.

Students and faculty are invited to attend the single performance, which is free and open to the public, and for those whose knowledge of Spanish is limited, there will be program notes.

PRESIDENT LOUIS T. BENEZET this week announced his resignation from the Colorado College and appointment as president of the Claremont Graduate School and University Center. Dr. Benezet will remain at Colorado College through the late summer.

EDITORIAL—

It was only with the announcement of President Benezet's departure that the campus as a whole began properly to appraise its indebtedness to him, for it is an endemic part of his success that no one has thought of the man separate from the school until this reality was forced upon us this week. But now, caught short by the realization of the sudden ending of these successful years under his administration, we can only acknowledge the unusual stature of this man.

President Benezet is a rare mixture of administrator and educator, and it took a personality of this sort to reactivate Colorado College, which had lost its impetus in the post-war years. However, it is likely that the praise for the tangible accomplishments he has wrought (buildings, faculty, endowment), will tend to obscure the intangible qualities which are his greatest legacy to the school. This legacy we speak of is his unflinching belief in the liberal arts tradition, the idea being, in essence, that colleges are not to mold people into engineers or scientists or even poets, but to inculcate within the student the love of knowledge, which will sustain him in any specialized field he should choose. This concept has been attacked by many as idealistic, but by his practical actions President Benezet has given it a legitimacy.

President Benezet came to Colorado College at one of the most critical periods in its history; he leaves it now a truly viable institution at the threshold of a new era where utilization will become more important than acquisition. It is hoped that the memory of what he stands for will continue to mold the college, and therefore it is imperative that the new president be a scholar and educator who also gives his allegiance to the liberal arts concept. As President Benezet leaves we must look to the future, but with the cognizance that it was he who built the foundations to make this future possible.

ASCC Candidates Offer Views

As the annual spring election ritual gets under way, the TIGER, in addition to publishing profiles and platform statements of the candidates for ASCC president, has also the other candidates to express their qualifications and platforms. Below are their responses, with candidates for each office arranged alphabetically.

On Tuesday, April 16, the presidential hopefuls will appear at an all-school assembly and elaborate their respective platforms, hopefully before a large segment of the student body which one of them will serve in 1963-64.

Vice President

At this time I would like to make known my candidacy for vice president of ASCC, and give several short reasons why I am seeking the office. I feel that the Vice Presidency has the responsibility of acting as the right hand man to the President, providing constructive leadership on various committees and of course serving as head of the Social Coordinating Committee.

I would like this job mainly because of the personal satisfaction it would give me to do a job well, and hopefully to add something of value to the college community before I graduate next year. I would appreciate your support.

—John Barker

From discussions with various members of the campus community I have heard several ideas which I would like to submit to the student body as being worthy of ASCC consideration and action. First, there is the perennial problem of "student apathy" which I would like to re-define in "effective lines of communication." This manifests itself as poor attendance at assemblies, etc. Certain basically simple steps can and should be taken to correct this situation.

Second, for the benefit of all members of the college community, especially the first semester freshmen in the hall, the trend toward more all-school social functions should be aided and encouraged by the ASCC.

Third, as effective instruments of communication and as organizations in a position to render great service to Colorado College, the Greek organizations should be given assistance by the ASCC in such matters as public relations.

Fourth, in light of the attacks by several members of the freshman class on the Freshman Week and "hazing period" activities, an examination of those events must be made for purposes of possible improvement.

I would like to submit the aforementioned proposals as the outline of my platform as a candidate for the office of ASCC vice president.

—Dave Bitters

If elected vice president of the ASCC there are certain actions which I would like to take. The ASCC is the vital student organ of the campus and should be utilized as such. I feel that the ASCC could be used more effectively if there was a more direct line of communication between it and the student body as a whole. I suggest that the now-existing Enthusiasm Committee be expanded so that not only will its traditional function be fulfilled, but also that it may serve as a medium so that student suggestions may have a direct channel to the ASCC. I feel that this will strengthen the ASCC.

My activities are: Recording Secretary of Phi Gamma Delta; chairman of the Sports and Outings Committee on the Rastall Center Board; School Intramural Manager, member of varsity basketball team; captain of the school bowling team; and a member of the traffic committee. I believe all of these have brought me closer to the student body and have acquainted me with many of the campus grips that I feel should be acted upon.

—William E. Pelz

Secretary

I would like to take this opportunity to thank those of you who have supported me in this campaign by signing my petition for the office of ASCC secretary. Anyone who did not sign has missed their big chance, for since

DAVE HOLDORF

Dave Holdorf is a chemistry major from Grand Junction, Colorado. He is currently serving as vice president of the junior class. As a member of ASCC he is chairman of the Academic Committee and is a member of the Finance Committee. Mr. Holdorf is also the permanent representative of CC to the Colorado Collegiate Association.

In the past two years Dave has worked with Rastall Center Board—last year with the Special Events Committee and this year with the Cultural Affairs Committee. He has also held various offices in his fraternity. He has a 3.1 grade average.

Student government has three primary objectives: as a training ground and laboratory, as an agency which influences the operations of the college, and as a speaking voice for the students on a community, state, and national level. The effective execution of these objectives is obviously the task of an able and effective Executive Council.

In regard to specific courses of action with these objectives in mind, I propose, in short: the publication of a student officer's manual, expanded and facilitated lines of communication between students, the Executive Council, and the Administration, a vastly expanded program of foreign student exchange, and in every area closer cooperation and coordination between the ASCC and every campus organization.

With these general proposals and many other more explicit ones it is hoped that ASCC can hold the position a student governing body should have on any campus, can help dispel a certain amount of traditional, non-inherent student apathy, and can bring the healthy situation of diversity of student interest from a total dichotomy to a situation of complementary communication.

—Dave Holdorf

There were no other petitions for this position, it seems that the student body is now in the dubious position of having obtained a secretary. I have no platform, but I do hope that anyone who has suggestions as to ways in which the communications system could be improved will see me. Otherwise I shall proceed with vigor.

—Karen McIvaine

Treasurer

As a member of the executive council of ASCC and chairman of the Finance Committee, the ASCC treasurer will have influence on many financial and legislative matters. In hearing requests and proposing a budget, he must not be tradition-bound, but should be willing to make sound and imaginative judgments on the relative values of the various uses of student funds.

HARRIS SHERMAN

Harris Sherman is a junior history major from Denver, Colorado. He is currently serving as editor of THE TIGER (ex-officio, president of the ASCC), president of the International Relations Club, vice president of Pi Gamma Mu, and president of the Science Honorary, chairman of the CC Young Democrats, member of the Assemblies Committee, Publications Board, and Symposium Committee. He is currently and has been a member of the Colorado Springs Symphony for the last three years.

In his first two years, Mr. Sherman participated on the tennis team, ski team, debate team, Biggs, Kinnikinnick, IRC, and Young Dems. He has a 3.3 grade-point average.

"The next president of the ASCC will have an important, unique responsibility in working with the college administration during the recent resignation of President Benetz. The cooperation, understanding, and representation of student interests with this administration will be a vital function of the ASCC president and executive council. If a strong, constructive relationship can be instituted between the students and their administration, this will turn care a lasting, reliable basis for future cooperation.

As president of the ASCC, I would try to expand its function and purpose beyond that of an administrative agency of the student body. The ASCC should be a legitimate body to represent student opinions in all areas including academics, athletics, and social standards. Such an understanding would add importance, vitality, and concern to student government.

The ASCC does not have to succumb to the ungrounded prejudices that student governments are traditionally weak. The college community can only profit from aggressive, representative student leadership."

—Harris Sherman

I ask that you seriously consider the candidates for this office in terms of their demonstrated abilities and past acceptance of varied responsibilities. Further, ask for your own support in the bid for this position.

—Paul Carlson

The office of treasurer for the student body is one of great importance. It entails many duties but in essence needs a man with knowledge of financial undertakings. Because of my course of study, I am confident that my qualifications are more than adequate. To further this my financial duties have given me more experience along these lines. I would enjoy having the opportunity to serve you, the entire student body, in this capacity and for your wholehearted support.

Student Conduct Committee Nominees Give Intentions

The impending elections will include the election of four new members of the Student Conduct Committee. The current Student Conduct Committee has nominated 12 sophomores whom it feels are highly qualified for the positions. Two girls and two boys, who will serve on the Committee their junior and senior years.

Also included on the ballot will be two proposed changes to the Student Conduct Committee constitution.

1) According to the current Student Conduct Committee constitution all changes in the constitution must be made through an all-school election: "An all-school election shall be conducted under the supervision of the A.S.C.C. Election Committee; and the proposed amendment shall be approved by a majority of those voting in this election." The proposed change reads: "An amendment to this constitution shall be adopted by concurrence of three-fourths of the total membership of the Student Conduct Committee, subject to approval by the Executive Council of A.S.C.C." This change would not only simplify the method of adopting amendments but would place a stronger confidence by the student body in their elected representatives on the Student Conduct Committee.

2) The current constitution states that students can only run for the committee by nominations from the committee itself. The proposed change would authorize petitions as a second method of nomination. This would give students not nominated by the committee an opportunity to run for a position on it. The proposed amendment reads: "Nominations may also be made by petition of fifty eligible members of the student body."

The Committee is composed of eight students, two faculty members, the Dean of Women, and the Dean of Men, all having equal votes. A student serves as chairman. Members of the present Student Conduct Committee are: David Hite, chairman; Leigh Rainey, Carol Anderson, Art Merrill, Nan Burroughs, Stephanie Ray, Mike Durfee, Matt Raley, Dean Moon, Dean Reid, Miss Clayton and Mr. Juhas.

Below each of the twelve students nominated to run for the Committee has prepared a statement to aid the voters in understanding the nominees' purpose in running for the Committee.

As we have seen this year, the Student Conduct Committee is faced with several unique problems which it, as the most powerful judicial organization on campus, must solve to the satisfaction of both administration and students. Having served on the disciplinary council for the Men's Residence Hall, I feel that this experience would be valuable in ascertaining the goals of the Committee as related to the goals of the community. I want the community continually change, the Committee must continually re-evaluate and re-examine its decisions and policies, and its members must strive to enter into this effort sincerely and earnestly.

—Terry Fonville

At Colorado College non-academic disciplinary cases not under the jurisdiction of the Judicial Board or the Intra-Hall Council are handled by the Student Conduct Committee. Eight students are chosen to have voice with the deans and two faculty members in doling out what is hoped to be justice. Your responsibility now is to elect eight fellow students who will deal with each case fairly using facts and carefully weighed values. I assure you that no candidate if elected may bear this office lightly. Good luck in your choice.

—Daniel W. Martin

Student Conduct Committee holds the responsibility for judging the actions of other students in the best interest of the student body as well as of the individuals involved.

I realized that the basis for behavior is greatly varied and that each student case will differ according to the circumstances involved. I would do my best to be understanding and to demonstrate maturity and fairness in the discipline of student conduct.

—Myrtle Miller

Colorado College is one of the few colleges that can truly say that the students are a real part of its government. It is progressively becoming a school "of" the students, not a dominating institution "for" the students. The Student Conduct Committee is one of the most significant groups involved in this instigation of government, and I feel sincerely honored to be nominated for a position on it. If elected, I will do everything possible to use my understanding and good judgment to help this committee in its job as a judicial body for its supporters and peers.

—Susan Moore

While SCC certainly gets its share of angry complaints, it is still one of the most important committees on campus. On this committee, the student has a voice and a vote directly affecting their life of CC students. It is not an easy business. My experience on

French Play

The French Department will present Moliere's Les Precieuses Ridicules on April 19 at 8:00 p.m. in Perkins Hall. This play is typical of French satire of the 17th century, and due to its superb cast this promises to be an excellent performance as well as an entertaining evening.

From the Chair

Communications Committee

By Karen McIlvaine

The Communications committee consists of the Secretary of the Executive Council who serves as chairman, the editor of the Tiger, and one student at large chosen by the chairman. The duties of this committee are to inform the student body about pertinent issues discussed in the ASCC meeting through the "ASOC Notes" in the Tiger. Also, this committee is to compile by the second week of May an annual summary report of the concerns and achievements of the various ASCC committees and the accomplishments and direction taken by the Executive Council. This report is also published in the Tiger. From the Chair and the weekly KRCC broadcast on Mondays are mediums used to inform the student body as to the functions and achievements of the various ASCC committees. The communications system next year should be furthered by keeping the student body in closer touch with the Executive committee and the other ASCC committees. It is desirable to work communication in reverse so that the committees may be better informed as to students' feelings and ideas. Communication does not end here. It is advisable to have a stronger student-faculty-administration communication system in order to have a smoothly functioning student government. It is hoped that the chairman of the communications committee will also be a member of the Committee on Undergraduate Life next year to further this relationship. The communications committee cannot, however, carry on the entire task of communication. Approximately one-half of all communication must come from the student body as a whole, and it is the desired end of this committee to stimulate the student body to the realization of this fact. Student government can only function efficiently if there is adequate communications between the students at large and the committees and between the committees and the Executive Council. Everyone concerned in each of these areas must take an active part if we are to have a strong student government.

• Rejuvenates CC

and will continue in the future. Pamphlets of studies in various fields are being published under the title of Colorado College Studies. A summer seminar is operated under a grant from the National Science Foundation, and many programs such as the Danforth Workshop and the John Hay Fellows program have been established on our campus.

The most important test of a college is the education it gives its students, but this measurement of the quality of its product is the hardest factor to judge. Simple numerical criteria can be established, such as the fact that this year Colorado College had five Woodrow Wilson Fellowship winners as compared to three in the best previous years or the fact that out of the class of 1962 more than twice as many students received fellowships as those of the year before. But the more important factor is the general level of education available to all. Many professors, as well as students, have commented on the new intellectual atmosphere at Colorado College in the past years. There has been a notable shift towards a background encouraging more reading, more interest in intellectual subjects, and above all, more original thinking. This change is the result of all the factors previously mentioned—it is our only purpose. And in all the facets contributing toward it, we can see the efforts of President Benezet in encouraging others, filling available posts with able men, and providing energy and direction for a concerted effort.

In 1957, Dr. Benezet said, "Our aim is that Colorado College shall be known as one of the three great coeducational colleges of the west and one of the six great coeducational colleges of the country. I believe this goal can be reached in seven years." We are still one year short of the time, and even then there will be no objective way to determine success or failure in achieving this goal. But our achievements in that direction can be attributed to a large extent to the efforts of President Louis T. Benezet.

The treasurer of the ASCC carries a great moral and financial responsibility to the Colorado College community, and I feel that I am qualified for this position.

As treasurer of my fraternity I receive and disperse approximately seven hundred dollars each month, which requires careful accounting of all expenditures and receipts.

I feel that the financial aspect of the office carries the representation of the campus: All financial aid from ASCC to campus organizations must be approved by the Financial Committee, the chairman of which is the treasurer.

Rastall Center Board is looking for willing and competent workers on various committees NOW!! Be the first to get your bid in. Applications are at Rastall Center Desk and are due at the desk by Tuesday, April 23.

Shove Chapel

Good Friday April 12th 12:00 Noon

So that there may be opportunity for members of the college community to participate in worship on Good Friday there will be a short service of meditation in Shove Chapel at 12:00 noon on this day. All members of the college community are invited to attend. This half hour service, conducted by Professor Kenneth Burton will be held in the Pilgrim Chapel (the side chapel in the southeast corner of the main building).

Easter Sunday Morning

April 14, 9:00 a.m.

A college Easter Morning Service of Holy Communion will be held in Shove Chapel on Sunday morning. This festival service will be celebrated in accordance with the liturgy with the Church of South India. This church is one of the concrete results of the Ecumenical Movement. It is a united church and it incorporates within itself many elements of church order and Christian tradition. It has Episcopal and non-Episcopal and it also possesses some elements of Christian tradition which are lost in antiquity. This comes from the ancient Syrian Church, believed to have been founded by the Apostle Thomas, and which was found to be in existence when the first European Missionaries landed in India. This rite was the one celebrated at the second general assembly of the World Council of Churches in Evanston, Illinois. It is a very beautiful and moving service at which Christians from many different traditions should feel at home. One of the features of the liturgy is the number of Congregational Responses. The congregation is meant to participate to a large extent throughout the whole of the worship. An open invitation is given to all members of the college community who wish to participate. Professor Kenneth Burton will be the celebrant at this service and Professor Nicholas Piodisalz will give a short address which is an integral part of the liturgy.

Shove Chapel Easter Morning

Service 11:00 a.m.

The usual 11:00 service will be held in Shove Chapel. The theme of this service will be in accordance with the Easter season. There will be special Easter music sung by the college choir under the direction of Mr. Donald Jenkins. The organist will be Mr. Mike Orem and the preacher will be Professor Kenneth Burton. Again an invitation is extended to the members of the college community to unite in worship at this festival season.

• Student Conduct

Honor Council has taught me that each case must be viewed separately with unprejudiced thinking. Judging other people isn't much fun but it is far better to my mind that students be involved in these decisions when they do have to be made. If SCC will continue to take its job seriously and make more of an effort to inform the students of its policies, its work will be significant. This organization needs your support. Good luck in your choice of candidates.
—Susan Caudill

I am very honored to have been nominated for the Student Conduct Committee. This is one of the most important committees on campus in many respects. The members of the committee not only must pass judgment on their peers but they must also consider the integrity of the college and the rights of the individual. The judgments of the committee should be consistent and objective but they can't become bogged down in a dogmatism that neglects the individual and consideration of the basis of his actions. If elected to the committee, I would serve to the best of my ability in the manner outlined above.

—Steve Friderikson
To me, the job of the SCC is not, "Are this student's moral standards to low?" but, "Does the student body want this person to represent Colorado College?" I will try to be objective and consider the feelings of the student body in reviewing each case.

—Marsha Irving
The Conduct Committee requires a sense of objectiveness and responsibility to be carried out without prejudice and with an open mind. I have great respect for the work of the committee and its responsibility, and I feel my experience as counselor in Slocum Hall would give me some insight to the reactions and problems that must be faced.

—Peter McLaughlin

The election of new members to serve on the Student Conduct Committee follows closely enough the defeat of the proposed Moral Code that it is important for each of us to think carefully about discipline and the ways in which it should be presented to the student body to be the type of corrective and preventive measure that we wish it to be. I feel that the Student Conduct Committee, by giving students the opportunity to govern themselves in this important area as well as academically, is one of CC's most important groups and one on which I would feel it a privilege to serve.

Linda Dunkin

In thinking of the Student Conduct Committee, one should ultimately think of a group of fellow students concerned with the welfare and conduct of the student body on, as well as off the college campus. The committee is not necessarily a punitive body, but an arm of student government dedicated to service to the college community. I believe that an individual seeking such a position should be willing to uphold the standards set by that committee, and encourage others to respect and uphold these standards as well, with all the sincerity and faithfulness that is in his power.

Dwight Kramer

Membership in the college student body signifies—at least—a common denominator in the aspiration to certain goals through education; and the resulting community can be a valuable association for its individual components. In fact it must be to justify its existence. At the same time, the union commits its members to a basic responsibility, that of respecting the rights of others in their goal pursuit. Actions negatively affecting the rights of the individual (and consequently the balance of the community) must be reviewed by the community itself, thus explaining the importance of a student conduct committee.

—Bruce Colvin

It seems to me there is no real way to judge beforehand the qualifications a person may have for being on this committee. Al-

Two cases of stealing from Tutt Library were recently brought before the Student Conduct Committee. In each case, the student involved was given a reprimand noting that with any future act of misconduct, this incident will be weighed heavily in the penalty assessed.

—Student Conduct Committee

AN ENRAGED WOYZECK (Brad Snyder) assaults Marie (Sue Auer) and the brutal world in which he finds himself ensnared. The German Department will present "Woyzeck" tomorrow night at 8:30 in Perkins.

CC German Club to Produce Revolutionary Drama, "Woyzeck"

The CC German Club will perform "Woyzeck," a revolutionary German drama that first was produced 77 years after it was written. It will be shown at 8:30 p.m. Saturday, April 13, in Perkins Hall on the college campus.

Woyzeck, written by George Büchner, is based on a historical incident in 19th century Germany. A soldier named Woyzeck is driven to the limit of his endurance by his cruel life.

Woyzeck will be played by Brad Snyder. Other roles include the Captain played by Fred Luft, Marie by Sue Auer, the Doctor by Gary Boucher, and the Drum Major by Norman Colbert.

The play is directed by James Dyson, a senior. He is assisted by Mrs. Hertha Feyock, instructor in German, and William McMillen, associate professor of speech and drama.

The performance will be in German with an English explanation in the printed program, and the hour-long production will be open to the public without charge.

most every citizen at some time is called up for jury duty. It is the fact of their peacetime that is important. Because CC is what it is, it can and does make use of this democratic system of self-discipline or regulation to help preserve itself as such. To my mind then, it follows that anyone understanding the rationale behind such a Student Conduct Committee cannot but serve on it with the utmost of his discretion and sense of fairness. Only in this way can it be maintained as the legitimate body worthy of the duties laid upon it by the college community. I hope that my understanding of all this is correct, because I am very interested in working on this committee in a manner which will not discredit the prior faith that came with the nomination.
—Kay Knudson

The D.G.s had a wonderful picnic with their alums, highlighted by an egg hunt for the children and the alums and 75 pounds of D.G. fried chicken.

This Thursday at 2:00 p.m. we are dedicating our new house. Two of our National officers and many of our sisters from Denver are participating in the ceremonies. Following the dedication at which President Louis T. Benezet will speak, a reception will be held until 4:00 p.m.

Gamma Phi Beta

Gamma Phis from three states and seven colleges joined forces on the Colorado College campus last weekend for the Province 11 conference. The sessions provided an exchange of ideas by all groups, and the meetings were formally ended with a banquet at the Palmer House with Maggie Huston, Gamma Phi alumna, presiding.

Kappa Alpha Theta

Last Monday night the Thetas entertained the Phi Gams for dessert and "games." The highlight of the evening was the skills displayed by the "Blockhead" players. The whole evening was hilarious and everyone had a good time. Congratulations to Ann Herlihy for being named co-chairman of Greek Weekend with George Klein! Since so much interest was generated in our debate with the D.G.s the Thetas decided to hold their own debates, but more in the form of discussion among the members of the house. Next Monday night we will have the first of these discussions.

ASCC Notes

Rastall announced that applications are open for committees; the forms may be obtained from Rastall desk. Also, the Easter party which is scheduled on the social calendar has been cancelled. There will be a Friday Afternoon Club meeting on the 26th of April and the annual Tournament of Cycles will be held on the 27th of April.

The two proposed changes in the constitution will be voted on next week at the executive council meeting. The first change, ARTICLE I, Sections 1 and 2, part a, and Section 3, part b, proposes that the cumulative semester hours required to run for an executive council office be based on 15 hours per semester rather than 16. The second change in the constitution is with regard to ARTICLE I, Section 5, part m of the By-Laws which is concerned with a vacancy in the position of class commissioner. The proposed change is to add the phrase "to fill the specific vacancy," so that the constitution will read, "... nominations will be taken from the floor to fill the specific vacancy..." Any discussion of these changes should be brought to the ASCC meeting on April 15 at 4:00 p.m.

Choir Presents Easter Program, Proves Self Skilled, Confident

On Sunday afternoon the Colorado College Choir, under the direction of Donald Jenkins, presented the program of Easter music which was presented on the annual spring choir tour. The program opened with three 16th Century choral pieces, "Lumen Ad Revelationem," by William Byrd, "Come, Holy Ghost," by Christopher Tye, and "Surrexit Pastor Bonus," by Orlando di Lasso. Following this the choir sang

"Es Ward Eine Stille" by Christoph Demantius, a lively work describing a battle between St. Michael and a dragon, which was presented very convincingly and with much enthusiasm.

The major work of the program was Ralph Vaughan-Williams' "Mass in G Minor for Double Chorus and Soli." The soloists, Barbara Couey, soprano; Charlotte Adams, alto; Horace Work, tenor; and Ben Lyon, bass, all did credit to their reputations. The second half of the program opened with Brahms' motet, Op. 29, No. 2, on the 51st Psalm. In this work the choir achieved a rich tone and beautifully sustained phrasing very appropriate to Brahms' choral music.

"David Mourneht for Absalom" by Norman Lockwood was a powerful number. The program closed with two 17th century carols, "This Joyful Easteride" and "All Glory, Laud, and Honor," and William Dawson's arrangement of the Negro spiritual "Ain't That Good News."

The choir's performance was characterized by confidence and precision which was indicative of a great deal of work and familiarity with the music.

The tone quality was sometimes fuzzy and strained, especially at the beginning and the end of the program but the singers also proved themselves capable of good tone quality in the Brahms and parts of the Vaughan-Williams mass.

CC Track Team Wins Tri-Meet

Last Saturday Colorado College opened its outdoor track season by romping to victory in a Rocky Mountain Conference triangular meet against Adams State and Western State. CC piled up 73½ points against 65½ for Adams State. Although the Tigers managed to cop only five first places in 15 events, they got enough second, third, and fourth places to win the meet.

The outstanding performances were turned in by Tony McGinnis, who accounted for two of the five firsts in the mile and two mile events; Farrel Howell, winner of the javelin throw; Abiodun Afonja, in the broad jump, and Norm Linden, who ran away with the 440.

This weekend the Tigers travel to Ft. Collins for a triangular meet with CSU and CSC.

Parents' Weekend Activities Set

Parents' Weekend is not just a time specifically set aside for parents, but is a time when students can participate together for the benefit of themselves and their parents and other visitors. The two main highlights of these four days will be the Song Fest on Friday night in which all the sororities and fraternities and the Zetas compete for vocal honors. The following morning at 11:00 will be the convocation when President Benetz will speak of "Changes in the Wind—1963." Saturday night will be the Faculty-Student-Parent dinner in Rastall, however neither this dinner nor the Sunday morning breakfast in the Garden of the Gods are restricted to students whose parents are present. They can buy tickets in Rastall Center.

Following the dinner will be a variety show in Perkins Hall. Judy Hoyer and Kathy Maes, as well as Luis Arrieta and Fernando Perez, and Barbara Couey and others will perform. That same evening will be the All-School and parents Blue Key Dance from 9:00-1:00 a.m. at the Palmer House. Tickets may be purchased from Blue Key members.

During these four days, April 25-28, students will be able to participate in all the above events as well as the Tournament of Cycles, the FAC, the Song Fest reception, and the non-denominational church service in Shove on Sunday morning. See you there.

CC French Department Presents Play Friday

The Colorado College French department will present "Les Precieuses Ridicules," a satire by Moliere, at 8 p.m. Friday, April 19, in Perkins Hall.

The plot concerns two young and silly cousins, Magdelon and Cathos, who have been greatly influenced by the "precieuses." They scorn two young would-be suitors because the latter do not conform to the girls' ideas of elegant young gentlemen.

The suitors plan revenge by substituting their valets for themselves.

Playing the two cousins are Stephanie Row and Carol Paige. Cast in the roles of the suitors are Melvyn Minsky and Rudolf Giesinger. Paul Kilbreath and Prof. Herving Madruga of the French department are the valets.

The 17th century satire is directed by Stephanie Row and produced by Professor Madruga in cooperation with other members of the French department.

Eleven Man Committee Named To Help Select New President

Armin B. Barney, '20, chairman of the Board of Trustees, last week announced that an eleven-man committee has been named to help select a new president for Colorado College.

The action followed the Monday announcement by President Louis T. Benetz that he has accepted the presidency of the Claremont Graduate School and University Center.

Barney said the names of several persons from throughout the United States already have been submitted as possible candidates. The board chairman made it clear that the college would not be looking in just one direction in its search for a new president. He said the committee and the board would move swiftly to find a successor to President Benetz.

Serving on the selection committee are five trustees, three alumni and three members of the faculty. Robert W. Hendon, a member of the board, was named committee chairman. Other trustees on the committee are Russell T. Tutti,

Sparse Audience Hears Pres. Candidates Speak

By Peter Bonavich

Before a milling and unwieldy crowd of almost 60 students and no faculty members, Harris Sherman and Dave Holdorf, the two hopefuls for the office of ASCC president, Tuesday presented their platforms to the Colorado College community.

Dave Holdorf, introduced by Steve Frink, presented a three-point program. Mr. Holdorf stated that he would, if elected, expand the scope of the foreign student program. He pointed out that at present $16 of tuition fund is applied to student activities, and that an increase of 50¢ per semester would allow two students to receive $600 apiece for travel and study abroad.

Mr. Holdorf's second proposal was the compilation of a student officers' manual to aid newly elected members of ASCC in assuming their duties quickly and competently.

The third plank in Mr. Holdorf's platform was active participation and involvement in the newly-formed Colorado Collegiate Association. He enumerated a number of advantages which would accrue to the college as a result of membership in this body.

He noted that the upcoming visit of the First Secretary of the Soviet embassy was arranged under CAA auspices.

In closing, Mr. Holdorf expressed his views on the proposed standard of student conduct. He asserted that the underlying basis of judicial power must first be determined, and that students must have the opportunity to apply the standard. The standard, Mr. Holdorf insisted, must be established by the purpose of student judicial power. He suggested that an acceptable statement would be a simple declaration by Colorado College students that they accept responsibility for the college community as a whole and for the individual rights of the fellow students.

Mr. Holdorf appealed to his audience to recognize the importance of experience as a qualification for office on the ASCC Executive Council, and asserted that next year could offer, under qualified leadership, an unprecedented opportunity to strengthen ASCC.

Harris Sherman, introduced by Matt Railey, noted the existence of two areas in which ASCC has a responsibility to act on behalf of its student constituents. In the first of these areas, that of the administration and coordination of student activities, Mr. Sherman asserted that ASCC was carrying out its task adequately. In the second area, that of concern with a number of the problems which intimately involve CC students, such as curriculum, admissions and athletics, he credited ASCC with considerably less success.

Mr. Sherman went on to point out that areas of vital importance to CC students are being decided almost entirely by the administration. But, he noted, the administration is eager to receive student opinion and consultation in these areas. He is hopeful that members of ASCC might next year be asked to sit with the faculty in evaluating and altering the curriculum of the college. In addition, there is high probability that ASCC officers might be asked to assist the Admissions Committee in selecting incoming freshmen. Mr. Sherman continued by saying the administration would welcome student suggestions concerning the athletic policy of Colorado College. He added that student views would not determine an administrative decision, but could be valuable in contributing to the final outcome.

The junior history major closed his speech with a consideration of the threat of provisions as a result of the comparative seclusion of the college, and with an endorsement of the Colorado Collegiate Association and the possibility of a Junior Year Abroad program.

The question period following the speeches was, surprisingly enough, lively beyond all proportion to the number of students present.

Mr. Holdorf, asked how he intended to expand the foreign student program with tuition funds when the Foreign Student Committee is already faced with a $1500 deficit, admitted that he knew nothing of such a lack of funds and would have to investigate the matter further, but reiterated his determination to expand the program if possible.

A question directed to Mr. Holdorf by Brad Chase, last year's unsuccessful candidate for ASCC president, injected a transitory note of controversy into the assembly. Mr. Chase asked Mr. Holdorf to elaborate on the latter's alleged open willingness to compromise with the administration. After Mr. Holdorf had attempted to defend himself with the assertion that cooperation is not necessarily compromise, Myles Hopper rose to assert the unfairness of Mr. Chase's question due to two considerations, (1) the unavoidable necessity of compromise as an adjunct to what he termed "practical politics" and (2) the unfair direction of the question to only one candidate.

After a short exchange in which Mr. Chase expressed his disgust at the consistent failure of student leaders to take "real stands" on the important issues, and Mr. Hopper countered with skepticism concerning the existence of such issues, Mr. Loosli cut the skirmish short.

Jo Heller asked each candidate's views on the Student Policy Committee's usefulness.

Mr. Sherman recommended the Committee's dissolution since it is no longer able to fulfill the function delegated to it by the student body. He suggested that it be replaced by a Judicial Committee which would provide a sort of coordinative liaison among all the judicial bodies. In response to a direct question, Mr. Sherman asserted that he saw no need for a student code.

Mr. Holdorf argued that the committee should continue to attempt the development of a satis-

In response to a request for Mr. Sherman to indicate his frequency of appearance at ASCC meetings, the presidential candidate replied that his duties as Tiger editor inevitably brought him into close contact with ASCC proceedings.

Replying to present ASCC President Max Power's query concerning the efficacy of informal channels in carrying on ASCC affairs, both candidates replied that yes, they thought such means could be effective, and yes, such channels should be kept open on a regular (but not formal) basis with open lines of communication to students.

With that the multitudes and the candidates adjourned to lunch.

Student Academic Committee

By Dave Holdorf

The Academic Committee is the student counterpart of the Faculty Curriculum Committee. It serves as an intermediary body between the faculty and the students to advise the faculty and administration about course programs which students have constructively criticized. In addition, the Academic Committee can offer suggestions to the Committee on Instruction concerning non-curriculum problems, such as examination schedules and other calendar problems that concern the student body as a whole. The greatly improved academic calendar this year is partly a result of the work of the Committee of last year in collecting student opinion and submitting its results to the faculty Committee on Instruction. A new function came into existence last year as the Academic Committee felt the need of establishing a summer reading program for freshmen and subsequently initiated such a program. This year the Academic Committee has greatly expanded the program to include upperclassmen. This was a direct result of the groundwork laid by last year's committee and the criticism which came from it. The Academic Committee can and should become the Executive Council's strong link between students and administration. It is the prime committee on ASCC which concerns itself directly with the problem students at college are most interested in . . . getting the type of education they want and need.

Constitution Committee

By Polly Thompson

The Constitution Committee is composed of two members of the executive council, one who is the chairman, and a member from each class. Its purpose is to meet at least once a semester to study the ASCC Constitution and By-Laws and to recommend any changes to ASCC. In addition, it reviews constitutions submitted by organizations on campus before ratification by the Executive Council. This semester the committee has approved several changes to the ASCC Constitution. Several of them had to do with additional members serving on Publications Board as well as certain changes in their procedure. The election time period was changed to election of president, vice-president, secretary and treasurer once. A change in the hour requirement for election and specification of the procedure for filling vacant offices is now under consideration by the Executive Council. Anyone who would like to look over the ASCC Constitution may do so in the Student Activities Center.

ATHLETIC LEAGUES

CC now belongs to two leagues for all practical purposes. When the football schedule for 1963 was announced, which included Doane, Hastings, and Nebraska Wesleyan, it became obvious that we were going to give the idea of a new conference a 'test run' to see just how feasible it will eventually be. This new conference is probably a step in the right direction. Certainly these schools have educational outlooks much closer to that of our own than do the schools in the present Rocky Mountain Conference. And yet, a closer examination of the athletic policies of these schools reveals the dissimilarity that actually exists between us and our new 'allies.'

Except in hockey, we have discontinued the policy of giving athletic scholarships for varsity athletics, and we no longer have easy majors and low eligibility standards which would allow mediocre students and good athletes to be eligible to play. Doane, Nebraska Wesleyan, and Hastings have all of these things and more; they have a desire to win and have in part subsidized their desire.

This raises the question of whether or not we have reached the final solution to our problem of finding schools with whom we are athletically compatible. I would say the new conference, which will in all probability be established on a more permanent basis in the future, represents a step, but not a leap, forward. It is not, and must not be, the final solution to our athletic problem.

Film Previews

A motion picture of unusual interest to campus cognoscenti will be shown at the Fine Arts Center in the coming two weeks.

Scheduled for this coming Tuesday, April 23, is a distinguished film from Poland, Ashea and Diamonds, a powerful dramatization of the question posed by the 19th century Polish poet Norwid: "Will the ashes from the flames of war hold the glory of a star-like diamond?"

The story opens immediately after the capitulation of Nazi Germany. Maciek (played by the "Polish Jimmy Dean," Zbigniew Cybulski) has been charged by resistance headquarters with the assassination of the newly arrived Communist district secretary. However, when the inadvertently gunning down of two innocents causes him to doubt the justification of further killing, Maciek decides to try to regain a peaceful civilian existence. However his "patriotic" obligation is not to be so easily put aside. He is forced to face humiliating charges of desertion and carry out his orders to kill. Consequently he himself must suffer a horrible and senseless death.

Although the picture is concerned more with the portrayal of emotion than with the creation of a symbolic system, Director Andre Wajda presents a series of compelling visual metaphors and most effectively demonstrates that death itself is never heroic.

—By Norman Colbert

TWO OTHER MOVIES

The Kitchen is a study of the overworked staff of a London restaurant that serves two thousand meals a day in cramped steaming quarters among mountains of food. I take it that the Socialist playwright Arnold Wesker wants the viewer to see the kitchen as a sort of hellish overworked world. If so it is a world of seemingly efficient pandemonium held together only by the refrain of frying food and hissing steam that rises to crescendo level twice daily. The scenes move from frenzy (lunch), to a sort of peaceful exhaustion (tea), to frenzy again and excellent camera work. The Kitchen runs only seventy-four minutes, but it is both amusing and terrifying while it lasts. It is being shown at the F.A.C. tonight at 8:30.

O'Neill's great play, Long Day's Journey Into Night, has been made into a movie by Sidney Lumet (View From the Bridge, The Fugitive Kind) and is currently being shown at the Peak. It was out a whole hour by the distributor so it can be seen twice an evening instead of once, with the result that what was once an outstanding movie is now just a good one. But even with the film mutilated and hacked as it is, (and the distributor says there is merit in this for "the movie will now have a greater chance to be commercially successful"), it is by far better than anything else playing in town and worth the effort to see it.

Assemblies Committee Presents Dr. Robert Kraft, Astronomer

Tuesday, April 23, at 11:00 in Perkins Hall, the Assemblies Committee will present Dr. Robert P. Kraft, an astronomer from the Mount Wilson and Mount Palomar Observatories. His topic will be "Stellar Evolution."

He was Professor of Astronomy at the Universities of Indiana and Chicago prior to assuming his present position at the Mount Wilson and Palomar Observatories, under the auspices of the Carnegie Institution of Washington and the California Institute of Technology. He is a member of the International Astronomical Union and the American Astronomical Society which recently awarded him the Warner Prize as Lecturer for 1963.

It is anticipated that Dr. Kraft will speak on a level which can be understood by students of all departments.

While he is on campus, Dr. Kraft will speak to students of Math and Physics, members of Delta Epsilon, and on Tuesday at 8:00 p.m. will lecture on "Exploding Stars" in Olin Lecture Hall.

Poetry Contest

The English department offers a first prize of twenty-five dollars for the best poems submitted by undergraduates of Colorado College. There are no restrictions as to the length, type or number of poems entered by each contestant.

Manuscripts must be typed, with the contestant's pen name appearing on each poem, and on the outside of the sealed envelope containing his or her poems. Each contestant must also hand in a separate sealed envelope with his or her pen name on the outside and his or her identification on the inside.

The manuscripts must be given to Mrs. Beck, secretary in Hayes House, not later than Friday, April 26.

These prizes were endowed by the late Rev. Albert F. Bridges in memory of his wife.

ASCC Notes

Voting for ASCC President, Vice-President, Secretary and Treasurer will be April 18 and 19 in Rastall. Voting machines will be used. Petitions for class commissioners are due April 22.

Polly Thompson announced that Suzanne Armstrong and Christie Michelwait will be co-chairmen of the Assemblies Committee for next year.

ASCC passed the recommendation of the Constitution Committee to change Article I, Section 5, part m of the By-Laws, which is concerned with a vacancy in the position of class commissioner. The change is to add the phrase "to fill the specific vacancy." The constitution then will read . . . "nominations will be taken from the floor to fill the specific vacancy . . ."

A motion was made and passed to change the cumulative semester hours required to run for ASCC Executive Council from 16 hours to 15 hours per semester.

Dave Holdorf announced that the summer reading list has been expanded to include departmental suggestions for the upperclassmen. A letter will be sent to every incoming freshman and to all the upperclassmen.

Walt Hecox announced the winners in the recent Rastall Center games area competition. "Mr. Roberts" is the Rastall Center movie to be shown Sunday evening, April 21. There will be a PAC on the 26 of April and the annual Tournament of Cycles will be held April 27. Applications are still available for Rastall Board committees. The forms may be obtained at the Rastall desk.

The Sophomore Class is having a picnic, Saturday, April 19 at 3 o'clock. The location will be disclosed when the Sophomores pay their money.

FILLING A WELL-NEEDED GAP

Although my son is a college freshman, I am glad to say that he is still not too old to climb up on my lap and have a heart-to-heart talk when things are troubling him. My boy is enrolled at Harvard where he is studying to be a fireman. From the time he was a little tiny baby he always said he wanted to be a fireman. Of course, my wife and I believed that he would eventually grow out of it, but no sir, the little chap never wavered in his ambition for one minute!

So here he is at Harvard today taking courses in net holding, mouth-to-mouth breathing, carbon tetrachloride, and Dalmatian dogs. It is a full schedule for the young man, and that, in fact, is exactly what we talked about when last he climbed upon my lap.

He complained that every bit of his time is taken up with his major requirements. He doesn't have so much as one hour a week to sample any of the fascinating courses outside his major—history, literature, language, science, or any of the thousand and one things that appeal to his keen young mind.

I am sure that many of you find yourselves in the same scholastic bind; you are taking so many requirements that you can't find time for some appealing electives. Therefore, in today's column I will forego levity and give you a brief survey in a subject that is probably not included in your curriculum.

He's still not too old

I have asked the makers of Marlboro Cigarettes whether I might employ this column—normally a vehicle for innocent merriment—to pursue this serious end. "Of course you may, crazy kid," they replied kindly, their grey eyes crinkling at the corners, their manly mouths twisted in funny little grins. If you are a Marlboro smoker—and what intelligent human person is not?—you would expect the makers of Marlboro to be fine men. And so they are—wonderful guys, every man-jack of them—good, generous, understanding, wise. They are each tipped with a pure white filter and come in soft pack or Flip-Top box.

But I digress. We were going to take up a topic you are probably unable to cover in your busy academic life. Let us start with the most basic topic of all—anthropology, the study of man himself.

Man is usually defined as a tool-making animal, but I personally do not find this definition entirely satisfactory. Man is not the only species which makes tools. The simians, for example, make monkey wrenches.

Still, when you come to a really complicated tool—like a lintotype, for instance—you can be fairly sure it was made by Homo sapiens—or else a very intelligent tiger. The question one should ask, therefore, is not who made the tool, but what did he do with it.

For example, in a recent excavation in the Olduvai Gorge a large assortment of hominoid fossils was found, all dating back to the Middle Pleistocene Age. Buried with the fossils was a number of their artifacts, the most interesting being a black metal box which emitted a steady beeping sound. Now, of course, zoologists will tell you that tree frogs make such boxes which they employ in their mating activities (I can't go into detail about it in this family newspaper) but the eminent anthropological team, Mr. and Mrs. Walther Signafos (both he and she are named Walther) were convinced that this particular box was made not by tree frogs but by Neanderthal men. To prove their point, they switched on the box and out came television, which, as everyone knows, was the forerunner of fire.

If there is anything more you need to know about anthropology, just climb up on my lap as soon as my son leaves.

© 1983 Max Shulman

The makers of Marlboro Cigarettes who sponsor this column, often with trepidation, are not anthropologists. They are tobaccoists—good ones, I think—and I think you'll think so too when you sample their wares—available wherever cigarettes are sold in all fifty states.

Saturday Review Sponsors National Literary Contest

By Terry Fonville

The Kinnikinnik has received word from the United States National Student Association of their plans for an Annual National Student Association Literary Contest to be co-sponsored with the Saturday Review. The National Executive Committee of the Association and the Saturday Review feel that a student literary magazine can provide a valuable outlet for students with a creative ability to write, as well as promote an appreciation of writing and literature in general among the student body. Too often the literary artist, indeed any artist, does not receive sufficient recognition from the society or the educational community. Nor do literary magazines make the necessary impact on the educational community.

The Association hopes that by giving national recognition to outstanding contributions in the literary field, they can help promote the quality of student literary magazines and thus increase their impact. For the magazines published in 1982-3 the contest will include four separate divisions.

1. Outstanding student literary magazine selected on the basis of best single issue;
2. Outstanding poem published in a student literary magazine;
3. Outstanding short story published in a student literary magazine;
4. Outstanding non-fiction published in a student literary magazine.

The Kinnikinnik staff has decided to submit the winter issue to the judges. However, individual works may be submitted. Therefore, all students who wish their material to be submitted in the contest should turn their work into the Kinnikinnik box at Rastall by Friday, April 26. The Saturday Review will award the winning magazine a prize of $250.00 and a plaque. The winning poem will be published in the Saturday Review and an article in the Review regarding the contest will include excerpts from the non-fiction and the short story as well as statements from the authors. Judges for the contest will be selected from the staff of Yale University.

We feel that this is an excellent opportunity for students at Colorado College. We hope that this contest will stimulate interest in our literary magazine and literary works.

Sigma Chi

Thanks to our darling pledge trainer, Ken Reeves, the Sigma Chi pledges' sneak was foiled last Friday. His daring and resourceful acrobatics saved the team from the embarrassment and tiring suffering last year by a successful sneak.

Congratulations to Roger Williams for his home run against Western State last Saturday and his good play at catcher.

Kappa Alpha Theta

This week all the Theta buses practicing for Song Fest Thetas are also very busy with sorts of Initiation Week activities. These took the form of some things and also some very meaningful activities. These activities will be climaxed with Initiation Saturday afternoon followed by an Initiation Banquet at the Theta House, Sunday morning. The ceremony, Sunday morning, will be the post-Initiation breakfast ceremony. And then there will be 20 Theta neophytes in the house!

The Fijis held a pinning ceremony with the Kappas this week in honor of Pam Philippus and Wayne Deutscher. Mutual addresses were exchanged and refreshments were served.

Congratulations are in order to Ron Taylor, who was selected to the Home Exchange next year, and to Bill Pelz, who is the Sigma and Outings chairman for Rastall Center.

Geoff is busily incorporating the group's experiences into a script for an episode on T.V.'s "The Cord."

Kappa Kappa Gamma

Inspiration week began with a bang at the Kappa house on Monday night. The pledges, all debut in their grubby best, were brought to trial for their many grievances. The court decided to penalize each of them in accordance with her interests. During the rest of the week, the pledges and actives got together for other traditional events in conjunction with the exciting week.

Saturday afternoon, the pledges will become full-fledged members of Kappa Kappa Gamma. That night a banquet will be held in their honor.

Congratulations are in order to Judy Stamfil, who, along with being named president of Ticker, was pinned to Cadet Guy Decker. And our best wishes to Phil Smith, next year's president of Loomis.

Faculty Approves Changes In CC Program of Study

During its regular meeting last week the faculty approved a number of changes in the Colorado College program of study. Its major action was the discontinuation of the education major program. Students seeking to qualify for teacher training certificates now will have to select their major field of study from one of the regular academic departments or from one of the distributed divisional majors.

Some of the changes we feel that a solid understanding of the subject to be taught is equally as important as courses in education," said Prof. Victor Hopper, chairman of the Colorado College education department.

In other action, Colorado College has adopted a measure which will permit students to declare a cross-discipline major within the division of natural sciences. The new major, approved by the faculty, will become effective in September. Students taking the distributed major will need between 10 and 60 semester credit hours in the natural sciences division, and will be required to take 19 hours of course work in each of

Fox on 'Woyzeck'

Last Saturday evening the German department and the German Club, with the assistance of student director James Dyson, gave a spirited if not wholly satisfying performance of George Buechner's Woyzeck. The greatest single flaw was a lack of dramatic rhythm, which should have flowed constantly throughout the play's 26 scenes. This was partially due to the slow moving of the poorly prepared stage crew during the blackouts. This performance's greatest success was the vitality generated in varying degrees by practically everyone in the cast.

Bradley Snyder, who attempted the very demanding title roll, began weakly with a razor, achieved his stirring moments in later scenes with Andres, and completed his performance not with a bang but a splash.

His mistress, Marie, was stronger in her scenes with the drum major than with Mr. Snyder. Susan Auer was a little tight in a role which demanded a great deal of expressiveness, but she nevertheless managed to gain some credibility and even sympathy in her repentance and fear after succumbing to the charms of the handsome drum major.

Norman Colbert performed Woyzeck's antagonist with melodramatic gusto, but what he gained in hilarity, he lost in stature. The Captain, played by Frederick Luft, was the most consistently successful performance in the cast. Mr. Luft did a skillful job in blending the garrulous pomposity and phony moralism of the "gute Mensch," Gary Boucher, at his comical best, outacted Messrs. Colbert and Luft in the role of the cynical Doctor, but he lost the momentum of his excellent early start.

The directing of Mr. Dyson was as irregular in quality as the rise and fall of his actors. The violence was well staged, but the follow through was stiff. His handling of the crowd scenes gave an animated but benched picture. The crucial scene of Marie's stabbing was spasmodic and poorly timed as was the suicide of Woyzeck, but his handling of some of the early scenes of the principals was much better motivated.

Despite certain inadequacies, the German department should be commended for choosing a drama like Woyzeck. Portrayal of such a play is a challenge to any group, and it is to be hoped that the department will continue to perform works of German drama which are at once more challenging and more rewarding than the lukewarm pieces which might be selected.

Golfers Win 3 for 5-0 Record

The Colorado College Golf Team registered its 5th straight victory without defeat when they downed three opponents over the last weekend. Last Friday the Tigers defeated Kansas State College (Emporia) 4-4 in a match played at the Broadmoor with Art Berglund leading the scorers with a 77.

On Saturday the golf team journeyed to Greeley where they defeated the Colorado State College team 24½-11½ at the Highland Hills golf course. Bob Magie was medalist for both teams with a 74.

Last Monday the Tigers made it a clean sweep when they battled high winds averaging 50 miles per hour, as well as the Colorado School of Mines team, before winning 17-4. Bob Heiny led the scorers with a fine 78.

Winning two matches over the weekend were Bob Magie, Bob Wollman, Bob Heiny, Cole Hulse, Art Berglund, and Don Stuck. Rich Nichols, Jim Schmitt, and Rick Ferminé notched a brace apiece.

The Tigers face Eastern New Mexico University at the Kiowa Camels course today and journey to the Air Force Academy tomorrow for a quadrangular with the Cadets, Eastern New Mexico and Colorado State College.

Nine Faculty Members Receive Promotions

Nine Colorado College faculty members have received promotions, effective in September.

The promotions, approved by the college's board of trustees, include one professor, three associate professors, and five assistant professors.

Dr. Thomas W. Ross was promoted from associate professor to professor of English.

Promoted from assistant professor to associate professor were Dr. Mary Hamilton of the zoology department, Dr. Eldon Hitchcock of the chemistry department, and Dr. Richard Paine of the mathematics department.

Instructors who were named assistant professors include Donald Jenkins of the music department, Frank Flood of the physical education department, Mrs. Hertha Feyock of the German department, Mary Chenoweth of the art department and Lawrence Berkove of English.

Professor Ross earned his bachelor's and Master's degrees at Colorado College and his Ph.D. at the University of Michigan. With the exception of two years as assistant director of the Salzburg Seminar in American Studies in Austria, he has been at the college continuously since 1951. He returned to full time teaching two years ago after having served as assistant dean of the college and director of admission.

Professor Hamilton, who joined the faculty of the college in 1959, holds a bachelor of science degree from Elmhurst College and a Ph.D. from Columbia University. Prior to coming to Colorado College she was a Rockefeller Fellow in the physiology department at the University of Michigan Medical School, associate laboratory director of the Colorado Foundation for Research in Tuberculosis, and in charge of the Serological Laboratory of the 4th Service Command at Ft. McPherson.

Professor Hitchcock taught chemistry at the University of Michigan and Bob Jones University before coming to Colorado College in 1957. His M.S. and Ph.D. degrees were earned at Michigan.

Professor Paine came to Colorado College two years ago after having taught mathematics at Central Michigan College, Stephen F. Austin College, and Walla Walla College. He holds master's and Ph.D. degrees from the University of Washington.

A painter whose works have been exhibited throughout the U.S., Professor Chenoweth taught at the University of Illinois before joining the Colorado College faculty in 1953. She holds a bachelor of fine arts degree from the University of Denver and a master's of fine arts degree from the University of Illinois.

Professor Jenkins has been directing the Colorado College Chorus in addition to teaching music since he came here three years ago from the Juillard School of Music where he was an instructor. He holds a bachelor of arts and bachelor of music education degrees from Oberlin College.

A graduate of Manhattan College, Professor Flood came to Colorado College in 1959 as an instructor in physical education. He is head track coach, assistant football coach and gymnasium instructor.

Professor Feyock is a graduate of the University of Munich and holds a master of arts degree from Colorado College. She was an interpreter for the military government of Bavaria and foreign travel consultant for World Wide Travel System before joining the college faculty here.

Professor Berkove holds a Ph.D. from the University of Pennsylvania, Skidmore College and DePaul University.

SCC Members Named; Constitution Changed

Four Colorado College sophomores were elected to the Student Conduct Committee in last week's all-school election. Two proposed changes in the Student Conduct Committee constitution were also approved. Mr. Dan Martin, Mr. Peter McLaughlin, Miss Sue Caudill and Miss Myrtle Miller received the largest number of votes in a field of twelve nominees. However, Mr. Dan Martin, also newly appointed member of the Honor Council, declined his election to the SCC Saturday. With a constitutional power to fill vacancies on the Committee, the current SCC met Sunday and appointed Mr. Dwight Kramer. Mr. Kramer had been a candidate in last week's election.

The new members of the SCC will not be active members of the committee until next year. They will serve on the committee for both their junior and senior years.

Hockey Coach Appointment Quiets De-emphasis Rumor

Robert N. Johnson, coach of the conference-winning hockey team at Roosevelt High School in Minneapolis for six years, today was named hockey coach at Colorado College.

Announcement of the appointment came from Dr. Louis T. Benetz, president of the college, who said, "Bob Johnson embodies in the best way that we have seen among the candidates the qualities we have been seeking for the Colorado College athletic program."

Johnson, 32, will assume his new duties in August.

A native of the Minnesota hockey country, Johnson was a forward on the University of Minnesota hockey team for two years. He previously played hockey at the University of North Dakota.

He holds a bachelor of science and master of arts degrees from the University of Minnesota.

During his six years at Roosevelt High School, the hockey team won the City Conference championship four times and compiled a conference record of 51 wins, seven defeats and one tie. Roosevelt has one of the largest high school hockey programs in the nation.

Johnson succeeds Tony Frasca, who resigned as Colorado College hockey coach to accept the newly created position of ice rink manager and director of the college's intramural program.

In announcing the appointment, President Benetz said:

"Bob Johnson is thoroughly initiated to the fast pace of hockey

Ford Grant Also

El Pomar Grants $750,000 to College

El Pomar Foundation of Colorado Springs last week announced a gift of $750,000 to Colorado College.

The grant will earn another $800,000 from the Ford Foundation of New York, which is adding a 40 per cent bonus to all funds raised by the college during a three-year matching period.

Announcement of the gift was made by H. Chase Stone, chairman of El Pomar Foundation, on behalf of the trustees of the foundation, at a breakfast meeting launching a downtown business drive for the Colorado College Campaign. Mr. Stone said the college would be free to use the fund "in any area of important need."

The grant, which carries the college past $3,000,000 in its Ford matching program, was applauded by Armin B. Barney, chairman of the college board of trustees, and Frank B. Arnold, chairman of the downtown drive.

"Few colleges have enjoyed the kind of support which has come to Colorado College from our friends of El Pomar Foundation," Mr. Barney said. "We find it difficult to choose appropriate words to express our warm gratitude for this timely and immensely cheering news. Our hopes for complete success in our Ford matching campaign have been given a wonderful lift."

El Pomar's grants to the college through the years have supported scholarships, academic operations and a number of capital projects. Today's gift was preceded in 1959 by a grant of $1,250,000 which built the Charles Learning Tuttle Library, dedicated last fall to honor late President of the foundation.

as western colleges play it. He is versatile in his background; he is well educated, and he is an experienced coach and leader of young men. We are content he will represent everything that we are doing as a selective liberal arts college with a man-sized athletic program."

The college said the selection of the Minnesota coach reaffirms its plans for an increasingly stronger hockey program that stresses American players who also are able students. Under construction is a full-size ice rink costing a third of a million dollars.

Johnson will be the fifth hockey coach at Colorado College, which pioneered hockey in the west in the 1930's.

At Colorado College, he will be assistant professor of physical education and head baseball coach and assistant football coach. He lettered in both sports at the University of Minnesota and played professional baseball in the Chicago White Sox organization.

Pelz, McIlvaine, Carson Win

Sherman Is Victorious By Large Majority

By Peter Bonavich

As the Rastall Center polls closed last Friday, and ASCC President Max Power and Election Committee Chairman Al Loosh examined the voting machine tallies, Harris Sherman emerged the president-elect of the Associated Students of Colorado College. The victorious candidate won by a tally of 420 to 270, taking the office with 61 1/2% of the votes cast.

Mr. Sherman expressed his gratitude and thanks to the student body for their expression of confidence, and asserted his hopes for "strong, active student government in the coming year."

Except for the presidential race, the election results were initially rather anti-climatic, with both the vice-president and treasurer elections forced into runoffs between the top two candidates.

In the vice-presidential contest, Dave Bitters and Bill Pelz were on the ballot again in a Wednesday runoff election. Pelz gained the office by an extremely close margin.

On the same runoff ballot were Paul Carson and George Klein, for the office of treasurer. Carson was victorious in the final tally by a large majority.

The contest for ASCC secretary was no contest, as Karen McIlvaine ran unopposed.

Despite the predictions of many that interest in the just-completed ASCC elections would sink to a low ebb in 1963, the students of Colorado College proved if anything slightly more interested in the voting outcome of the contests than in previous years.

When the polls closed, between 650 and something over 700, depending on the office, of those students qualified to vote had done so. The enrollment of the college is approximately 1250, indicating that the voting percentage was around 56%. By ideal standards this is anything but a heavy turnout, but for an election that was denied both issues and interest by most observers, it wasn't bad.

The race for secretary was easily the least controversial. Karen McIlvaine, running unopposed for the position, was relieved from the obligation to promise more than a job done to the best of her ability and an improvement in student government communications.

The race for treasurer was one in which issues had to be sort of force-fed in order to develop some points of opposition among the candidates. In the end, however, the contest was probably decided by students' preconceived notions of the general qualifications of those running.

The race for the vice presidency, which was closest of all, with the victor taking only 52% of the vote, probably most nearly represented a division along fraternity-non-fraternity lines. This is admittedly a generalization from very limited information, but it would be interesting to attempt to actually determine how consistently students voting in this particular contest did tend to line up according to their status as Greeks or non-Greeks.

The race for the presidency was most similar to that for treasurer, with students apparently voting more on the basis of their overall impression of the candidates than on the actual platforms. Mr. Sherman conducted a somewhat more vigorous campaign, pretty well blanketing the campus with his ideas and personality, and this energy, more than any conflict with Mr. Holdorf on substantial issues, seems to have been the deciding factor.

The only point on which Messrs. Holdorf and Sherman seem to have directly disagreed was that of the student code. It was unfortunate that their dispute came at a time when the code was about as interesting to most students as another detailed revision of the ASCC constitution would have been at this time last year.

Equally unfortunate was the denial to both candidates of the opportunity to speak and possibly to debate before a significant segment of the student body at an all-school assembly. It is little consolation to note that they made the attempt, and that it was the students who failed to keep the date.

We should, at any rate, congratulate the newly-elected members of the Executive Council. They are an interestingly diverse group, and Mr. Sherman's pledge to involve in areas of vital student interest promises to make 1963-64 a valuable and profitable year for the usefulness of the Associated Students of Colorado College.

Complete election returns are as follows:

President
Sherman	420 (61%)
Holdorf	270 (39%)
Vice-President
Bitters	267 (38%)
Pelz	258 (37%)
Barker	175 (25%)

Peace Corps Test Given on April 27

A new — and much shorter — Peace Corps Placement Test will be administered for the first time Saturday, April 27, in more than 800 communities across the nation.

The new test, to be given on an experimental basis, consists of half-hour sections on general aptitude and modern language aptitude. All applicants who have any knowledge of French or Spanish must remain to take the appropriate language achievement test of one hour's duration.

By contrast, the former examination took four to eight hours, depending on optional sections. Both tests are non-competitive. Applicants who took the longer test do not need to take the new one.

Some tests in the former battery have been found to be of low validity in relation to the success of Volunteers in training and overseas. Other sections were more useful for proper class placement in training than they were for selection.

College transcripts provide much of the information obtained from sections of the former test and the Peace Corps now requires transcripts from every candidate.

The new test will be given at 8:30 a.m. and should be taken by all new Peace Corps applicants for one of the 4,000 openings in 44 countries. Training begins in June, July, and August.

To be eligible to take the exam, candidates must bring a complete questionnaire to the test site with them.

Questionnaires and the location of the exam site may be obtained from the campus Peace Corps liaison officer, Doctor Sondermann.

Rastall Center Board Plans Photo Contest

A "SNAPSHOT CONTEST" is being sponsored by the Rastall Center Board in conjunction with the approaching "Tournament of Cities."

A trophy will go to that person who submits the best black and white picture of any aspect of the Tournament. All entries must be turned in at the Rastall Center Desk by May 6. They may be no smaller than 5x7 and no larger than 8x10. It is not necessary that the prints be mounted. There is no entry fee but there is a limit of four entries per person.

Judges will announce their decision by May 9. All entries become the property of the Rastall Center Board.

Shove Chapel

Shove Chapel Parents Weekend

April 28th, 11:00 a.m.

Sermon Title: "Parents and Children"

Preacher: Professor Kenneth Burton

Worship Leader: Marla Bullock

A warm invitation is extended to all students and their parents to attend the Parents Weekend worship service in Shove Chapel on Sunday morning. The sermon will attempt to deal with the paradox which is contained in the Scriptures concerning the imperative to obey and honor one's parents and at the same time what appears to be a discounting of the natural family relationship. The preacher will speak of the place of the natural human family in the family of all mankind under God. He will also attempt to show how in the Christian tradition human parenthood takes its pattern from the fatherhood of God. A service choir will help in the leading of worship under the direction of Mr. Donald Jenkins.

By Robert H. Adams

The "Honor System" is convenient. For students it means freedom from annoying close supervision, and, for teachers, freedom from proctoring duties. Yet the attraction of the system is surely beyond that of convenience. We are apparently asked to live by ideals that are not, in practice, widely respected. We are challenged, it would seem, to an uncommon nobility.

I do not question the convenience of the plan. What does seem to me suspect is the loftiness of its appeal.

First, the very nature of the arrangement makes it clear that the basis for its success is not a profoundly reawakened sense of personal honor among the majority of students. It is, rather, a slightly redirected sense of self interest. Our system is — let us be honest — only a different and perhaps more effective police system than the usual one. The operating assumption is that, if one cheats, a student nearby will report the incident.

Evidence that the "Honor System" is not based on honor is found in its limited scope. Why is the student book store not run on the system, for example? Surely honor is not something adopted for a class hour and then abandoned. And why is there such widespread opposition (and properly so, I believe) to extending the system to the library? A major reason is that in these cases the essential element of the "Honor System" is lacking; other people are not watching closely. Restated, the "Honor System" does not rely on something internal — on a sense of honor. It relies on external checks.

It is argued, of course, that the store and library cannot be operated on an honor system because they are occasionally used by outsiders. What is clear, however, is that the store could legitimately be closed to such people inasmuch as the small amount of money brought in by them must surely be offset by the expense of added supervision, and that by limiting admittance to the library it would be easy to allow select outsiders library privileges (they could sign a pledge as students do) and avoid the much more complicated system of checks now placed on students.

It is apparent, then, that the "Honor System" does not actively promote honor more than the customary arrangement does because it fails to call for it more directly. It does not depend on it for success. There is, I think, an even more serious issue that can be raised. Under exceptional circumstances it can compel a person to act dishonorably. Put simply, it is not always praiseworthy to offer up a guilty individual on the altar of the general welfare. The moral excellence of a rule binding one absolutely to the sacrifice of a friend for the good of the community (if the friend does not choose to turn himself in promptly) is, to me, questionable. What are we to say friendship is, in the rare and best sense of the word, if it is not a willingness to overlook defects. A friend is not precisely to the extent that what he does makes no difference. If friendship is to be based upon merit, our lot is to be allowed only an enfeebled and powerless variety of it. Granted that unconditional friendship is and must remain the exception rather than the rule (to make it the rule is beyond mankind's limited capabilities; it results in injustice), I would still be rare to deny myself the challenge of attempting to achieve by exception.

While at first thought this may seem radical, I do not believe it is. Dostoyevsky in Crime and Punishment, for example, does not have Raskolnikov repent his crime because Sonia threatens to report him to the police if he does not repent himself. His regeneration is, on the contrary, closely allied with the fact that she will not reveal his guilt. There is, restated, a defiant faith at the center of friendship, the faith for which I find little room in the "Honor System."

THE COLLEGE COMMUNITY

By Sunny Jamison

I would like to take exception to the definition of Community promulgated in The Opinion column a couple of weeks ago. In this column Bradley Snyder expressed an opinion concerning the function of the college community which is hardly justifiable. I would submit that Mr. Snyder's account of the evolution of the college community is slightly backwards. He assumes that the community is made up of individuals each with their respective aspirations, but all of which are here primarily for serious academic reasons. These academic goals demand "self-discipline" if they are to be achieved and since the individual is incapable of maintaining a perfect system of self-discipline, he and his ilk create a community to protect each other. To begin with, I can hardly take Mr. Snyder seriously when he attributes all the individuals in the college environment with the same basic goals. Surely he realizes that the desire for intellectual improvement frequently plays a minor role in inducing many students to stay in college. "Husband hunting," increased social prestige, and the possible chance for economic prosperity are among some equally prevalent motivations. Occasionally the attitudes and actions of these individuals hinder the more academic

The selection of class commissioners in the past has usually been a haphazard process with few people making an effort to become acquainted with the candidates or their positions. However, if the ASCC is to become an effective instrument, competent people must be elected to sit upon it. To slight an organization whose functions are so important to the campus by making its posts popularity contests is a serious oversight.

The ASCC, through its Finance Committee, allocates money to many student committees and organizations, giving it an important say in how effective different groups on campus will be. Also, ASCC sits three members, including the chairman, on the Publications Board, and this group decides, through its selection of editors, how effective publications will be from year to year. And if anyone doubts that ASCC deals with things that are significant to the students as a whole, ASCC has a committee (Student Policy) which this year forwarded the most controversial proposal of the year, the student "conduct" code.

There are other important functions of the ASCC, but the ones already enumerated should convince everyone of the necessity of a vote, and a careful one, for commissioners the sixth and seventh of May. (See page 3 for candidates.)

World Law Conference

By Max Power

The United States Arms Control and Disarmament Agency is now carrying on 60 research projects in order to provide needed information to our disarmament negotiations at Geneva.

Dr. Thomas Lough, who has been a project officer on two such projects, dealing with inspection, said that the agency's research is designed to "provide adequate information on which realistic disarmament programs can be based." He said that projects continuing presently include those dealing with inspection, monitoring of nuclear tests, and the political aspects of disarmament for developing nations.

Dr. Lough noted the rapid increase in funds for disarmament research. "The Arms Control Administration (predecessor to the ACDA) had $230,000 for research in its first year, 1957. This year we have four million." About one sixth of this budget, according to Lough, is devoted to research on social and political problems.

The ACDA, created in 1961, is responsible both to the President and to the Secretary of State. It works closely with the State Department, Defense Department, the Atomic Energy Commission, and relevant congressional committees.

The agency has four functions. It does research, handles negotiations, informs the public of disarmament progress, and in the event that some agreement to bar nuclear testing or to disarm is reached, the agency will conduct necessary inspections.

In the field of disarmament research and negotiations, Dr. Lough said, "we're ahead of all other nations." But, he added, "that is a depressing thought."

He then turned to the present Geneva test ban negotiations. "A series of panels of academicians was held here in the spring of 1961," he said. "The current U. S. proposal reflects in large degree the thinking of these panels."

The negotiations involve several kinds of bargaining, he said. These include the personal, non-compromising kind for propaganda purposes, a whole range of serious negotiations with allies, neutrals and Communist nations, and negotiations with the government and people at home.

Dr. Lough said that our delegates at Geneva are given some discretion in negotiation. Informal talks with other delegates are encouraged." He also called our Geneva delegates "the eyes and ears of the nation" in regard to disarmament matters.

The College Community

inclined, so that it is the primary duty of the community to restrain the possibility of such interruptions rather than to enforce self-discipline upon the serious student.

In the second place, no institution is going to be especially effective in enforcing any degree of self-discipline—the very phrase is paradoxical. By the time an individual is of college age his own basic aspirations and ideas are sufficiently established so as to render negligible the effect of any Standard upon his behavior.

Mr. Snyder also remarks that the public "reviews all acts, both public and private" in establishing its code. I am curious as to the source of this omniscient power which Mr. Snyder manifests in the communal body. I also wonder about the criterion of maturity which he designates as the community's basis for its judgments. It seems that maturity is to be equated with self-discipline as well as the fulfillment of academic aspirations, an equation which he fails to justify but merely assumes is evident. Certainly it is conceivable that there are many immature, anti-social individuals whose failings do not necessarily hinder their academic success nor that of their peers; similarly, there are those who in many ways lack academic aspirations but who nevertheless are self-disciplined and mature.

I agree with Mr. Snyder when he refers to the governing principle of the community as being founded upon pragmatic necessity, but the source of that necessity lies elsewhere than in the need of the academically inclined student to seek out help in enforcing his own "self-discipline." It is the duty of the college community to protect its members from those who would hinder the progress of its serious students toward fulfilling their aspirations. Another part of this pragmatic necessity is economical; were this community devoid of all aspects of morality the college itself would soon lose its reputation as an excellent academic institution to which parents may safely send their darling babies. I, too, would call upon the students of Colorado College (including Mr. Snyder) to view the situation realistically before they undertake the responsibility of complete self-government.

From the Chair

By Ben Lewis

Although there is no provision for a Development Committee in the ASCC Constitution, this committee was set up under Chris Griffith's administration last year. This year the committee's main purpose has been to act as a liaison between Mr. Brossman's office and the student body. Mr. Brossman's office has organized campaign drives in some of the major urban areas all over the country and plans drives in the remaining ones where a comparatively large group of CC students' parents live. The committee has suggested parent workers in these areas.

During the past year we have sponsored two programs. The first was held in Shove Chapel last October. Mr. Harold Harmon spoke on the Ford Foundation grant at that time. The second was a co-sponsored event with Rastall Center held in the W.E.S. room at the beginning of this semester. Dean Reid and Mr. Brossman spoke of future building plans and improvements for the present physical plant.

Any suggestions for this committee will be gratefully received.

New Kinnikinnik Editor Gives Ideas for Future

By Phil LeCuyer

The last issue of the Kinnikinnik consisted primarily of short stories, poetry, and graphic art work. As only a limited number of students have the capability or desire to do creative work in these three media, the number of possible contributors to the magazine is limited. Creative work is being done in other fields, such as physics, geology, history, sociology, and political science, but for various reasons work of this type has not found its way to press.

Because the Kinnikinnik is the only campus publication designed to recognize the creative efforts of the undergraduate, I believe that it should recognize efforts of this type in all fields. With this thought in mind, the scope of next year's Kinnikinnik will include and to some extent emphasize the work that Colorado College students are doing in the sciences and social sciences. This is not at all to say that the type of material which currently constitutes the major part of the Kinnikinnik will be de-emphasized. The newly-organized staff of next year's magazine has already begun work on a program to provide for a greater circulation of the Kinnikinnik in the belief that a magazine of significantly broad-based scope would be somewhat stifled in its potential influence by strict confinement to the Colorado College campus. The present effort is therefore focused to a large degree upon attaining, if possible, a state-wide circulation in the hope that the magazine may thereby become not only a forum for the academic and artistic achievements of Colorado College students, but also an effective vehicle for the wider dispersion of these achievements.

Sonderman Announces

Symposium Topic to Be Second World War Era

After a series of meetings with interested students and faculty members, the topic for the 1964 Symposium was selected last week. The Symposium will deal with the period of the Second World War, and will deal with the causes, conduct and the consequences of that conflict. Students who participated in the planning sessions were particularly interested in this topic, because they felt that they and other students know far too little about this crucial event in recent world history and that both high school and college courses in relevant fields either tend to stop before they get to the Second World War or else do not always go into this period in sufficient depth.

In planning for the Symposium, an attempt will be made not only to review the political, diplomatic and military aspects of the war, but also to try to recreate the atmosphere, the attitudes, and the opinions which prevailed during the war years. The Symposium, therefore, can be an exercise in many kinds of history: political, military, social, economic, scientific, intellectual, etc.

Following are some of the aspects of the period which may be covered during the course of the Symposium:

1. The Military context. We shall attempt to examine and derive insight from the major strategic decisions of the war, such as the "Europe First" decision, the controversies between Generals Eisenhower and Montgomery over European strategy, the difficulties with the Soviet Union concerning the establishment of a second front, the island-hopping campaign in the Pacific the decision to make China a territory theater of the war, with all the implications flowing from that, etc.

2. For the political context, a background review of the interwar period will be presented, covering the rise of Nazism in Germany, Japanese expansionary policies in the Far East, American isolationism, the Spanish Civil War, etc. Some excellent scholars are available to discuss wartime diplomacy; and for the period toward the conclusion and immediately following the end of the war, we shall be dealing with the emergence of the "cold war" from various points of view.

4. On the subject of the impact of science on the war, and of the war on science, we shall deal with the relationship between scientists and politicians, as well as scientists and military men. Then, too, there is the entire area of scientific developments during the war, in weapons systems, in medicine, etc.

5. We shall try to deal with the impact of the war on the social, economic, and moral patterns of this country and other countries. This might, for example, lead to a continuation of the discussion on Existentialism, which was started during the 1963 Symposium.

Among the very many excellent names that have already been suggested for possible participation the following stand out: Gen. Eisenhower or General Bradley, General MacArthur, Hanson Baldwin; William Shirer; the former Austrian Chancellor, Schuschnigg, who teaches at St. Louis University; Herbert Feis (Princeton); Allan Dulles; Frederick Schuman (Williams College); Walter Lippman; Bill Mauldin; Dwight MacDonald; Roger Baldwin; Robert Oppenheimer; Vannevar Bush; Hannah Arendt; Rebecca West—and many others.

All interested students and faculty are invited to participate actively in the planning for the 1964 Symposium. The final meeting of the current school year will be held on Tuesday, April 30th, at 4 p.m. in the WES Lounge of Rastall Center. Everyone is cordially invited to attend.

Evolving Stars Kraft's Topic

Glimpses of infinity were presented to astronomically interested Colorado College students Tuesday morning at 11:00 in Perkins Hall by stellar authority Dr. Robert Kraft. The noted astronomer from the Mt. Palomar observatories was sponsored by the American Astronomical Society.

Dr. Kraft's topic concerned the evolutionary stages of stars. According to the literate scientist, it is possible to uniquely describe a given star in terms of its luminosity, total mass, surface temperature and chemical composition, and by so doing, to tell something about its age, size and expected life span through the use of mathematical relationships. According to Dr. Kraft, most stars are so-called "main sequence" stars, that is, their energy comes from thermonuclear reactions which convert hydrogen into helium.

When a star "burns up" all of its hydrogen it becomes a "red giant." Other thermonuclear reactions take the place of the hydrogen-helium reaction in this case. When all thermonuclear processes cease, the star contracts in size due to internal collapse and gravitational pressures; the star becomes a "white dwarf" in this case and slowly burns out. Dr. Kraft stated, "Old stars, like old soldiers, never die, they just fade away."

Dr. Kraft also briefly discussed the formation of new stars. He said that there is considerable evidence to show that new stars are being formed even now. Most of them are being formed from large clouds of interstellar gas.

Typists Arise

For the first time in several issues, TIGER readers are offered a serious appraisal of the fulflements, rewards and various fringe benefits offered to those creative, dependable, and compulsively energetic individuals who offer their services to the student newspaper of their school.

Ask one of the staff member (probably the most comprehensive list is to be found on page two of this issue, under TIGER) what it's really like to belong to such an organization.

After discounting those unfortunate souls who have had an unpleasant encounter with a hostile lecturer, recalcitrant member of the administration or garbled press release, it should become obvious that there is a place for you on the staff of such a newspaper.

If you are interested in being a part of this endeavor, in the capacity of a typist, proofreader, or any other position, this year or next, leave your name at Rastall Desk or come down to the editorial offices of the TIGER, located to the left of the bookstore, any Monday or Tuesday afternoon, say quietly, "I'd like to do something

The Selected Ones: Students or Snobs?

By Susan Phillips, '66

"What do you think of the selected student program?"
 "In twenty-five words or less? It's great. When I got into it, I felt that I was really thinking again. We're not spoon fed. And I love talking to the others in the program. Sometimes I wonder, though. It's no place for people who get neurotic about being behind."
 "Do you feel there is too much pressure?"

"The really neatest part is the feeling that you could work and work and maybe still never do it all."

"Are you satisfied with the quality of the papers you're turning in?"

"Well, no."
 "Do you make distinction between people in the program and those not in the program? I mean, don't you feel a little superior to anyone not in the program, no matter how good he is?"

"No, I don't think so."

"Are all your close friends selected students?"

"It's about half and half."

"Do you think the selected students are a clique?"

"No! Sure, we're close, but after all, we're in at least one or two classes together. Why do basketball players stick together? Because they like each other. What's wrong with that?"

"What are the faults in the program?"

"I think the program should be expanded. Anyone who wants to be in it should be allowed to be in. The pace should be kept up, and if anyone flunks, he flunks."

"Wouldn't that result in classes too big for discussions?"

"Yes, I guess so. Maybe there should be some sort of seminar for people who are interested in tearing apart a couple of our history books. Some of the books the other classes are reading are boring them to tears."

"Well, is the program valuable?"

"Oh, yes! As long as it doesn't get too important."

As these direct quotes indicate, most agree that the program has value because of the challenge and because of the faculty and students involved. Nevertheless, the selected students, otherwise known as "the terrible twenty-two" or "the selected snobs" have caused a bitter controversy, based primarily on their unfortunate title. Many administrators and students criticize the program as undemocratic. In their desire to prevent the campus from being run by cliques, these people protest against the program as developing a circle of snobs who know no one but each other. If this criticism is valid, it indicates a serious weakness in the program.

The question is, how valid is this criticism? Do most selected students count only other selected students as good friends? The interviews for this article indicate that most find only half of their closest friends in the program. Do selected students do anything but study? Yes! Several members are in choir, three of them in madrigals. At least one member is in the band. Four or five are on the track team. About half the freshmen men, trained by years of playing high school varsity basketball, played intramural basketball; some of them played well enough to capture first place. Music and sports are not the only areas of outside activities in which selected students participate. One sophomore is running for ASCC treasurer. Six students are on the Tiger staff. One freshman was elected to the Honor Council; he'll also be editor of the Kinnikinnick next year. At least three girls have found time to get pinned. Significantly, however, none of the freshmen found time for "The Most Happy Fella." Another frequently asked question is, "Don't selected students see too much of each other outside of class?" No. Except for the Christmas party, there have been no group activities this year—unless one counts early morning Continental lessons at Reimnitz Dance Studio in Hayes House.

In spite of this obvious show of interest in other people and in other activities, no selected student has escaped comments like, "Selected students think Dr. Hochman is their private property." Even more common is, "You selected students always sit together at meals. I know because I've been watching you." When asked if this flagrant public display of friendship is really more common than with other groups, most reply, "Oh, well, it's perfectly natural for members of any class, French or German or anything, to want to sit together. But I still don't think it's a good idea for selected students to sit together."

Is the criticism of the "Selected" in selected students valid? Are the selected students a clique? Not any more than other people who have two classes together. Do they avoid meeting other people? Judging by their list of activities, obviously not. Are they friends? Of course, but not to the exclusion of others. Are they trying to maintain the program as a group separate from the rest of the college? Since many favor some kind of expansion of the program or acceleration of other history and English classes, the students do not seem to want separation. Is the selected student program valuable? After disposing of Cliquesphobia most people would say, "Yes!"

Attention!

An opportunity for town students is now available. Applications are being accepted for meeting and being a host to foreign students on their arrival next fall. In the past many of our foreign students have arrived before the boarding students return to CC and consequently have not had a welcome. It is felt that town students would be in the best position to provide this service.

Please give your name, address, phone number, and preference for boy or girl to Rastall Desk and label your note "Foreign Student". Questions should be directed to John Lewis, X 375 or Cathey Grant, X328.

A case of possible book defacement was recently brought to the attention of the Student Conduct Committee. Because of the lack of evidence to prove either the individual's guilt or innocence the case was dismissed.

'Hockey Express' Makes Last Run

The tired old Colorado College bus, remembered by some as "Hockey Express," will perk up a stop this spring and though faithful service will not be forgotten, none will argue with its path to the "happy touring ground."

A clean 1948 GMC 37 passenger bus has been purchased by the College to take over our various field trips, tours, ski trips, travel to athletic events . . . these activities and more will now become a reality.

Mr. Richard Kendrick, Physical Plant Director, will handle scheduling and the new bus should be ready for service very soon.

'La Vida Intima' Successful Comedy

By Genevieve Vaughn

An enthusiastic if somewhat illiterate audience watched the Spanish Department's presentation of La Vida Intima (Private Life) written by the Quintero Brothers, twentieth century representatives of the spirit of the genero chico, the witty, apparently superficial comedy of the Spanish theatre. The play concerns the affairs in the home of a none-too-talented composer, Don Melquiades, whose latest work is being premiered as the play begins.

The comedy is rich with puns and satires on obsequious friends and fawning newspapermen who gleefully exaggerate the truth. The Quintero Brothers especially delight in making their caricatures of middle class types. While the comedy is superficial and comes from laughing at, rather than with, the characters, there is a certain feeling of pathos communicated in the figure of Don Melquiades, who grasps at the chance to believe in his success after a life of constant failure. Here the play touches the reality and illusion theme common in Spanish writing. However, this pathetic note by no means interferes with the spirit of the comedy.

Cal Norman and Miss Laurie Perry as Don Melquiades and Dona Frasquita, gave especially noteworthy performances, as did

Luis Arrieta as the obsequious janitor and Paul Tatter as Dona Frasquita's spoiled son. Despite a few technical flaws, the performance effectively captured the spirit of the play and left the audience chuckling uneasily, noses pressed to their Spanish dictionaries.

Cadet Musical Features CC Students in Leads

"HEY! MR. BLUE," as the name may imply, is an original musical comedy written, produced, and acted by members of the Air Force Cadet Wing, with seven students from Colorado College taking the two female leads and five supporting parts.

The production will be presented May 3rd and 4th, at 7:30 p.m. and 8:00 p.m. respectively. Tickets may be obtained from Lynn Ayers, Ticknor Hall, ext. 210, for $1.00 per person.

The musical is a take-off on cadet life, and should prove not only extremely funny, but somewhat informative for Colorado College students and faculty who are unfamiliar with the Academy.

The female lead is played by Kathy Aurn, opposite Cadet Phil Richardson, and the second female musical lead is played by Joyce Manning, opposite Cadet Tom Calaise. The five supporting roles are played by Lynne Ayers, Charlotte Adams, Diane Cox, Flint Smith, and Marilyn Wise.

The play is directed by Cadets Lionel Luxick and Ted Salko; the music was scored by Cadet Dave Mueh.

Film Preview

Sundays and Cybele, coming to the Peak on Friday, April 26, depends on the unquestionable premise that children and the insane are the only people who can see the beauties of life. However, if there is disagreement as to the validity of this point of view, it will not mar the enjoyment of the film, for it is masterfully directed and acted.

Usually a child star is either cloyingly sweet or incompetent. However Patricia Gouzzi escapes both these pitfalls, and it is rather the mature actors (particularly the male lead's mistress) who pale in comparison. Hardy Kruger plays a shell-shocked pilot who befriends an orphan girl. The relationship, which starts out as a child-like idyll, slowly takes on a sinister quality, when the townspeople misconstrue the innocent love of the two misfits and label it unnatural. From this point on the tension of the movie builds, as the police are called in, while the pilot's mistress and friend try to intercede to avert the impending tragedy.

On the whole, the film follows fairly traditional techniques of presentation, except in the nearly surrealistic beginning. However under the direction of Serge Bourguignon the precision and clarity of the film understate and yet dramatically convey the complex emotions of the characters. Despite the incredibility of some of the scenes, this film is far better than the usual fare available in Colorado Springs, and therefore this reviewer highly recommends it.

Capacity Audience Approves French Department Comedy

By Karen Cairns

"Bon soir, monsieur." "Bon soir, mademoiselle." With these words two charming young ladies overly fluent in French ushered in the audience for the French play, Les Precieuses Ridicules, last Friday night. The capacity audience laughed and giggled and, I hope, saw their own vanities and affections in the skillfully executed gesticulations of Hervin Madrugra (Marquis de Mascarille).

Moliere wrote Les Precieuses Ridicules as a satire-comedy. It exaggerates the affectations and vain posturings of preciosity, and, through this exaggeration, shows the hollowness of this trend which was prevalent in the 17th Century. The plot deals with two young country girls (Carol Paige and Stephanie Row) who come to the big city, Paris, and fall in love with less precieuses ridicules. They refuse the suits of two bourgeois and vulgar gentlemen, and are swept off their feet by a pretend and pretentious Marquis (Hervin Madrugra) and his friend, the Vicomte (Paul Kilbreath). But all turns out well: the falseness of preciosity and the Marquis and the Vicomte are exposed (the last two both verbally and physically). While all this was going on, the stage was graced by the awesome figure of a French-speaking negro eunuch.

Each character was portrayed skillfully by members of an excellent cast. Hervin Madrugra dominated the stage from his entrance and kept the audience continually rolling in the aisles. Aside from this French Falstaff, the Vicomte, and their feminine counterparts, the father (Norman Laurance) was superb in showing the disdain and disgust he felt for the miming that his daughter and niece so admired. The two bourgeois suitors and the young ladies also carried off their parts exceedingly well.

Even if you did not know French or couldn't follow the swift repartee, the play was enjoyable solely for its delivery. Congratulations to the French Department, the cast, and especially Hervin Madrugra!

FAC Review

The Innocents, adapted from Henry James' A Turn of the Screw, will be on view this following Tuesday, April 30. A parson's daughter (Deborah Kerr) hires on as governess to the niece and nephew of a charming bounder (Michael Redgrave), with whom she is half in love. The children prove to be charming, but their loveliness seems to be belied by some strange relationship to two supernatural prowlers, who are prone to appear to the governess at any unguarded moment. Notwithstanding that she is almost scared out of her wits, the governess resolves to move heaven and earth to save the children from their uncanny seducers.

First rate performances by the main characters combine with intelligent direction by Jack (Room at the Top) Clayton and sensitive camerawork to make The Innocents the scariest flick since Diabolique. Yet the film is seriously marred by a defect, rising from the necessity of our seeing the ghosts, which we are only told about in the novel. There, one cannot be sure whether the spectres are "real" or hysterical hallucinations, produced by the governess' repressed passion for her employer. Such ambiguity is, obviously, impossible on film.

Mrs. Clausen would like to take this opportunity of thanking Mr. Clausen's many friends at CC for their letters of sympathy and remembrance.

Alpha Phi

Happy times were had by all last Friday at our Spring Formal which was held in conjunction with the Gamma Phi's. During this past week we have been working diligently for the Song Fest tonight and we wish to give our heartiest thanks to Donna Story, our song chairman. Congrats to our new pledge trainer, Jan Okamura, and our new rush chairman, Cathy Grant. Also to Mary Tom Spring and Carol Wood, congratulations on their recent engagements.

Beta Theta Pi

The chapter sincerely thanks song leader Bill Bentley and aid Ralph Schmidt for their outstanding effort and leadership in developing the golden Song Fest tones of Beta Theta Pi. Whether or not Bill and Ralph will ever be seen again depends, of course, upon the outcome of tonight's contest.

Delta Gamma

Monday night climaxed Inspiration Week as our seventeen pledges were initiated and became active members of Delta Gamma. A banquet followed that night at the Moors in honor of these neophytes. The seventeen girls sporting shiny gold anchors are: Linda Axtell, Cathy Close, Nina Dunbar, Cathy Durham, Lynne Johnson, Linda Lemmatt, Sally Lentz, Sue McAllister, Carol Nowels, Jan Perry, Amy Rasor, Carol Rymer, Margie Schmitz, Judy Sessions, Gretchen Swan, Linda Wangerin, and Kathie Waterman.

Thursday night the Kappa Sigma came over for a song exchange and dessert as a preview of Song fest. The D.G.'s are looking forward to songfest tonight. We are being led by Joyce Manning and are singing "These Are A Few of My Favorite Things."

Gamma Phi Beta

The Colorado Springs Country Club provided the setting for the Gamma Phi spring formal which was held on Friday evening with the Alpha Phis. All present enjoyed dinner and dancing to the music of Floyd Frame.

Seniors were honored Monday night with a luau and original verse in their memories. They left us with a will and most of all, the realization that it can be done. The evening provided fun, summery foods, and an informal farewell to those who will soon be departing.

Kappa Alpha Theta

Climaxing a week of exciting initiation activities was the initiation on Saturday afternoon of 20 pledges. The new neophytes proudly displaying their new pins are: Beth Anneberg, Kathie Aurin, Susie Bauer, Jean Becker, Mary Beth Bishop, Susie Blair, Kay Burton, Connie Clay, Jane Hyde, Maida Knowlton, Jane Lentz, Leo Prater, Jane Seely, Martha Stevenson, Ann Threlkeld, Diana Vhay, Jane Volinn, Cayn Voorheis, Sue Walsh, and Adrienne Zech. Now that there are all these lovely voices in the house the song practices this week will be bearable. By the time this week is over, Theta's will be mumbling the same song through classes, on dates, in their sleep, EVERYWHERE! With the softball season in full swing, Theta ladies will begin the season with a game Tuesday afternoon, and another one on Thursday afternoon. Just watch the "ladies" slug that ball!

Kappa Kappa Gamma

This week actually began on Saturday when the Kappas initiated their nineteen pledges. After Initiation we had a very enjoyable banquet at the Moors.

On Sunday night we had a Dinner Dance with the Phi Deltas. Flint Smith was able to introduce to the Phi Deltas and the Kappas her new dance, "the itch." Also honored, with a serenade, were Donna Dent and Bob Strom.

Along with our meeting, song practice and Diane Cox's announcement of her planning to Cadet Page Basher, the Phi Deltas came over on Monday to begin the "Spring Fights." The Kappas all want to thank them for the beautiful TP job.

We are looking forward to our dessert with the Sigma Chis on Tuesday, as well as Kite and Key on Friday.

Kappa Sigma

Kappa Sigma has once again decided to acquaint the starving public with its recent activities. Last Saturday eve the Stardust Formal was held with mixed success. Merely for the favors served to adequately cover even the most questionable of figures, but the unusual selection of a Stardust Queen was unfortunately canceled due to the lack of any conceivable candidate. Sunday became a day of glory as the bleary freshmen emerged victorious from the intramural track meet, thus sewing up the highly coveted inter-fraternity intramural sports trophy for the Beta straight year. Let it be mentioned in passing that the softball team, turned in an impressive opening game by soundly shelling the Growlers of Sigma Chi 12-2 in the first inning.

The results of the Monday night elections were as follows: Grand Master, George Klein; Vice-President, Farrell Howell; Grand Master of Ceremonies, John Barker; Treasurer, Lincoln Westcott; Scribe, Mike Mestek; and I. F. C. Representative, Ed Loosli.

Last and needless least, Kappa Sigma, noted for its numerous social functions is once again planning a series of gala desserts which it is hoped will emblazon her name upon the hungry hearts of our five local ladies groups. We'll call you.

Phi Delta Theta

The Moors were the fortunate host for the Phi Delt White Carnation formal last Saturday night. The Phi danced to the music of Brother B. J. Young's band, but most of the action was to be found on the adjacent golf course.

This coming weekend is the annual Community Service Day. This year's project is improvement of the grounds of the Deaf and Blind School.

Spring fights are under way, with traitor Bruce Franklin getting his due punishment. The Kappas retaliated by loaning the Phi house a large quantity of decorative white paper strips. "Rooney's Raiders," the ad hoc vigilante committee, will lead the retribution.

Phi Gamma Delta

The Phi's spent the week busily rehearsing what is sure to be the winning entry in song fest. In case anyone is dubious of this assumption, we refer them to the unbiased opinion of the foremost music critic in the Phi House, "The Troll," who has made a secret and careful survey of all the houses and has assured us of victory!

Sigma Chi

Last week the Sigma Chis joined the Gamma Phi pledges on their sneak. A good time was had by all in the party that ensued, after the Gamma Phi actives arrived. The Sigma Chis beat the Betas in basketball, but barely lost a real close thriller to the Kappa Sigs in the last of the first inning. Congratulations to Kappa Alpha Theta, Delta Gamma, Alpha Phi, and Kappa Kappa Gamma, for their new initiates. Congratulations also to Harris Sherman, our new ASBO president.

Sondermann Speaks at WES Tea

The cordial relationship that exists between the Colorado College campus and the community of Colorado Springs is unique when compared to classical "town and gown" relations across the country, political science Prof. Fred A. Sondermann said last Friday, speaking at the annual spring tea of the Woman's Educational Society of Colorado College in Bemis Hall.

Dr. Sondermann also mentioned contributions to the community by the college and individual faculty and staff members.

"Let me," he said, "give a few examples by citing the work of Louis Benezet in establishing the United Fund, Lloyd Worner in heading the local Red Cross, Bernard Arnest in contributing so richly to the artistic life of our town.

"I think the College is doing what any academic institution should do," he continued, "and we have much to be grateful for—living as we do, in a community which understands and supports this type of enterprise. Many of us may not always realize just how close the linkage is between this institution and the larger community, both of which we love." The political science professor noted that "without the support of the community, the college would be a much poorer place for its own students as well as for its larger constituency. And Colorado Springs would have a far harder time maintaining its proud tradition and sustaining its claim as a center of culture in the Rocky Mountain West."

Students Read Papers to Science Academy

Two Colorado College anthropology students will deliver papers in Boulder April 26 at a meeting of the Anthropology Section of the Colorado-Wyoming Academy of Sciences.

They are Mrs. Marian Townley of 1000 Mariposa, Pueblo, and Gerald Thompson, a special graduate student who is Sgt. Maj. at the Ft. Carson Army Hospital.

Mrs. Townley, a senior and the wife of a faculty member at Pueblo Junior College, will read a paper on "The Shirt of Wovako, Prophet of the Ghost Dance." It is a study of the cultural elements borrowed from the Mormons and other Christians, and incorporated into the religion of the Great Plains Indians.

Thompson's paper is entitled "Kinship Structure in a Korean

Pershing Rifles Holds Elections

Election of Ernest Lemelle as Captain and Robert C. Grant as Executive Officer (first lieutenant) became the main order of business at the meeting of the Pershing Rifles Company on April 9. Grant and Lemelle, both sophomores this year, will command Pershing Rifles during the academic year 1963-1964. In the college ROTC course, Grant holds the rank of Sergeant Major while Lemelle is a First Sergeant.

Captain Lemelle's first act after his election was to appoint next year's Warrant Officers (First Lieutenants): John Maynard (S-1, Intelligence Officer); David Reeves (S-2, Public Information Officer); James Blackmer (S-3, Operations Officer); and Richard Grill (S-4, Supply Officer). Michael Beresford was appointed Drill Master but holds no official rank.

Geiger to Teach At Jadavpur, India

Professor Louis G. Geiger, chairman of the history department at Colorado College here, has accepted a one-year appointment as visiting professor of American civilization at Jadavpur University in Calcutta, India.

Professor Geiger will teach at the 4,000-student university from September through April. Following his academic year in India, he and Mrs. Geiger plan to spend two months touring Europe before returning to Colorado College.

His teaching assignment in India is under auspices of the U. S. State Department in cooperation with the University of Missouri. This is the second overseas teaching mission for the Colorado College history professor. He was a Fulbright Lecturer in America Civilization at the University of Helsinki in Finland during the 1954-55 academic year.

A specialist in the "progressive movement in American History," Professor Geiger will teach in the divisions of history and international relations of the graduate school at Jadavpur University.

Art Exhibit Features CC Students, Cadets

A unique art exhibition combining the talents of cadets from the U. S. Air Force Academy and art students at the Fine Arts Center and Colorado College will open at the Fine Arts Center May 10. It will remain on view through June 6.

The joint exhibition will not only be the first opportunity the public has had to view the work being done by Academy cadets in their expanded fine arts instruction program, but it represents a new area of cultural exchange and cooperation between the three educational institutions.

The extensive exhibition, utilizing most of the Fine Arts Center gallery space, will include paintings, sculpture, drawings, prints and design by some 150 students.

More than 60 of the cadets have participated in the four fine arts courses now offered at the Academy. Although the prescribed curriculum at the AFA makes no provision for instruction in art, cadet interest has brought about the increase from one experimental course offered in 1957 to the present four fine arts courses.

Academy works to be shown in the exhibition are mostly projects completed in the studio course designed to give the cadet personal experience with art materials.

Contributions to the exhibition from the school of art operated by the Fine Arts Center and Colorado College will be more extensive. The school, located in the Fine Arts Center, is headed by Prof. Bernard Arnest, chairman of the CC art department. Nearly all students at the school are working towards a degree at CC.

The exhibition will be formally opened with a reception for cadets, students, Fine Arts Center members and guests from the two institutions May 10 at 8:30 p.m. The exhibition has been especially scheduled to hang through the Academy June week, June 1-6.

Scholarships Given for German House

The German American Cultural Society today announced it will provide scholarships for two students to spend the summer studying in Das Deutsche Haus (German House).

Recipients of the scholarships are Kathleen Bevin and Alice Lamar, freshmen this year at Colorado College.

Miss Bevin is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. E. W. Bevin of 12 Cactus Drive, La Junta, Colo. Miss Lamar is the daughter of Mrs. Betty Lamar of 2504 N. Union Blvd., Colorado Springs.

Announcement of the scholarships came from Col. Hampton Price, president of the German American Cultural Society. Each scholarship carries a stipend of $100.

The two students will spend eight weeks in the German House. They will live and take classes with other students enrolled in the program.

Faculty members teaching in German department during the summer will take meals with the students, and exchange students from Germany also will live in Das Deutsche Haus and will participate in all student activities.

The small German community will be equipped with a language laboratory and a German language library. Residing in the house will be an activities director from Germany.

An Athletic History Of Colorado College

III. Chaos and Restoration

The death of the CIAA after the 1950 football season came as Colorado College stood on the verge of gridiron greatness. Coach John R. Richards had rejuvenated a formerly moribund Tiger eleven, and there was no doubt in the minds of CC boosters that the disgruntled Colorado School of Mines team would have been badly mauled if the mighty Bengals had designed to meet them for the CIAA crown. During Richards' term as coach the CC football team won 22 games and lost only nine, tying four.

With Richards' competence and an increasing enrollment, the pressure on CC's meager athletic facilities soon became excessive. The climax of a worsening situation was reached when 2000 circus seats had to be rented for the 1968 DU football game. President Slocum launched a drive to raise funds for the improvement of athletic facilities, but it was to be a number of years before the Tigers possessed adequate indoor or outdoor playing areas.

The hiatus between the CIAA and the Rocky Mountain Conference was one of almost incessant and often violent bickering among the coaches of the former CIAA members teams. In the absence of any over-all regulations, each school was free to handle its athletic affairs pretty much as it chose, and the only weapon of the dissatisfied college was the refusal to schedule an offending school.

In 1907 faculty representatives of the five former CIAA member institutions met in Denver to attempt to remedy this chaotic state of affairs. Though they drew up uniform eligibility rules to govern intercollegiate athletic competition among these five schools, the athletic boards of Mines and Denver University failed to approve the proposed code.

Again in 1908 faculty and student representatives met for the same purpose, but the embryonic conference was again stillborn as Mines and DU continued to balk.

Finally, in 1909, largely on the initiative of Dean Edward S. Parsons of Colorado College, one more meeting was held and agreement was reached among Colorado College, Colorado University, and Colorado Agricultural College. Standing invitations were left for Denver University and Colorado School of Mines to join the new association, to be known as the Colorado Faculty Athletic Conference.

In late 1909 Mines withdrew its objections to faculty control of athletics and joined the Conference. The next spring Denver University and Utah University were admitted to the Conference and its name was changed to the Rocky Mountain Faculty Athletic Conference.

The formation of this intercollegiate association represented a major turning point in the athletic philosophy which was to govern Colorado College and her sister institutions in Colorado. Henceforth athletic administration was to be largely the province of the faculty and administration. Ironically enough, this view of athletics was adopted to institute much needed reforms in the commercialization and professionalism which had characterized athletics under student control.

After the 1909 season Coach Richards announced his resignation as football coach. Richards' resignation, together with the release of the team trainer and baseball coach, gave President Slocum, an ardent sports enthusiast, the opportunity to employ the college's first full-time coach and offer him for the first time full faculty status.

Slocum's choice was Claude J. Rothgeb, a three-sport man fully able to coach all sports at CC. Rothgeb led the football team to an undefeated season in 1910.

Rothgeb's success seems in retrospect more likely to have stemmed from Richards' previous efforts than from any other source, as the team went down to numerous defeats in both the 1911 and 1912 seasons.

Though the Tigers fared better in 1913, the real boost came with the completion of Cossitt Hall in 1914. The provision of adequate equipment and dressing space seems to have worked miracles for Tiger athletics, as Colorado College was suddenly buoyed up near the top of the conference standings.

Through 1916, student and alumni clamor for athletic greatness rose to a crescendo as the moderating voice of Dean Edward Parsons, long an opponent of athletic overemphasis, was reluctantly smothered. Parsons resigned first as faculty representative to the RMC, then as a member of the Colorado College Athletic Board.

CC was moving rapidly toward athletic megalomania, but World War I was to cut short the headlong plunge.

Tension in WCHA

By Jim Heckman

For the second time in about six years, the Western Collegiate Hockey Association is in danger of dissolution. When the Big Ten teams in the league, Michigan, Michigan State, and Minnesota, announced several weeks ago that they were going to boycott DU in the 1963-1964 season, the death knell was sounded once more for the patch-work Hockey league that was founded in the early 1950's.

For the past few years, Minnesota has refused to play Denver because of the large number of Canadians on the Pioneer squad. The real reason for the refusal has been that DU has consistently beaten strong Minnesota teams, and Copher Coach John Mariucci is a very poor loser, indeed. All of the Big Ten teams now claim that DU and North Dakota are using too many Junior-A, non-professionals on their squads and that these schools are not honestly seeking good American players, who usually at best are only at the "Junior B" level. It is curious that Minnesota has insisted on playing the NoDaks, despite the new Big Ten ban.

The results of the "new" development will inevitably be that the league will be weakened and will, in fact, be no league at all. The only time the Big Ten teams will meet DU will be in the playoffs, where they are almost certain to lose to championship bound DU.

The saddest implication of this whole affair is that all WCHA teams avoiding Denver will not find it economically feasible to travel to Colorado to play only two games, and because of this, we are almost certain to have to play more road games. This could worsen an already potentially bad record, and will certainly weaken school-wide interest in hockey.

The issue of Junior A, Junior B, and American Hockey players has been often discussed and never resolved. CC has tried to keep a balance between Canadians and Americans, and has very few Junior A players on the roster. In this sense, we are probably one of the "purest" teams in the league. Apparently the Big Ten teams want to force a showdown on this issue, and CC cannot help but agree in principle with not-too-simon-pure agitators. Yet given our geographical proximity to DU we cannot avoid playing the Floeers, even if we want to. If CC is to continue to play hockey, I think we must accept the fact that we must use Canadians in a Canadian dominated league. The only step we can take is to convince DU and North Dakota that they should use more Americans. Perhaps the Big Ten move will eventually result in some good; CC can only play the game of "wait and see" until either the League dissolves, and hockey undergoes severe de-emphasis, or until DU and North Dakota admit that this is America, after all, and Americans should win their own championships.

Cycle Tourney Rolls Around

Colorado College's 1963 Tournament of Cycles will be held in the Garden of the Gods on Saturday, April 27, beginning at 1:30 p.m. The races promise to be one of the most colorful features of Parents' Weekend.

The event will consist of two races. The first, the Junkie Classic, will be a contest open to all bicycles with three gears or less. Within this race will be two classes: one for single-ted to the best woman competitor, the girl who places highest in her event (be it any of the three classes). This year the Tournament of Cycles will be included in the Men's Residence Hall Intramural Program; intramural points will go to all men's dormitory wings entering the event.

Each competitor should pay the 50 cent entry fee to the race registrar when the bicycles are lined up before an event. Trucks to carry competitors' bicycles to and from the race will leave Rastall at 12:30. A bus for competitors will also be leaving from Rastall, at 1:00 p.m.

The second race of the afternoon will be the feature event—the Tournament Classic, open to bicycles with any number of gears. Medals will be presented to the first three racers to finish this first time lap, 7 1/2 mile event. There will be an award presented

Tiger Nine Splits Two Game Series

The Tiger baseball nine split a two game series with Colorado Mines last weekend. Friday, C.C. went down to defeat 12-6, but Saturday rebounded to down the Golden team 9-4 in their first win of the season.

In Friday's encounter, errors and bases on balls spelled downfall for the Tigers. After garnering a 2-0 early lead, they fell behind in the third inning and never again threatened to catch up. C.C. out-hit the Diggers 15 to 9, while Alex Yankovich, Wayne MacAlpine, and Mike Irsfeld split the pitching duties.

Saturday, the Tigers won 9-4, behind the stout pitching of Jeff Sauer and home-run hitting of Ken Hanson, Dennis Walker, and Roger Williams. Sauer struck out 11 men and 3 of Mines' runs were unearned. Mines jumped off to a 3-0 lead in the first, but the Tigers caught up and went ahead 7-3 in the fifth inning and won going away. With continued efforts like this, the Tigers may be able to earn a respectable record in the Rocky Mountain Conference.

Never on Tuesday

The sorority intramural softball league got off to a flying start Tuesday afternoon before an enthusiastic crowd of wildly jeering fans. The first game was won by the Thetas when the Gamma Phi's flatly declared that they would not field a team. The disappointment was soon dispelled by the excitement of the game between the Alpha Phi's and DG's. After building a 7-5 lead in the first inning with solid hitting, stolen bases and a few timely errors, the Alpha Phi's exploded for 21 runs in the second. This somewhat disheartened their opponents, who were only able to bring in 6 or 7 runners before the fielders managed to hold on to three throws and put them out. If the rest of the season follows the same pattern, it promises to provide the most exciting athletics of any type found at Colorado College all year.

Chess Team Loses

Last Sunday, the C.C. chess team battled a much improved A.F.A. team to a 7-2 loss. Players for Colorado College in the order of the boards they played were: 1. Terry Rosen, 2. Jim Cotton, 3. Joe Wilcox, 4. Bill Large, 5. Serge Trubetzky, 6. Gary Ziegler, 7. Sky Stevenson, 8. Rob Oakes, 9. Don Graham. Victorious for C.C. were Rosen and Large. Most of the others played very strong opening and middle games but weaker end games.

Of the losses there were two or three games that were sure wins until the end game where the consistent playing of the Academy team took full advantage of weak moves reversing the result of the game. Fortunately, there was nothing wrong that can't be solved by a little practice and a lot of sleep.

Tigers Drop Second Match

Colorado College lost its second judo match with Colorado State University, 30 to 20. CC played its best match of the season with Pat Going and Bill Lange both getting half point throws, Parker and Merrell getting full point throws.

The play at Ft. Collins was as follows: Ishimoto (CSU) over Blackmer, Fick (CSU) over Going, Merrell (CC) over Snyder, Parker (CC) over Tabb, Anderson (CSU) over Lange.

Song Fest

KRCC will re-broadcast the complete Song Fest 30 minutes after its conclusion. This program may be heard either at the reception at Leomis Hall or at Rastall Center.

Worner Appointed To CC Presidency

Armin B. Barney, chairman of the Board of Trustees, Monday announced the appointment of Dr. Lloyd E. Worner as president of The Colorado College. Dr. Worner has served as Dean of the College since 1955. He will assume the presidential duties around August, when Dr. Louis T. Benezet leaves CC to accept the presidency of Claremont Graduate School and University Center. Dr. Worner is the first alumnus of Colorado College to serve as president. He received his bachelor's degree from CC and served as president of Beta Theta Pi fraternity as an undergraduate. He attended graduate school at Princeton and the University of Missouri, receiving his M.A. in 1944 and his Ph.D. in 1946.

Since coming to Colorado College in 1946, Dr. Worner has been a member of the Colorado Springs Fine Arts Center Board of Trustees, served on the Council for Cooperation in Teachers Education, served as president of the Pikes Peak Chapter of the Red Cross, as a member of the Legal Aid Society, and a member of the founding board of the Pikes Peak United Fund. In 1952, he was chosen for post-doctoral study by the Ford Foundation for the Advancement of Education, and spent a year at Harvard.

He currently serves as a member of the executive committee of the American Association of Deans, member of the Commission on Colleges of the North Central Association of Colleges and Secondary Schools, and as member of the executive committee of the State Fulbright Scholarship Committee. For the second time in four years he presented the major address at the Stillwater National Deans' Conference in August, 1962.

As Dean of the College, Dr. Worner set up the first course in the General Studies program, Freedom and Authority. Under former president William H. Gill, he drafted the honor system for Colorado College.

Dr. Worner, taking over in the midst of a campaign to raise $1,500,000 to match a Ford Foundation challenge grant, plans to continue the expansion of the physical plant and the educational program of the college.

In speaking of his appointment, Dr. Worner said, "My close association with Louis Benezet over the past eight years has been extremely satisfying. The foundation that he has laid down will greatly simplify my task. If ever a college faculty has educated its president, this one has."

The newly-appointed president, in discussing specific issues, noted the possibility of the demise of compulsory ROTC in the near future. The new program would provide for a selection process in which the student who wished to take part in such a program would apply for admission to a 2-year ROTC curriculum.

When asked about the code of student conduct, Dr. Worner expressed his support of such a code as a means of gauging the amount of freedom and responsibility with which students wish to be entrusted. He added, however, that he had no specific recommendation concerning the content of the code.

Dr. Worner expressed his hopes that the honor system might eventually be extended to cover theft, serious lying, and library procedure.

"If I were to say what my greatest achievement has been," said Dr. Worner, "I would say that I am most proud of the honor system."

Concerning student housing, he said that the goal was to make CC a truly residential college. He feels that a residential system gives unity and strength to a small school such as Colorado College.

It would appear that Colorado College can look to further development of its stature in both the academic and physical areas, with a growing shift to academics likely to be in the offing.

The need, now that Colorado College has begun to possess the physical plant which is a prerequisite for effective education at any level, is to achieve the fullest implementation of that plant through the maintenance and im-

Benezet Outlines Changes In All-College Convocation

In an All-College Convocation on Saturday, April 27, in Shove Chapel, President Louis T. Benezet delivered an address entitled, "Changes in the Wind—1963," to students of Colorado College and their parents. He explained that he hoped his remarks would not be considered as a valedictory, but an outline of new and exciting things to come.

Dr. Benezet prefaced his specific remarks by presenting a general philosophical justification for change. He stated that the basic process of knowledge must be constantly changing to meet the needs of students. He explained that the methods of the learning process should change, whereas certain "overlying values" do not and should not change.

Palmer Hall headed President Benezet's list of campus areas which would incur specific changes and improvements in the near future. Dr. Benezet stated that a new eastern exit and stairwell will be added to Palmer Hall next fall. The psychology laboratories will be completely modernized. Two new grants have made it possible to refurbish the mathematics department. Plans are being made to lower the ceiling of the museum, and to convert the extra space thus created to faculty office space.

Specific changes are also being planned in the Perkins Hall—Coburn Hall section of the campus. It is hoped that a grant for a new humanities building will be forthcoming soon. Dr. Benezet stated that applications have been made for a grant of that nature. Were the building to be given to CC, Perkins Hall and perhaps Coburn Hall would be razed to make room for it.

Other changes in the wind, as presented by Dr. Benezet, include the replacement of the Shove Chapel chimes, repair of the organ, construction of a new shop in the basement of Olin Hall, construction of a new men's dormitory in the vicinity of Arthur House, completion of the sports complex, and the addition of several new faculty members. Two large financial grants have been given to CC, one for the purpose of giving aid to professors for summer research projects; four $1,000 grants to be awarded (each summer), and the other for a rotating professorship program.

Dr. Benezet concluded his remarks by stating that, "A college must change, paradoxically, to stay the same." He pointed out that changes in the future must be practical and experienced, rather than just read about. In other words, it is hoped that Colorado College is, and will remain, a community of learners—not just book learners, but learners by participation. He mentioned, in closing, that the understanding of a "community of learners" hopefully will not change.

Aspects of Freedom to Be Concern of Rampart College

By Jim Heckman

"Rampart College will be dedicated to the study of the meaning of freedom." With these words, Robert LeFevre, controversial editor of the Gazette-Telegraph, summarized his latest and most ambitious plan: the founding of first a graduate school and then a four year liberal arts college for the study of political freedom. In an interview last Monday in his compact editorial office, the often maligned Mr. LeFevre discussed the errors in Time magazine, the present set up of the Freedom School and his plans for Rampart College, in that order.

He spoke in the tone of voice of a sincere and earnest businessman turned philosopher who wants to express his message of political and social individualism.

According to the white-haired editor, Rampart College, to be located near Palmer Lake, will be an extension of the present Freedom School that now holds two week summer sessions for small groups of interested students and businessmen. In the initial stages, he plans for the college to be solely a graduate school with offerings on history and economics. He hopes to raise the five million dollars he feels is necessary within the next five years so that the school can be established with a faculty of approximately ten full professors. If this program proves economically successful, LeFevre hopes to extend the college to a four-year undergraduate liberal arts basis.

LeFevre described the current academic trend toward overspecialization which causes students to take a limited view of the world, by basing his curriculum on the unifying study of the meaning of freedom. He hopes that a worthwhile study of all academic disciplines will be effected, and that students can gain a broad view while still specializing enough to be useful individuals. He believes his initial graduate school will provide a unifying spirit, and he also believes that the proposed school will have the highest academic certification possible. While the Freedom School is meant primarily for businessmen, the Rampart College will be primarily for college students and young minds who are more willing to learn.

The Freedom School consists of businessmen and students from all over the United States and is a miniature of the proposed college. Students seeking admission must take a three part test; one part covering the student's factual background, another part testing the student's "opinion" and a third creative part testing the student's ability to support opinion with fact.

Beginning next fall the Freedom School will be extended into a six month program called the phonetistry, which will be an experimental operation involving college graduates working to construct a feasible program for the proposed college. It is to be a "workshop in liberty where students learn from each other and study together." The so-called "project transition" will extend the Freedom School into the winter months for the first time. The regular summer session will go on as usual.

Editor LeFevre declared that he, and not his boss, Raymond Hoiles, had founded the Freedom School, and stated that he received Hoiles' support only after the school was well-founded. In the same vein he noted that he and his associates were venturing into the Rampart College project without Hoiles' support. He noted that Time magazine in its April 19 issue had made seventeen errors in its story on Raymond Hoiles and his chain of Freedom Newspapers. One of the errors was the alleged support of Hoiles to the founding of the Freedom School and Rampart College. He stated that Hoiles was eighty-three, not eighty-four; that the Freedom Newspapers included well over 250,000 readers instead of the 252,712 listed in the Time article, and that the Colorado Springs Chamber of Commerce had

EDITORIAL:

The most characteristic thing that can be said of Lloyd E. Worner is that he is an eminent educator and scholar, and Colorado College is fortunate that it had access to a man of this sort to replace President Benezet. Dr. Worner in the last 20 years has held almost every possible position at the College. Starting as a student here, he progressively moved up, first as a respected teacher, then to Dean, and finally reaching the presidency this week. This devotion to the college, and the respect that he has already gained from the faculty and administration while working under Benezet, promises to make his take-over one of the smoothest transitions in the history of the college.

Under the leadership of President Benezet and Dr. Worner Colorado College has reached a point where it can truly be said that we rest upon a firm foundation. The current building program is almost completed and we can now focus our energies in the sphere of academics, and Dr. Worner, a prime mover in the creation of the academic Honor System and one of the founders of the General Studies Program, is eminently qualified to lead us in this direction. —Jaffe dorsed and re-endorsed Rampart College.

According to Time, "to guard against backsliders on the staff of any of his papers, Holles periodically sends his top men off to his 'Freedom School' . . . for a reinductation course." Le Fevre denies any association but the most informal between the Freedom Newspapers and the Freedom School. He declared that the personnel of the Freedom chain are not required to attend the school.

Le Fevre despised the "smear tactics of Time" including such ambiguous phrases as "Holles' few say he is to the right of Herod" and went on to declare that the Time statement " . . . Holles' prints just about any columnist who sees things according to Holles. Through the years he has given space to such professional anti-semites as Gerald L. K. Smith, the late Updell, and Joseph P. Kamp—and to one David Baxter, who often rallies against the evils of 'Romanism,'" implies what actually is not. He exclaimed that the Freedom Newspapers had never hired these men as syndicated columnists and had mentioned them only in terms of news stories about lectures they had given in Freedom Newspaper towns.

The enthusiastic editor then began to discuss his philosophy and went on to declare that "the marketplace works" and that his viewpoint was essentially eclectic: drawn from, but not completely including Locke, Mill, and Spencer, and he quoted freely from writings of Bruno Leoni, a contemporary Italian economist. Our conversation quickly degenerated into an argument as we discussed his views on taxation and the voluntary support of public services. In the course of the argument he demonstrated his quick wit and verbal agility as he extended his marketplace individualism into all areas of government and government itself. He is opposed to taxation because it is "stealing" from the individual to support institutions that the individual might oppose. His view is essentially atomistic in that he believes individuals can and should act independently of their governments, and he made the statement that any American citizens wanted to invade Cuba, on an individual basis, they should be permitted to, although he personally would oppose such a move, he believes that the individual should be able to act independently of any governmental agency. When I pointed out that such a move would be suicidal considering the strong Communist forces on the island, he made the statement, "The individual should have the right to pick the place of his death." He wants to put schools, colleges, police forces and fire departments on a competitive basis since "the market system really works."

He ended the conversation by expressing hopes and fears for his new college and even expressed the hope that one day Rampart College would play in CC football.

Symposium Essay Prize

The first prize for an essay on the 1963 Symposium was awarded to Miss Betty Rouse for her essay entitled "The Contradiction and the Absurd"; and the second prize was given to Miss Terry Kidner for her impressions of the Symposium. The first prizes consists of a $25.00 gift certificate at Bain's, while the second prize is a $10.00 gift certificate, donated by President Benezet, at the College Bookstore.

 provement of an eminently qualified faculty, complemented by a rewarding and comprehensive curriculum and an actively inquisitive and academically oriented student body.

Speaking at the 1962 Alumni Forum, Dr. Worner termed the effective student "something more than the student with high college boards and proper course selection in high school, and a good number of A's and a few B's."

Dr. Worner is a distinguished scholar and an educator of the first rank; the college can expect to derive considerable benefit, of both the physically tangible and academically intangible sorts, under his administration.

ASCC Notes

In the temporary absence of President Power, the meeting was called to order by vice president, Steve Sabom. Several minutes later, Mr. Power returned with the news that Dean Lloyd E. Worner had been named to succeed Louis T. Benezet as President of Colorado College.

Commissioner elections will be held May 6 and 7. This will necessitate calling a meeting of ASCC during dead week (which has yet to be really dead) for the purpose of installing the 1963-4 ASCC. Dan Jaffe was approved as sole editor of the TIGER. The Student Policy committee held its final meeting May first. The future status of the committee was discussed.

The major concern of the meeting was the selection of nominees for the three ASCC awards for superior service to the school. From among the 15 nominated, the three will be chosen at the May 6th meeting. These superior service plaques will be presented at the Honors Convocation.

At the suggestion of President Power, the ASCC voted to send a note of congratulations to Mr. Worner.

Warning to Students

Two men students, both under 21, were arrested at 10 a.m., Tuesday, for illegal possession and purchase of liquor. They were required by the District Attorney to post a $300.00 bond.

The men, attempting to purchase liquor using a falsified identification, were indulging in a disturbingly common and needless to say, rather risky practice. Potential and underage hard drinkers might take heed of the object lesson here implicit.

By Peigi Benham

CC students, sometimes criticized for their apathy, are often being encouraged in this attitude by the lack of challenge and stimulation in many classes. While the college has fine courses, it offers perhaps its most demanding education in the area of General Studies, a grouping which semester includes only four courses, Freedom and Authority, Evolution, the Arts in America, and Studies in Eighteenth Century Ideas. However, there is both a desire and a necessity for more courses of this type, open to all students, student and faculty members have shown an interest in classes which indicates that there has been a great deal thought on this subject.

There are students who have left CC with no idea what a poem is—they think of it as "something that rhymes" or as a way of making history palatable with pretty words and so they completely miss the internal structure of the poem, the imagery, the thought, the interworking of rhythm and meter which make it a work of art. The same is true of a painting—how does color complement form, why is painting artistically good and another artistically poor? student should leave college without some knowledge of the things. Thus, a course in aesthetics has been suggested which would be on a different level from the theoretical aesthetic class offered by the philosophy department. The proposed class would deal with practical aesthetics in the areas of music, literature, and art. It would involve several professors, a substantial amount of reading, and lectures as well as discussions and papers, with the aim of applying the aesthetic theories and criteria learned to specific works of art, a poem, a painting, or a piece of music.

A class in linguistics, differing from the course which has been offered by CC in the past, has also been suggested. This course would deal with comparative linguistics and theory of language, ideally beginning by an analysis of English language, and then perhaps comparing it with the language of one of the foreign students at CC. This would enable the students to understand similarities among languages and the common phases of their development.

In this same vein would be a proposed class in the history of the English language, from its character at the time of Chaucer to the present day. This would include the influences on language of historical and cultural events, for example the changes made in the English language by the Norman Conquest, increasing the student's understanding not only of his language but of English history and literature as well.

Another idea is a course in the philosophy of mathematics which would present different mathematical and philosophical systems in relation to one another. As visualizing it would not involve a thorough knowledge of mathematics but would improve understanding beyond the Euclidean and Analytic geometric systems. There are many other geometries which have been important in the realm of philosophy and especially epistemological discussions, but which are usually neglected in both mathematics and philosophy classes at CC.

The present world situation is also an area of special concern, and in order to broaden the student's perspective a course in current events has been advocated. This would require its students to subscribe to several national newspapers and would involve study and discussion of events and their relationship to current political, social, and economic phenomena.

Again, there is no class which really deals with Eastern culture, although there is a class in oriental philosophy. A class in twentieth century history which tries to develop some understanding of different Eastern cultures through the art and literature as well as their history and philosophy would be extremely beneficial. It might require several professors to lecture on the different phases, art, political history, and philosophy, of the countries in question, but in the century which has seen momentous changes in every area of human existence it is essential that we have some understanding of parts of the world which are alien to us.

China in particular is important, and her entire philosophical heritage with its ideas of Yin and Yang, and the unity of Tao, indicates how Communism has been able to take over so readily there.

These suggestions are only a few of many ideas advanced by students and faculty interested in improving classes. But there is a communication problem faced by students which must be alleviated if anything is to be accomplished either by adding courses, or by improving existing ones. There is a vehicle for this communication which has not been effectively utilized, the Student Academic Committee, as defined in the Constitution of the ASCC. The first of its stated duties is "to serve as an intermediary body between the faculty and students (and) to advise the faculty and

Piano, Violin, Cello Recitals To be Held in Perkins Hall

The music department will present talented and advanced students of piano, violin and cello in two student recitals scheduled for Wednesday, May 8, and Friday, May 10. Both recitals will start at 8:15 p.m. in Perkins Hall on the college campus and will be free to the public.

Compositions performed will range from Handel to Bartok. Barbara Coney, talented junior from Trinidad, Colorado, will be heard in Debussy's Suite "Pour le Piano"; Anne Perry, outstanding sophomore from Denver, is going to play the first movement of Schumann's piano concerto while the promising freshman-pianist Lee Prater will be featured in the first movement of Beethoven's First Concerto. Violinist Mary Swagart, freshman from Denver, will contribute Handel's Sonata in F major with Vicky Knox at the piano, and Barbara Morgan, senior from Fort Collins, will play the first movement of Beethoven's Sonata in A major with Anne Perry at the piano.

Other students scheduled to appear in the recitals are freshman Kathy Maes, a graduate of the Colorado School for the Deaf and Blind; Carol Schoonhoven from Evergreen, Colo.; Romney Philpott from Oklahoma City; Jane Humfrey from Mullen, Nebraska; and Vicky Knox from Las Animas, Colorado.

French Film Proves Slight Disappointment

By Sunny Jamison

Tuesday evening members of the campus community were offered the chance to view gratis the movie Jeux Interdits (Forbidden Games), a past winner of the Best Foreign Film Award at the Venice Film Festival. Many who attended the showing at Perkins Hall were left wondering about the quality of other contenders for the prize. The melodramatic plot evolved around Paulette, a winsome if precocious little girl who is orphaned as the result of a German shelling raid upon the mass-suffering Paris.

The subject matter, especially where the religious elements were concerned, was quite reminiscent of the British movie, Hand in Hand. The film was perhaps overrated but it is not without merit. The filming was most sensitive and the children, if not altogether credible, were charming nevertheless. The elements of comedy such as were to be found in the feud between two neighboring families and in the earthy humor of the rustic people were generally delightful. One was left with the feeling that the idea of the simplicity of rural people was overstated, especially with regard to their rather docile acceptance of misfortune and death. The aura of grotesque whimsy which provided an underlying current for the plot served effectively to retain interest and keep the film from becoming altogether maudlin.

The repeated allusions to death and the accompanying imagery which pervaded the production were probably intended to produce a more memorable impact upon the viewer, perhaps through the method of understatement a la Bergman. However, the more symbolic aspects of the metaphors of the rural life and cliches from World War II that, at least in the opinion of this observer, the total effect fell well short of its goal.

administration about course programs which the students have constructively criticized," yet the committee has been involved, instead, in making up a suggested summer reading list for CC students, a worthy project but one which should certainly be secondary to the main business of acting as an academic liaison between students and faculty.

However, the answer to the problem of student awareness is not as simple as an effective Student Academic Committee and the addition of classes to the CC curriculum. They could be added and fail completely in their purpose, because the faculty member who teaches and the framework of the class are quite as important as the basic ideas. Awareness is a combustion process that takes place, with luck, given the student, the professor, and the material to be covered plus an intangible extra. Not only a stimulating curriculum, but also the student's response to it are important.

IFC Elects Officers Passes Rush Rules

Newly elected IFC officers are: Bill Hybl, President; Bill Ward, Secretary-treasurer; and Gieg Smith, Social Chairman. Other members are Fred Luft, Sigma Chi; Al Loosli and George Klein, Kappa Sigma; Don Bradbury, Phi Gamma Delta; Steve Fink and Glen Foust, Phi Delta Theta; John Lewis and Rich Nichols, Beta Theta Pi.

Rush rules for next semester are as follows:

Preamble: The first semester in a Deferred Rush System should be regarded by the fraternities as the semester in which chapters concentrate on themselves rather than upon the freshmen.

A. No freshmen will be permitted to enter a fraternity house or to attend a fraternity function on or off campus, except for the open house and the fraternity dinners, or any other function scheduled or approved by IFC.

B. No fraternity man will be permitted to enter a freshman's room, counselors excepted.

C. No fraternity man will be permitted to accompany a freshman off-campus or be in his company after being off-campus at any time unless with the expressed approval of IFC.

New scholarship requirements will be imposed on those being pledged and initiated next year. A 1.7 grade requirement for pledging and a 2.2 grade requirement for initiation will be needed. This rule will not apply to anyone presently enrolled in Colorado College. Hopefully this will be conducive to higher scholastic standards among the fraternities.

IFC is presently working with Panhellenic on a 24 page rush booklet to be distributed next year.

Debate Team Second In Last Competition

The Colorado College Debate Team finished the 1962-63 season Friday and Saturday at the Colorado-Wyoming Forensic League Championship Tournament.

The tournament, held at the United States Air Force Academy, matched teams from Colorado and Wyoming colleges and universities on the national debate topic, Resolved: that the non-communist nations of the world should establish an economic community.

This tournament climaxed four years of college debating for both Power and Puckett. During that time, they have attended three national tournaments, the Harvard Invitational, and numerous regional tournaments.

A JUBILANT BEN LYON, left, accepts, on behalf of the Zetas, the coveted trophy for first place in Song-Fest fraternity large-group competition. Jim Lucey, master of ceremonies for the annual affair, presented the award. Kappa Kappa Gamma sorority took top position in sorority large group competition.

Kappas, Zetas Take Trophies: Betas, Gama Phis Also Win

At 8 o'clock last Friday night excitement ran high as master of ceremonies Jim Lucey officially welcomed CC parents, students and faculty to the annual Song Fest. As the judges sat with pencils ready, each of the five sororities and fraternities plus the Zetas entertained a capacity crowd with a variety of songs that were the culmination of weeks of song practices for the groups and weeks of worry for the song leaders. During the long period of waiting for the judges to reach a decision, the Couriers (Jim Lucey, Mike Orem and Jerry Layton) led the audience in several folk songs—this group, which has been a campus favorite since their first appearance last fall in the Variety Show, proved popular with parents as well and served to lessen the mounting tension of the Greek groups. At last the winners were announced, amidst both groans and cheers—the Zetas, under the direction of Ben Lyon, were victorious in the men's division, while the Kappas under song leader Stephanie Row carried off the women's trophy. Small group trophies were won by the Betas and the Gamma Phis. In large group competition the Sigma Chis and the Gamma Phis placed second and the Betas and Alpha Phis captured third. Small group runner-ups were the Zetas and the D.G.'s, followed by the Phi Gammas and the Thetas.

Despite the fact that the groups had no formal musical training, the songs and the presentations were for the most part of high quality. The song fest itself was a far cry from the first annual song fest (in May, 1956) which was held on the front steps of Palmer Hall. It was begun by the Music Department as a two day music festival, during which fraternities, sororities and independent groups on campus competed in an intramural song contest. Each group then sang two songs—a song of their choice and a college song (which gradually evolved into the present small group competition). In 1938 trophies were presented for the first time and more recently the Song Fest was made a part of Parents' Weekend.

Student Conduct Committee

Five students involved in Spring Fights were recently found guilty of disorderly conduct and bringing discredit to themselves and Colorado College. The SCC ruled that in any future appearance before the Student Conduct Committee this act would be taken into consideration.

As an incident off campus, the act of misconduct was unfavorable to the reputation of Colorado College in the Colorado Springs community. The act also displayed a lack of good judgment in knowing when an innocent prank becomes offensive to the rights of others.

Greek News

Phi Delta Theta

The sole constructive activity of the week for the Phis was a Saturday spent at the Deaf and Blind School. We raked grass that didn't need raking, watered gardens that were already saturated, picked up tree limbs that looked fine where they were, planted grass that will die anyway, burned trash in such quantities that the Fire Department got 19 calls from worried neighbors, broke playground equipment, pulled every weed in sight including blossoming shrubbery, and rendered unusable a perfectly good dump truck. The Phis have again undeniably proven to the community their indispensable value as a service organization. The school's administration was so elated with the day's accomplishments that they have extended an invitation to return next week to plant some shrubbery, repair some deteriorating playground equipment and an old broken-down truck, and repaint several buildings which were blistered in a recent holocaust.

The much less important social aspect was less favorably satisfied with a minimum of seven tension-breakers concluding the week's activities.

Recently pinned were Johnny "the Beak" Rowland and Jeannie Becker. Congratulations are in order for Pete Webster and Joyce Manning who will be married on May 26th.

Delta Gamma

It's been an exciting week at the D.G. house. Soon after her initiation Linda Axtell passed a candle announcing her pinning to Ken Rolston from Columbia University. Right before our trek over to Shove felt song fest a candle was passed by our song leader, Joyce Manning, announcing her engagement to Pete Webster.

Congratulations go to Nancy Parker who was named Blue Key Queen Saturday night at the Blue Key D.G.'s.

The D.G.'s managed to take a third in Gynkhana Sunday, and it sounded as though both horses and D.G.'s had a great time.

HOW TO SEE EUROPE FOR ONLY $300 A DAY: NO. 2

Last week we discussed England, the first stop on the tour of Europe that every American college student is going to make this summer. Today we will take up your next stop—France, or the Pearl of the Pacific, as it is generally called.

To get from England to France, one crosses one's body and swims the English Channel. Similarly, to get from France to Spain, one crosses one's body and slides down the Pyrenees. And, of course, to get from France to Switzerland, one crosses one's body and wriggles through the Simplon Tunnel. Thus, as you can see, the most important single item to take to Europe is a valise full of grease.

No, I am wrong. The most important thing to take to Europe is a valise full of Marlboro Cigarettes—or at least as many as the customs regulations will allow. And if by chance you should run out of Marlboros in Europe, do not despair. That familiar red and white Marlboro package is as omnipresent in Europe as it is in all fifty of the United States. And it is the same superb cigarette you find at home—the same pure white filter, the same zesty, mellow blend of tobaccos preceding the filter. This gem of the tobaccoist's art, this prodigy of cigarette engineering, was achieved by Marlboro's well-known research team—Fred Softpack and Walter Flitpot—and I, for one, am grateful.

He introduced shortness to France

But I digress. We were speaking of France—or the Serpent of the Nile, as it is popularly termed.

Let us first briefly sum up the history of France. The nation was discovered in 1066 by Madame Guillotine. There followed a series of costly wars with Schleswig-Holstein, the Cleveland Indians, and Jean Jacques Rousseau. Stability finally came to this troubled land with the coronation of Marshal Foch, who married Lorraine Alsace and had three children: Flopsy, Mopsy, and Charlemagne. This later became known as the Petit Trianon.

Marshal Foch—or the Boy Orator of the Platte, as he was affectionately called—was succeeded by Napoleon, who introduced shortness to France. Until Napoleon the French were the tallest nation in Europe. After Napoleon most Frenchmen were able to walk comfortably under card tables. This later became known as the Hunchback of Notre Dame.

Napoleon, after his defeat by Credit Mobilier, was exiled to Elba, where he made the famous statement, "Able was I ere I saw Elba." This sentence reads the same whether you spell it forward or backward. You can also spell Marlboro backward—Orbhlamm. Do not, however, try to smoke Marlboro backward because that undoes all the pleasure of the finest cigarette made.

After Napoleon's death the French people fell into a great fit of melancholy, known as the Louisiana Purchase. For over a century everyone sat around moping and refusing his food. This torpor was not lifted until Eiffel built his famous tower, which made everybody giggle so hard that today France is the gayest country in Europe.

Each night the colorful natives gather at sidewalk cafes and shout "Ou-la-la!" as Maurice Chevalier promenades down the Champs Elysees swinging his malacca cane. Then, tired but happy, everyone goes to the Louvre for bowls of onion soup. The principal industry of France is cashing travellers checks.

Well sir, I guess that's all you need to know about France. Next week we will visit the Land of the Midnight Sun—Spain.

The seniors who are soon leaving will be specially honored.

Kappa Gamma
The Kappas are closing out a rush year with a special academic year in the month of activity. Monday night at the first meeting of the year, a contest was held in honor of the rather small senior class.

Tuesday night, the Kappas got together with the Sigma Chis for an informal dinner at the Kappa house. As usual, it was wild.

Tonight the Kappas and the Thetas will hold the annual Kite and Key Spring Formal at the Gables.

Sunday morning, the entire society will attend the Christening ceremony of Reverend and Mrs. Barton's youngest child. Sunday afternoon, they will attend the Beta Orphan Party, held annually in Monument Park.

Lots of congratulations this week. First, to Lucia Bates and Clay Sarrick, who announced their engagement last night. The wedding will be in August. To the Kappa gymkhana team who, though only four in number, made a very creditable showing on Sunday. And, finally, to Steffie Row for her tremendous, and successful, effort on both song fest and the French play.

Sigma Chi

The Sigma Chi enjoyed themselves at a dessert at the Kappa House on Tuesday evening. Saturday will be the date of our Sweetheart Dance, which will be held at the Colorado Springs Country Club. Last week the Sigma Chis and the Alpha Phi shared the dubious honor of having a picture on the front page of the Free Press. Thank you Free Press for placing us in the middle of the world news. Happy Makua.

Kappa Phi Beta

Diverse talent was demonstrated this week as we moved from Shave Chapel down to the tracks and the horses. Our thanks to Marcia Irving and to the equestriennes in the group for their performances in behalf of our organization.

Mothers from our Denver Mothers Club as well as mothers here for Parents Weekend were entertained Saturday with a luncheon at the house.

A pledge sneak held with the Sigma Chis gave us our last function with our pledges as initiation activities began this week.

Activities will be climaxed Saturday with initiation and an initiation banquet at the Swiss Chalet.

Our best wishes to Judy Reagan and Karen Bessessen on their recent engagements and thanks for the inspiration that they have given us all.

KAPPA ALPHA THETA

Everyone is looking forward to the Senior Breakfast next Sunday morning. Traditionally a forecast for the seniors is read, and then the seniors themselves prepare a will. They always come in fantastic outfits so the whole house is anxious to see the results of this year's creativity.

Pick & Pan Winners To Receive Awards

The Pick and Pan awards given each year for outstanding work in speech, radio, debate, and drama, have a long and interesting history at Colorado College. The awards, begun in 1944 by Woodson Tyree of the Speech Department, go to students who have shown special interest and willingness to perform in these areas for at least one year. All speech activities, dramatic performances, variety shows and other similar productions in school or for the community are considered. Faculty members in charge may present the names of students under their direction for these awards. The plays, variety show, and general speech activities are open to all students, and there are classes in speech, radio, and drama, which one may take for credit. Many recipients of the award have gone on to excel in these fields. Mr. Wes Bradley, station manager of KRDO, received the award in 1947, as did John Newton Reeds, who is now active in television in Los Angeles. In all, over three-hundred people have received the Pick and Pan award.

This year, the nineteenth annual Pick and Pan awards (for either drama, debate, speech, or radio) will be presented to Lewis Myers, Jerry Agnew, Michael Monell, Diane Cox, Jo Heller, David Helms, Lynn Grace, Michael Grace, Adrienne Zech, Diane Wieden, Polly Franklin, Donna Sue Jones, Gerhard Jansen-Vanneboer, and Michael Isfeld. The Apollonian debate award goes to Charles Puckett and Max Power. The Talent and Speakers Bureau certificates are awarded to those who have shown special interest and ability in performances for school and community. This year's recipients are Luiz Perez, Kazuko Kosugi, Don Bradbury and Luis Arrieta.

Woodson Tyree is director of the Pick and Pan awards. Faculty members Alan Johnson and Robin Rudolf are in charge of debate awards, and drama award winners are chosen by William McMillen and David H. Hand of the Drama Department.

The award pin was designed by Peter Buchan and Woodson Tyree. A gold pin and miner's pick and burro make up the pin's design. These symbols stand for "gold is where you dig it," in speech, drama, and debate, as in prospecting, hard work and endurance are needed to profit.

The annual breakfast for the Pick and Pan award winners will be held at "Chief" Tyree's home, 601 Mesa Road, on Sunday, May 5, at 9 a.m. Sunday afternoon at 5 p.m., the Tyrees will host a picnic for all students in speech, drama, radio, or debate.

Injuries Keep Key Runners Out of Track Competition

Injuries have prevented this year's track leaders from being fully effective. They have kept key men out of competition and made the Tiger track men's point production vary widely from week to week.

The first meet of the outdoor season was a good one, with the Tigers taking first place in a triangular with Adams State College and Western State College. The Tigers' most consistent runner, Tony McGinnis, easily won the two-mile and later repeated in the mile. Other runners Norm Liden and sophomore Bob Grant placed first and third respectively in the 440 yard dash. Tiger strength appeared in the field events with shot-putter Harry Boyd taking second, and Steve Sabol fourth. In the newly-created javelin event Howell took first closely followed by his team-mate Morris. Also in the new triple jump they gave the Tigers a first, second, third, and fourth, Afonja, Muller, Schuler, and Clifford. Lee Muller scored in the high jump and Roscoe Welch took second in the discus.

The sprinters did very well. The regular 880 men, Jay Schideler, Mike Durfee and Bob Schuyler, after taking second, third, and fourth, stepped out of their chosen event to gather points in other events. Schideler in the two mile, Schuyler in the triple, and Durfee in the high hurdles. Mike Magruder took second in the 100 and 220 dashes and ran a lap for the second place mile relay team. Other relay team members were Bob Grant, Lyle Hayes, and Tom Jarvis.

Next week at the meet with the perennial RMC power, CSC and CSU, things were different. Abi Afonja took third in the broad jump and second in the triple jump. Weight men Boyd and Welch placed second and fourth in the discus with Sabol fourth in the shot.

Strong contenders in the last two meets depend on how long the injuries of key point men, Magruder, Liden, Broyles, and Schuyler, keep them from practice, but with a little luck and lots of linament the team should finish the season with a good showing.

John Tarr Takes Classic Cycle Race

The Tournament of Cycles was held Saturday afternoon, April 27, in the Garden of the Gods and was an overwhelming success. The good crowd that turned out were treated to two fine races which saw both standing records in the Junkie Classic and the 7.5 mile classic broken. Norm Liden pedaled the 2.5 mile lap in the Junkie Classic in 8:30.4 with the 3-speed challenger, Bill Woodward, a tenth of a second behind at 8:30.5. John Tarr won the 3-lap 7.5 mile Classic in a record-breaking 23:20.8, which broke the existing record of 24:00 minutes. Sarah Gruen, the 1962 Blue Key Queen, presented the medals and the trophies to the winners. Below are listed the first three places in each contest:

Rebuttal to Farrar on Hockey: The Case For the Non-Canadian Hockey Team at CC

By Herman Whiston

In reply to "A Short Sermon on Hockey" which appeared in the Denver Post April 26, by Harry Farrar, I can only comment that Mr. Farrar has walked far out on a limb that deserves to be cut off. Mr. Farrar seems to go along with the theory that Murray Armstrong has, which is to strengthen the W.C.H.A. by any means possible. Mr. Farrar seems to think it is more important to have a strong league of Canadians than it is to have a college hockey program that will encourage Americans to participate in this fine sport. Maybe CC will weaken the league by emphasizing American hockey players, but at least it will be supplying future material for our rather pitiful national teams of late. I charge that Murray Armstrong has done more to discourage the development of American hockey than any other coach in the nation, and thus he has really weakened the league.

When Denver comes to town, we might as well be 1,000 miles north of here.

It is my hope that CC will turn, not only towards American players, but that she also might try to carry on an exchange student program by using some of her Broadmoor Scholarships to bring hockey players from such parts of the world as Finland, Sweden, West Germany, and eventually even the U.S.S.R. With this in operation, the Broadmoor hockey rink could be a real World Arena. Thus CC could continue to represent many people from many different areas who have different ideas, and at the same time would be doing more than just subsidizing the defeat of American Hockey as Denver has done.

Tennis Squad Shows Skills

The Colorado College tennis team still has a chance this weekend to finish demonstrating their ascendancy in the Rocky Mountain conference before the championship meet May 10 and 11. Last week two victories over CSC (Greeley) followed a tremendous success against the Air Force Academy on the 17th. This was the first victory for any CC tennis team over the Cadets and certainly should not be the last as all but two of this year's netters are freshmen.

This weekend an unusual double-header against Mines and Adams State will be held at the Monument Valley Courts. The matches, at 10:30 and 2:00 will be this year's last in dual competition for one of the best tennis teams ever to play at CC. Student support has been weak this year, a change for the good would be welcome.

Carroll to Speak at Baccalaureate Service

The Reverend Joseph W. Carroll, minister of the First Congregational Church of Colorado Springs, will deliver the baccalaureate sermon at Colorado College Sunday, May 26.

The traditional graduation service will be held at 3 p.m. in Shove Memorial Chapel on the campus. Commencement exercises will be held Monday, May 27.

Reverend Carroll has been at First Congregational for three years. He came to the church as associate minister and was named minister in September of 1961.

A native of Chillicothe, Ill., Reverend Carroll holds a bachelor of arts degree in literature from Bradley University and a bachelor of theology degree from the Chicago Theological Seminary at the University of Chicago. He was ordained in 1959.

Since becoming minister of the First Congregational Church of Colorado Springs, he has been a member of the committee on higher education of the United Church of Christ in Colorado and a member of the membership committee of the Pikes Peak Council of Churches.

Lincoln Collection Given CC

National Library Week brought good news to Colorado College as Mr. and Mrs. Robert W. Hendee of Colorado Springs announced they are giving their Lincoln collection of 3,000 books, letters, photographs, and other items to the college. The collection is regarded as one of the most complete private collections on Lincoln in the country.

Dr. Ellsworth Mason, librarian of Charles Leaning Tutt Library, termed the collection invaluable. "It will round out our collection on the American Civil War," Dr. Mason said.

The collection was started from a single volume given to Mr. Hendee by his mother when he was 12 years old. The first book was Elbridge Brook's "The Story of Abraham Lincoln," a child's illustrated edition of the original work.

In addition to the 2,000 volumes, the collection contains New York newspapers of the day with stories about Lincoln and Mary Lincoln, lithographs, prints, photographs, Lincoln campaign buttons, election tickets and memorial sermons preached in churches throughout the nation on the Sunday following his assassination. The collection also contains the last photograph taken of Lincoln, by H. F. Warren on March 6, 1865.

Among the letters is one from Mrs. Lincoln to a wine merchant in New York ordering a basket of champagne. It was ordered for a visit from Gen. Grant when he was made Lieutenant General and commander of the Union Army.

College Initiates Fine Arts Major

Colorado College has adopted a fine arts major with a concentration in drama, effective in September. The program will be conducted by a special committee representing the departments of art, drama and music.

The college's committee on instruction recommended that students majoring in fine arts take between 39 and 41 semester credit hours of work in the field. Required would be 18 hours of drama, six hours of English literature, six to eight hours of music, six hours of art history and three hours of aesthetics.

Those taking a concentration in drama would be required to take the following courses: Introduction to the theater, child drama, directing, history of the theater, aesthetics of the theater and a special readings course. Child drama, aesthetics of the theater and the special readings course were added especially for the new major.

Rosenhaupt to Deliver Commencement Speech

Dr. Hans Rosenhaupt, national director of the Woodrow Wilson National Fellowship Foundation, Princeton, New Jersey, will deliver the 1963 commencement address at Colorado College May 27. Dr. Rosenhaupt has been national director of the Woodrow Wilson National Fellowship Foundation since 1958. The Foundation is the country's largest private fellowship program devoted to recruiting and supporting potential graduate students. As national director, Dr. Rosenhaupt is responsible to a 15 member board of trustees for the expenditure of $6,600,000 annually in grants to fellowships and subventions to graduate schools.

Dr. Rosenhaupt, born in Frankfurt-on-Main, Germany, in 1911, attended the universities in Frankfurt, Berlin and Munich. He received a Ph.D. degree from the University of Berne in 1935. He came to the United States the same year, and in 1940 became a naturalized citizen. He taught German and French at Oak Park Junior College for two years, German at Knox College for one semester, and German and psychology at Colorado College for six years, interrupted by army service.

During World War II, he served the Army Military Intelligence, rising in rank from private to captain. In 1947-48 he lectured in the United States and Canada under the auspices of Rotary International on foreign affairs. He came to the Foundation from Columbia University where from 1948 to 1958 he was responsible for admissions to the Graduate Faculties.

While at Columbia he also served as research associate to the university's committee on the fu-

Outstanding Scholars Recognized At Recent Honors Convocation

Presiding over the Seventh Honors Convocation was Blue Key Fraternity president, Albert Church. Mr. Church gave the welcome and then introduced Dean Lloyd E. Worner. Dr. Worner's introduction stressed the meaning of the departmental awards and honors and the value of time. He then asked each professor to proceed in the order of the printed program.

Following these presentations, Professor "Coach" Carle recognized the outstanding athletes who had been previously honored at a banquet.

Basketball: Gregg Smith, leading scorer; Bob Heine, most valuable player.

Hockey: Art Berglund and Don Stouffer, leading scorers; Dan McGill, most improved player; Don Stouffer, most valuable player.

Football: Vince Greco, most valuable player.

Track: Tony McGinnis, leading scorer.

All Conference Football: Mike Minelli.

All Conference Basketball: Gregg Smith.

Coach Carle also presented three blanket awards for active participation in more than one sport. Recipients were Alex Yankovich, Robert Broyles and Jim Frolich.

Following a brief background history of the Blue Key Honors convocation, President Benzet presented the All-College Award. The Publication Board award for outstanding service went to Amy Rason and the E. K. Gaylord Award for continuing contributions to CC publications was presented to junior Betsy Crockett. ASCC recognition for service to the college community was given to Edward DeGeorge, Susan Caull, Steve Frink, Walt Hecox, David Hile, Al Loochi, Max Power, Leigh Rainy, Steve Sabom, Harris Sherman, and Polly Franklin. The ASCC Outstanding Service Awards were given to seniors Ivy Hinds, Ben Lewis, and Bill Stafford.

Don Stouffer was chosen recipient of the Van Diest Award on the basis of his character, scholarship, citizenship, and athletic contributions. The Esden Memorial Award, accompanied by a $100 prize, is annually given to a young man interested in the social sciences. Outgoing ASCC president Max Power accepted this token of recognition.

The Esden Trophy is presented to the fraternity which displays progressive, diligent spirit in its promotion of scholarship, campus responsibility, and good citizenship. President Fred Luft accepted the trophy for the Sigma Chi Fraternity.

Max Power presented a blanket award for excellence in more than one field to President Benzet. It was a token of the student body's appreciation for all of his contributions to the college. The CC blanket, it was felt, would represent the College's love and admiration for Benzet much more than an impersonal, expensive gift.

Before administering the oath of office to President-elect Sherman, Mr. Power took the opportunity to thank all those people with whom he had worked during his length of office, particularly those in the present junior and senior classes. His farewell letter, he intimated Mr. Harris D. Sherman as President of the ASCC. Mr. Sherman proposed that the 1963-64 academic year be one of "exploration" into many new aspects of student government. It is his hope that the ASCC will become a more vital organization on campus.

Mr. G. Allan Chauncy, manager of Southgate Sears Roebuck presented a special award to Max Power. Mr. Power stepped again to the podium to accept a certificate for a set of luggage.

The final awards of the morning were the two annual Blue Key awards. President Albert Church recognized Mr. Philip LeCuyer as outstanding freshman. The award was made on the basis of scholarship, leadership, and participation in campus activities. The award to the administrator who has made the most contribution to campus life was given to President Benzet for his dedication to the college during the past eight years.

A. S. Alston Elected To Trustee Board

A. S. Alston, vice president and general manager of the western area of the Bell Telephone Co. of Pennsylvania, has been elected a charter member of the Colorado College Board of Trustees. Alston, who received his bachelor's degree from CC in 1937, has been an alumni trustee of the college since 1959.

The trustees re-elected to one year terms three officers and re-elected to six year terms two board members. Armin B. Barney, president of the Colorado Springs National Bank, was re-elected to a third term as chairman of the board. Other board officers re-elected were Gerald L. Schlessman, president of the Greeley Gas Company, vice chairman; and Robert L. Spurgeon, Denver attorney, secretary. The two board members re-elected for six year terms are Russell T. Tutt, executive vice president of El Pomar Foundation of Colorado Springs, and Edward K. Gaylord, editor, publisher and president of the Daily Oklahoman and Oklahoma City Times. Four of those re-elected, Barney, Spurgeon, Schlessman and Gaylord, are Colorado College alumni.

Scholarship and Grants

Miss Sandra K. Weir, daughter of Mrs. William Weir of 4315 52nd St. N.E., Seattle, has been awarded a two-year scholarship to the University of Chicago graduate school. She will receive a stipend of $1,900 annually. She plans to work toward a master of arts in teaching degree.

Peter Spangler, a junior in the department of zoology, was one of three recipients of 1963 Colorado-Wyoming Academy of Science research grants.

These grants, presented at the Academy's annual meeting on May 3 at Colorado State University, are made possible through funds from the American Association for the Advancement of Science.

Mr. Spangler's research project, under the supervision of Dr. Richard G. Beidleman, will involve a study of the nutrient value of deer browse in the Garden of the Gods area.

This is the first time since 1941 that an undergraduate from Colorado College has received a research grant from the Academy.

Senator Allott to Speak

LETTERS to the EDITOR

Dear Editor:

It has been brought to the attention of the ASCC that the coverage of Parents' Weekend in the TIGER was inadequate. The Council considers Parents' Weekend an important event of the college community and hopes that in the future the coverage will be more complete.

Since the TIGER is the only medium between the college community and the parents, we feel that it is the duty of the editor of the TIGER to make some expression of welcome in the issue distributed during this event. We hope these recommendations will be seriously considered in the future.

Sincerely,

Karen McIlwaine
ASCC Secretary

Dear Editor,

I would like to point out one thing in regard to Miss Benham's column "Opinion" in last week's TIGER. She offers the idea of a class in the history of the English language. This would include the character of the language from the time Beowulf was written to the present character of the language. The languages of literature, of historical and cultural events, for example the changes made in the English language by the Norman Conquest" would be considered.

This is what is essentially offered in a course at the present time. The second semester of The English Language, English 358, deals with the history of the English language. It is taught this year by Mr. Mauch. Although there are only seven students and one professor presently taking the course, it is offered as a part of the curriculum.

The course presently goes backwards in time, first covering present-day English and then proceeding to the beginnings of the English language. Several aspects of Modern English, Early Modern English, Middle English, and Old English (Anglo-Saxon) are considered. These include the grammatical development of the language, such as changes that have developed in word order and inflections; sound changes; vocabulary, including the introduction and disappearance of various words and changes in semantics; and study of dialects. Some literary criticism of selected prose and poetry from the different periods is included.

Several papers are required. Although the influence of cultural and historical events on the language is not covered in class, it is required outside reading. The text and several other books are used for this course. — Bill Cushman.

Dear Editor:

In my opinion the moral conduct of students at CC should be treated as a matter of personal taste rather than as a general policy arbitrarily enforced by a select group of students. It seems to me that enforced moral conduct makes a mockery of the resolute attitude taken toward monitored tests. It likewise seems to debase all of the dynamic principles of education which have continually been announced as the primary goals of a liberal arts education. I appreciate the outside pressures to which a school of this type is responsible; however I also feel that it is primarily responsible to itself and its students. If certain indiscretions on the part of student conduct are not overlooked, this school could easily succumb to the greatest threat which it has to face. This threat is the temptation to sacrifice a dynamic representative student body in the name of maintaining only the most incompressible, praise-mongering, morally excellent, and thoroughly stagnant student body possible.

sible. Since many of us are preparing for what might be called a consecrated life in a society oriented primarily to a pious conduct it is important for the most sensitive members of our campus to learn to tolerate all types of human nature. Even if the primary educational goal is to lead out students of high moral stature, an organization such as the Student Conduct Committee is more detrimental to this goal than anything else. How can any person of this caliber tolerate the tens of the goal he supposedly wants to do the most work in this area are threatened with discipline while the moral aristocracy through conduct has never been challenged are fairly placed on the bench of judgment to set policies for the rest of the student body. Nothing at all has actually been accomplished in this elementary school safety patrol approach. A more admirable plan is to encourage students to develop authentic (not enforced) self-mastery through their own standards and goals. The divergence of this self-mastery should take only be defined by the student himself. No individual having authentic moral strength ever acquiesces by weakly conforming to tempting promises of sanctity offered by a centralized policy-committee. Each student should be given an atmosphere of freedom in which to develop a mode of behavior for which he considers himself best suited. Our country has set up a very extensive system of laws and law enforcement for the sole purpose of resolving social conflicts. An organization whose purpose is to impose further restrictions on students beyond those required by law certainly is not dedicated to the ideals of a liberal arts college. I suggest that if the plan in the present case before the Student Conduct Committee was resistibly entered by the valiantness of the situation, I imagine that Reverend Burton will be glad to spend an afternoon straightening her out. Likewise, although I realize that the TIGER likes to see clear of anything more controversial than the inferiority of student show, I suggest that the would do well to promote interest and debate on this important subject.

Thank you very much,

— Harry Intemann

Dear Editor,

Though I am not a student yet, I felt constrained to direct a letter of inquiry to the editor on reading last week's article describing Rampart College as the aspirations of the Gazette Telegraph's Robert LeFevre.

My first impulse on reading Mr. Heckman's article was near-bombastic surprise that any student at a liberal arts school like Colorado College should allow herself to be so intimidated by Robert LeFevre and his background philosophy that he would go out of his way to give any direct conflict with the subject of his interview.

Even under a byline, something which I am told confers on the writer the right to honestly report his own feelings, the author of last week's story only merited in passing that the conversation "degenerated into an argument." Later even this feeble admission of conflict is cancelled when LeFevre is lauded for his "well verbal agility."

The article is, in short, a well-written but extremely disturbing piece of journalism. I would prefer to think that its author deliberately restrained from exaggerating the fallacies in a degenerate system which would bring America into any atavistic chaotic, chaos. — Mr. Johnson Gills

Editorial—

American foreign policy in the last decade has been cast in a negative role. To many observers our position is based on one premise, stop the Communist advance. However, most Americans who believe in a foreign commitment feel that our role should be a more constructive stand; to these people our role should be as a fosterer of individual justice, freedom, and the pursuit of happiness against those who would threaten these "inalienable rights." Unfortunately between this conception and reality lies a major gap.

For a moment, let us project ourselves into the position of an African reading an article on the Birmingham, Alabama, integrationist movement. Then, to compound this, let him see a picture of a policeman unleashing a police dog on these unarmed marchers. It will be fairly difficult for our Information Service to convince this individual that we stand for justice. But what confuses the colonial peoples of the world even more is our seeming duplicity, for we espouse democratic principles while at the same time supporting such lovers of freedom as Francisco Franco, Chiang-Kai-Chek, and Batista. As to our nurturing the desire among peoples for a better life, foreigners feel that the United States' initials describe our true feelings towards their aspirations. To their minds, we will help them as long as it materially helps the U.S.-manship is an ineffective rallying cry to the world. It cannot make the unaligned stand resolutely against the Communists. Therefore, by letting our positive aspects be diluted, we slowly force ourselves into what could become an irretrievable position of reaction. Instead of our power bloc standing for democracy, we are forced by our own ambiguities to be merely anti-communistic.

There has recently been some movement away from this policy, for instance our condemnation of the Portuguese colonial action in Angola, and our greater stress on economic rather than military assistance. This makes the nations that we aid feel less like they are fighting a forward action to protect "Fortress America." However, these measures are stopgaps, and if we are ever to break this inertia, in the political arena, we are going to have to make the realities of our actions jibe more closely with our professed ideals, for it is our actions that we shall be judged upon.

The Communists hold out a positive hope for the future to underdeveloped nations, a hope built on freedom from hunger and want. We must counter, that though the Communists offer material freedom, it can only be achieved through an eventual enslavement to the Soviet Union. Then, by our actions, we convince the underdeveloped world that we can help them solve their economic problems without their sacrificing their national aspirations. If these steps are not taken, and we sustain our image of America First, we cannot fail to look predatory to the smaller nations of the world, and to these countries being eaten by the eagle rather than the bear can only be a small consolation. — Jaffe

By Max Power and Bill Stafford

Some illustrious members of this community maintain that the individual, within a free market system, should not be fettered by government. For example, these wise men tell us that fire protections should be provided not by government but rather through the system of competitive enterprise. You may ask, "Will this work?" We answer: "Look at history, for there are examples."

Take Marcus Licinius Crassus, who started a fire company in Rome. According to Miriam Beard, he "sent his chiefs to bargain with persons in distress for the highest possible sums before fire-fighting operations began. It was thus said of Crassus that his money came from the worst misfortunes of Rome."

But, our friends maintain, any governmental action which taxes or regulates damages the free market system. One economist, whom these advocates of non-government often cite,

Hayeck, in his The Road to Serfdom, says: "Through all such controls . . . improve extra costs, they will be worthwhile. To prohibit the use of certain poisons, substances or to require special precautions in their use, limit working hours or to require certain sanitary arrangements is fully compatible with the preservation of competition. . . . Nor is the preservation of competition incompatible with an extensive system of social services . . ."

Thus, concludes Hayeck, "neither the provision of signs on the roads nor, in most circumstances, that of the themselves can be paid for by every individual user. There are certain harmful effects of deforestation, or of some methods of farming, or of the smoke and noise of factories confined to the owner of the property in question. . . . In such instances we must find some substitute for the regulation by the price mechanism."

Among other things which our local defenders of free enterprise suggest should be left to private devices is the absence of money. Hayeck says of such things: "The functioning of a competition not only requires adequate organization of certain institutions like money, markets, and channels of information—some of which can never be adequately provided by private enterprise—but it depends, above all, on the existence of an appropriate legal system . . ."

To this writer, these things imply government. Also, these members of our town suggest that "individuals should act independently of their government." We are aware of the relationship of such independent action to the legal system which Hayeck, the conservative economist, says is necessary. For the law must be enforced by governmental power.

Consider for a moment the logic of one view of "atomistic" society—that which our individualists advocate. Thomas Hobbes described a society "wherein men live without other security than what their own strength and their own inventions shall furnish them."

"In such condition," said Hobbes, speaking of atomistic society, "there is no place for industry, because the fruit thereof is uncertain; and consequently no culture of the earth; no navigation, nor use of the commodities that may be imported by sea; no commodious building; no instruments for planting, and removing, such things as require much force; no knowledge of the face of the earth; no account of time; no arts; no letters; no society and, which is the worst of all, continual fear, and danger of violent death; and the life of man, solitary, poor, nasty, brutish, and short."

This may be, you say, exaggerated. But it describes society in which men are allowed to "act independently of their government," where there are no taxes to support a public legal system with its own force. What result, other than that which Hobbes describes, do you see if we abolish taxation because it is "stealing" from the individual to support institutions which the individual might oppose?

Let's look at it a different way. The amount of government necessary to a society such as ours is analogous to the quantity of food an individual needs for existence. Any Chinese peasant can explain that it is impossible to exist without food, as in our complex society it would be impossible to exist without government. There is a certain optimum range of calorie intake that would be best for existence. Either too much or too little food can cause an excruciating belly ache.

Yet roughly one half our federal government's budget is used for defense, and this is a basic and necessary function of our government. A modern army of sufficient strength and capability could hardly be supported by private subscription, which is advocated by those of the Freedom Newspapers' persuasion.

Checking System Necessary at Tutt

By Kay Anderson

The check system at the door of the new library was met with some degree of student consternation this fall. Although Dr. Nelson, the college librarian, had made personal appearances explaining the problems of library theft to all campus living groups last year, the number of books which later disappeared was greater than ever. The check was reluctantly decided upon for use at Tutt because the library has been losing $800-1,000 worth of books per year. Since many of these books are out of print, labor is the most expensive factor in replacing them. The check system at the library is not felt to be infallible, but the staff at the library does feel that it has cut down on the theft of books.

However, there are still problems. Recently a telephone was stolen and a half dozen ash trays have been broken while several others have been stolen. Although the discovery of the loss or mutilation of books takes time, some of the members of one political science class were shocked recently when they found that at least three articles in current magazines had been cut out—either that or else the magazines had disappeared completely. In this case, because of the nature of the material, students felt that the culprits were probably fellow classmates. Replacing such material as this is expensive, inconvenient, and sometimes impossible. Furthermore, students often do not have the time to wait for replacement.

The library is used primarily by college students. The only high school students who may use the library at all are seniors who can obtain college books on inter-library loan. It is sometimes felt that high school students, thus restricted, may steal books as they can obtain them no other way. It must be assumed, though, that this is basically a college problem.

Dr. Mathias feels that the ultimate solution lies within students' attitudes. He says that formal punishment of the few culprits who are caught is not effective as it merely reflects the passive attitude of most of the students. He says that the extent to which the problem is much greater than in previous years and he attributes this to a lack of responsibility on the part of today's young people.

The library staff would welcome any student or faculty theories or measures which could be adopted to deal with this subject, as well as general suggestions concerning the library.

Letter to the Editor

Ed note—This is a letter from the editorial offices of the Gazette-Telegraph; it was addressed to the feature editor of the TIGER.

Dear Mr. Heckman:

Let me thank you most sincerely for the splendid story. Congratulations on playing it straight.

Would you be so good as to send me two dozen copies and bill me, please? I'd want to circulate this to let some folks know that honest journalism still exists at CC.

There was a couple of minor errors but whether they arose from some unfortunate word choice on my part or your part, I am not certain.

In any case, this is a fine thing and you and your friend (can't recall his name at the moment) are on my "me plus ultra" list.

Sincerely,
Robert LeFevre

HOW TO SEE EUROPE FOR ONLY $300 A DAY: NO. 3

When all of you go to Europe during your summer vacation, you will certainly want to visit Spain, where the tall corn grows.

The first thing you will notice upon entering Spain is the absence of sibilants. In Spain "s" is pronounced "th" and thereby hangs a tale. Until the reign of Philip IV—or Guy Fawkes, as he was sometimes called—Spaniards said "s" just like everybody else. Philip IV, however, lisped, and Spaniards, having an ingrained sense of propriety and not wishing to embarrass their monarch, decided that everybody should lisp. This did indeed put Philip IV very much at his ease, but in the end it turned out to be a very bad thing for Spain. It wrecked the saffron industry—Spain's principal source of revenue—and reduced the nation to a second-class power.

As a result, Spaniards were all forced to turn to bull fighting in order to keep body and soul together. Today, wherever you go in Spain—in Madrid, in Barcelona, in Toledo, in Cleveland—you will see bulls being fought. For many years the bulls have sought to arbitrate this long-standing dispute, but the Spaniards, a proud people who use nothing but Castile soap, have rejected all overtures.

It is therefore necessary for me to explain bull fighting to anyone who is going to Spain. It is also necessary for me to say a few words about Marlboro Cigarettes because they pay me for writing this column, and they are inclined to put if I ignore their product. In truth, it is no chore for me to sing the praises of Marlboro Cigarettes, for I am one who fairly swoons with delight when I come upon a cigarette which gives you the full, rich taste of good tobacco plus the pure white Selectate filter, and Marlboro is the only smoke I have found that fulfills both requirements. Oh, what a piece of work is Marlboro! The flavor reaches you without stint or diminution. You, even as I, will find these statements to be happily true when once you light a Marlboro. Marlboros come to you in soft pack or Flip-Top box, and are made only by the unakers of Marlboro.

But I digress. Let us return to bull fighting. Bulls are by nature bellicose creatures who will keep lighting till the cows come home. Then they like to put on pipe and slippers and listen to the "Farm and Home Hour." However, the Spaniards will not allow the bulls any succor. They keep attacking the bull and making veronous—a corn meal panicle filled with ground meat. Bulls, being vegetarians, reject the veronous and then, believe you me, the fur starts to fly!

To be perfectly honest, many Spaniards have worn greenery of this incessant struggle and have left little ships—the Patti, the Maxine, and the Laverne—and discovered Ohio. Marcellan later discovered Columbus. Balloon also sailed to the New World, but he was silent on a peak in Darien, so it is difficult to know what he discovered.

Well sir, I guess that's all you need to know about Spain. So now, as the setting sun casts its rosy fingers over El Greco, let us take our reluctant leave of Spain—or Perfidious Albion, as it is jealously called. Aloha, Spain or Perfidious Albion, aloha!

© 1963 Maz Ghutman

Let us not, however, take our leave of smoking pleasure. Let us keep enjoying those fine Marlboro Cigarettes—rich, golden tobacco—pure white Selectate filter—soft pack or Flip-Top box—available in all fifty States of the Union.

Alpha Phi-Sigma Chi Affair Deemed Illicit

By Jim Warden

Tuesday, the 23rd of April, will go down in the history of Spring Fights at Colorado College as a day of memorable accomplishment. It was on this date that one of CC's most hallowed and ethnic of customs reached a pinnacle that can serve as a model for years to come.

Certain anonymous members of the Alpha Phi sorority staged a dastardly and secret attack on the unsuspecting Sigma Chi house. Spreading white trails of merriment, they reveled in their T.P. until at last, rallying to cause, certain Sigma Chis took the offensive. The battle was soon of city-wide proportions as one alert Free Press photographer discovered. It seems the tide of battle had turned in the Sigma Chi's favor for the photo reveals that the Alpha Phis were securely chained to a parking meter. The police were reported, at this point, to have joined in the fun wholeheartedly.

Perhaps the Sigma Chis lingered too long at the scene of the crime or perhaps the humor of the situation had worn off after a while, but needless to say, the fun was soon ended. Securely impounded by the local authorities, but still jubilant, they were last quoted as being in good spirits.

It is hoped that in the future these activities will be confined to the campus to spare the local citizens any further disturbances.

'David and Lisa': Skillful, Human Psycho-drama

By David Greenberg

David and Lisa is one of the very few psychologically orientated films that manages to avoid the pitfall of becoming a case study that reveals in its subjects' psychological abnormalities. Eleanor Perry's skillful script does an excellent job of revealing the essential human qualities of the film's two heroes. The story is basically that of a boy and a young girl at a school for the mentally disturbed, who through their love for each other are helped to recover.

Keir Dullea plays David with just enough of that wild look in his eyes and just enough of that restrained manner to convince one he belonged in the movie without screaming it at us. Janet Margolis as Lisa is just as convincing in her portrayal of a young schizophrenic who can only make verbal contact with people through the use of rhyme. Acting honors, however, must certainly go to Howard de Silva who plays the "old-style" psychoanalyst to perfection. He is visually the embodiment of the tweed jacket, pipe smoking, mustached father image and his lines in no way jar this ideal picture.

The world of the mentally ill is a relatively new one for the popular motion picture industry. Consequently there has been a great flood of this sort of film. Most of them, such as A Child Is Waiting, suffer from a lack of purpose. Beyond the acknowledged fact that the mentally ill have an extremely powerful effect on the screen, the problems in a movie with this as its subject matter do not change. David and Lisa seems to have gotten over this initial hurdle quite nicely.

Art Exhibit

The Fine Arts Center, beginning Friday, May 10, will exhibit art works by students from both the Air Force Academy and Colorado College. The joint show will consist of painting, drawing, prints, sculpture, and design from both institutions. The show will run through June 6.

The show will be open to the public on Friday, May 10. Previous to the opening there will be a short reception. Faculty, staff and students from both schools are cordially invited and urged to attend.

Strength of Tradition Theme Of AWS Senior Dinner

By Cathy Grant

The AWS Senior Recognition Dinner was held May 2 in the spirit of its theme "Strength of Tradition." The evening program included a specially served meal, the announcement of numerous honors, and an address by President Benezet.

Two points about the "Strength of Tradition" were emphasized by Dr. Benezet following his opening remarks which sketched a history of CC's customs. First was the idea that individuals seeking their own ideas and traditions outside of themselves. It is the richness in life realized at the moment. Traditional dinners, convocations, performances, and Sunday services are examples of such moments. There is a realization of the strengthening influence of the college within each participant at these occasions which usually underscores the value of being a part of CC. The second concept about tradition the President developed was its ability to give impact to the place one holds in history. Class traditions often are an indication of this; the uniqueness of any particular four years at CC is a good example. The distinct combination of events (one year with a spectacular homecoming, a year for moving the library or that year which featured shaping fertilizer) takes its shape in the context of class traditions. Through these, an individual can see his part in the history of CC.

Mr. Benezet emphasized these points in their relation to the College's eighty years. At first the college traditions seemed to circumscribe the student. Commencement took on much meaning in relation to the restricted and closely-knit, homogenous student body. Dr. Benezet pointed out the insularity of early campus life by mentioning a few of the regulations for women. Everything from chafing dishes to "tramping" parties (with more than two and less than eight) was to be registered with the dean's office. Traditional were 8:30 hours excepting only one or two nights a week, and special rules about Sunday visiting were in effect.

After World War I, CC turned its emphasis to athletics. Homecoming was the year's big weekend while social life and sports permeated most student activity. This change of direction was made firm with the beginning of the traditional student automobile. World War II's effect was to add another dynamic change in attitude. The student body became more businesslike, less homogenous, more like a group of individuals seeking their own ideas and traditions outside of themselves. Most traditional events were not considered important; the prevailing attitude was in opposition to conformity. Dr. Benezet suggested that it is here we find CC now.

At this point the president's address turned to an appeal to the CC student body to be more conscious of their traditions, and to deliberate in passing them on to new classes. The text of this part of his speech can be found on page five.

Among the honors announced during the AWS dinner were the Cap and Gown Awards and the Ann Rice Award, and the selection of Outstanding Senior Women. Cap and Gown Awards, an organization honoring Senior women during their senior year, tapped its members in its traditional delivery way. Carol Wright, Barbara Sue Hile, Linda Butschke, Jean Moore, Suki Arentz, Jean Torum, Stephanie Ror, Miss Moon, Nana Parker, and Marla Bullock were given this honor.

The Ann Rice Award, special recognition for a selected Junior woman, was given to Marla Bullock. This award is presented to the CC woman whose activities and scholarship reflect deeply in the approach to the attainment of education. Cap and Gown makes its selection for the Rice family. In 1950 the daughter of this family was an outstanding freshman her following the tradition of her parents. Later that year she died. The Rice family instituted an annual award which now is given to the outstanding Junior woman, and includes her the opportunity to correspond with the Rices as their "adopted" daughter and a $100 stipend.

Miss Moon presented certificates to the Outstanding Senior Women of the Class of 1963, selected partly by the members of their own class. This group includes Gretchen Perce, Lani Markisen, Jan Bolnik, Rachel Jensen, Sue Ballou, Kay Matthews, Ann Scanlon, Karen Bessessen, Alice Brooks, Flankin, Peigi Benham, Sara Gruen, and Leigh Rainey.

Other awards were given including the Denver AAUW Award to Lani Markisen, and the Outstanding Senior member of WAA to Jean Albrecht.

Alice Brooks presented the AWS gavel to Jean Torum, her successor as the AWS president; and Sue Ballou gave Flint Smith, the new Loomis President, the Loomis pendant. The 1962-63 Women's Dorm Presidents and two leading head residents (Mrs. Roper and Miss Stratton) received recognition and gifts, as did Miss Moon for her continuing service to The Associated Women's Students.

Alpha Lambda Delta honored five senior women whose scholarship achievement had been maintained for seven consecutive semesters: Lynn Vincent, Terry Kibler, Karen Bessessen, Joanna Walker, and Barbara Morgan.

Wakuta, the honorary women's athletic organization also welcomed its new members: Nan Lindquist, Lynn Sipple, Jan Okamura, Del Crockett, Anne Holmes, Doreen Frew, Sue Bigelow, Ann Deane, Ann Peters, Roma Favrot, Frances Pries, Flint Smith, and Lani Christy.

The evening concluded with a special presentation of a silver tray to Dr. and Mrs. Benezet following a standing ovation. Jean Torum, mistress of ceremonies, presented it to them from the Associated Women Students of CC.

President Benezet Addresses Associated Women Students

(Editor's Note: This is the last third of President Benezet's speech before the Associated Women Students Recognition Dinner on Thursday, May 2.)

What then shall we say about the place of tradition in college? Much of the old framework is gone: the circumfrised life on campus which ended with the War years and the student automobile. Much of the desire for tradition is buried today beneath an anxious search by each student for the "existential self." Rather uncritically we have taken up the idea that the past and the future are no longer important commitment and courage. This then is what I in my final Commencement next May 27, and generations of presidents after me at their Colorado College Commencements, will mean when we say to you and those who will follow you, "By action of the faculty, the Board of Trustees concurring, and by virtue of the authority invested in me, I confer upon you the degree Bachelor of Arts and admit you to all rights and privileges and responsibilities thereto pertaining."

—Louis T. Benezet

Around you in this college stand things put up in the traditions of realism and ethical responsibility; Palmer and Olin for the new truth; Tutt Library for its Greek atrium and its re-creation of man's best knowledge of the past; Shawe Chapel with its highest values held by the society; Perkins and the Arts Center for the free creative spirit; Stocum, Loomis, Rasmussen and other living centers of human fellowship and also for the practice of responsibilities and each other.

These buildings are in part the values of our traditions. Our traditions are held also by the men and women brought here to be teachers: men and women I hope you may continue to know, through visits and letters in the years ahead, as I still know some of the men remaining who nearly 20 years ago taught me.

These people and these buildings round us of the strength of college traditions. We do not need to do much to celebrate them. During the year we have enough occasions to do this and by and large our students respond well: the innovations, the endowed lectures, the crisis cases of honor and conduct, the Honors Assembly, the honor societies, Commencement Weekend. What I am asking you believe is that we be a little more conscious, a little more proudly proud, a little less apologetic and casual about it all. I am asking that we take up the task of passing it on each year to newcomers. Right before you is the most favored existence that any of you will ever live — these years. What has been given to you for life and growth in the College, measured especially against the current misery in the rest of the world, is rich beyond your knowing. It is rich not because you represent some special case of especially deserving moralists, or because of the hard-working administration, or even because of the able and devoted faculty, but because we have the privilege of living here because nearly 90 years ago other people who believed in liberal arts were persevering enough to start a College here.

And those people in turn were able to start Colorado College because more than 2000 years ago a very few men had the strength and discernment to mold idealism and ethical responsibility out of the day of early civilization.

This then is the strength of tradition. It is kept alive not casually, not by self-seeking, but by com-

Pershing Rifle Chapter Gives Honors Banquet

Charlotte Ann Adams was honored at a dinner given Thursday, April 18 by the Colorado College chapter of Pershing Rifles. She was chosen as Honorary Captain and sponsor of the local Pershing Rifle Company, and will be entered in the Pershing Rifles National Sponsor Contest. Her court includes Roms Favrot, Leslie Eckert, Beth Anneberg, and Sue Ann Kellar.

Charlotte Adams is now an active member of Kappa Kappa Gamma Sorority, member of the cast for the Air Force Academy's play, "Hey! Mr. Blue," and is in many other activities.

Also honored at the dinner was Captain Louis Pistone. Captain Pistone, who has been the adviser for the Pershing Rifles Company for three years, will be leaving after this June to take command of an infantry company in Korea.

CC Students and Professors Deliver Papers at Science Academy Meeting

Five papers by Colorado College students and professors were presented Friday and Saturday (May 3-4) at the 34th annual meeting of the Colorado-Wyoming Academy of Science in Ft. Collins.

Max Taylor, a senior from Colorado Springs majoring in chemistry, and chemistry Professor Milton Snyder are authors of a paper delivered Friday morning on "The Reaction of Sulfuryl Chloride with Hydrogen Cyanide."

Colorado College zoology Prof. James Anderson delivered a paper on the "Ecology of the Prairie Falcon" on Friday. Miss Patricia Holt, a graduate student from Littleton, will deliver a paper on "The Effect of Cobalt-60 Whole-body Irradiation on Certain Aspects of the Blood Picture of the Domestic Pigeon."

Also on Friday, Prof. Robert M. Stabler, chairman of the Colorado College zoology department, read a paper he co-authored with Miss Holt on "Further Comparison of the Incidence of Trypanosoma Avium in the Blood and Bone Marrow from Colorado Birds."

A CC chemistry professor and student and two Marathon Oil Company scientists are joint authors of a paper delivered Friday afternoon on "A Modified Wilhelmy Balance for Determining Adhesion Tension." The authors are Prof. Lester A. Michel, chairman of the college's chemistry department; Michael Orem, a Colorado College senior from Fairmont, Minn., majoring chemistry and J. E. Wilson and C. L. Sutula from Marathon.

CU Medical School Holds Open House

On Saturday, May 11, the University of Colorado School of Medicine at Denver will hold its annual open house for all college students who are interested in the study of medicine.

A full day's program is planned which will include a lecture-demonstration period on Kidney Transplantation, a discussion on Requirements for admission to Medical School and a tour of the medical school and hospital. Students will be guests of the Medical School for lunch.

Cars will be leaving for Denver at 8:30 a.m. from the north end of Olin Hall. Students who are interested in going and who have not signed up should immediately contact Dr. Eldon Hitchcock, chairman of the Faculty Premedical Committee.

Student Handbook

All leaders of campus organizations are reminded that information submitted for inclusion in the Student Handbook for the class of 1967 after Wednesday, May 15, may not be accepted. All campus organizations, committees, judicial bodies, and renegade groups are asked to describe their function and membership and to list their officers for next year.

Material should be turned in to the Kastall Center desk.

Honor Council

On April 25, the honor council recommended to the administration that a Colorado College student be suspended for a violation of the honor system.
